The 3d volume was compiled by the research office of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat under the guidance of the Party Literature Editorial Committee of the CPC Central Committee as were the 1st and 2d volumes published in 1984 and later. The Party Literature Research Center took part in the examination, approval, and revision of the volume.

1962 Chen Yun Speech Published

["Excerpt" of a speech made by Comrade Chen Yun on 8 February 1962 at a meeting of all cadres of Shaanxi Province attending the enlarged central work conference: "How We Can Understand More Correctly"]

[Text] Are there any methods which enable us to understand things more correctly? I suggest the following methods. Comrades may try and see whether they work or not.

Be comprehensive. We often take a one-sided approach to problems. For example, there is a cup on the table. People on that side of the table can see a cup with flowers but no handle, but people on this side of the table can see a cup with a handle but no flowers. People on both sides of the table can see only one face of the cup, not the whole picture of it. If they "exchange" what each has seen, they will know the cup better. We often say that we must seek truth from facts. In saying seek truth, we mean that we must gain a clear idea of the situation, and in talking of a realistic approach, we mean that we can work out correct policies on the basis of deepgoing research. For example, if we make an incorrect judgment of the enemy's situation in a war, we will certainly be defeated in battle. Moreover, if a doctor makes a wrong diagnosis of a patient's condition, he definitely cannot cure his illness and may even cause his death. So, how can we manage to find out the real situation? What we should do first is exchange views with other people often. In this way, one-sided views will gradually become comprehensive, vague ideas will become clear little by little, and divergent views will reach unanimity step by step. In dealing with a problem, if there are differences of opinion, what should we do? I think we may work on suppositions, look at the problem from different sides, even from the reverse side, and try to find out all possible conditions, and then we will be able to understand the problem in an all-round way. We commit errors just because we cannot observe objective laws in our work. However, those who make mistakes cannot be regarded as not acting according to facts at all, but they take their one-sided views as comprehensive ones. In formulating policies, leading organs should use at least 90 percent of the time to conduct investigation and study, and leave the rest of the time for discussions and making final decisions.

Let us make some comparisons. In looking into problems, formulating policies, and deciding on plans, we must compare different solutions. We must compare them with the present, the past, and the foreign. In doing so, we will gain a clearer idea of the situation and judge more accurately between right and wrong. Making comparisons repeatedly only does us good, not harm.

Thinking a lot about something. After making comparisons regarding a problem, we should not arrive at a decision right away but should turn the problem over in our minds again and again. In deciding on some problems, the decision may seem correct at the time, but it will be found to be incorrect or even absolutely wrong some time later. Therefore, we should not come to a decision in haste, but should have time to think a lot. It is better to think about it over a period of time and then make a decision. When working with Chairman Mao, I found he seldom decided on something right away. When we discussed problems with him, he used to say "hmm," but this did not mean that he consented to what we said.

HONGQI Publishes Introduction

[Article by the "Selected Works of Chen Yun" Editorial Group of the Research Center of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee: "Adhering to the Principle of Seeking Truth From Facts Is the Way to Success in All Undertakings -- Introducing the 'Selected Works of Chen Yun' -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Volume 3 of the "Selected Works of Chen Yun" has been published throughout the country. Comrade Chen Yun's works have been published on the schedule. Focusing on Volume 3 and in connection with Volumes 1 and 2 published in 1984, this article will introduce the main contents of his works.

The three volumes of the "Selected Works of Chen Yun" cover the 60 years from July 1926 to September 1985. From the 157 articles published, readers may see in certain important fields the glorious and tortuous road taken by the Chinese people in revolutionary struggle and socialist construction under the leadership of our party and their experience of success and failure.

The revolutionary struggle and construction led by our party can be divided into two major periods: the period of new democratic revolution in the first 28 years and the period of socialist revolution and socialist construction in the last 37 years. The Zunyi conference was a turning point from failure to success in the first period, and the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee was a turning point in the second period. Of all the articles included in the three volumes of the "Selected Works of Chen Yun," 53 were written in the first period, among them 46 after the Zunyi conference; and 104 were written in the second period, among them 29 around the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. As is known to all, all of Comrade Chen Yun's articles are permeated with the basic guiding thought of proceeding from reality and seeking truth from facts.

I

Our country is in a period of historical change. Over the past 7 years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, due to the correct guiding thought of our party and the unleashing of the initiative of the masses, we have made unrivalled achievements in socialist construction and the reform of the socialist economic structure.

Just as the CPC Central Committee has repeatedly stressed, China must take a road of building socialism with Chinese characteristics. This means we must proceed from China's realities, conform to objective laws, and adhere to socialism.

On this issue, Comrade Chen Yun time and again stressed that we must first have a good understanding of the "facts" in the course of proceeding from China's realities and seeking truth from facts. China has a population of 1 billion, 80 percent of them in rural areas, and limited arable land, so feeding the population is a big problem. Meanwhile, China's industry, science, and technology are backward and their distribution is uneven. We must formulate strategies, tactics, policies, and plans for China's socialist construction by proceeding from this reality. This is to say that we need to spend a long time, make great efforts, and overcome many difficulties to build socialism.

According to the historical conditions of their times, Marx and Engels predicted that after the proletariat wins victory in revolution, capitalism will be transformed to communism after a transitional period. The revolutionary teachers of the proletariat made this predication on the theoretical assumption that capitalist society has formed a high degree of social productive forces. However, during the period from the Russian October Revoluton to the victory of the Chinese revolution, all countries which took the socialist road, except for one or two countries, were underdeveloped or not so developed economically. The social productive forces in these countries were at a low level and their labor productivity was much lower than that in developed capitalist countries. As seen from the existing practical experience, a whole historical period will be needed to build socialism under backward economic conditions and to move to communism. Only by developing the social productive forces to a high degree in this historical period is it possible to fulfill the transition to communism.

In the historical period of socialism, social and economic development will go through several historical stages, from elementary to advanced stages. China's current social, economic, and cultural status indicates that China is still in an elementary stage of buiding socialism. We must consider this fact in carrying out construction and reforms.

The 12th National CPC Congress decided that from 1980 to the end of the century, China's total industrial and agricultural output value must be quadrupled and the living standard of the Chinese people must reach a better-off level. Over the past few years, Comrade Deng Xiaoping has repeatedly pointed out that from the 21st century, we will need 30 to 50 years to be close to the level of economically developed countries. We are convinced that the above target can be attained through our efforts. We would rather prepare for longer range targets in the whole historical period of socialism and the development process of all stages in the period. Of course, we must prepare for a slow process and strive for a fast one.

China has a poor material and technological foundation in its economy, a low level of social productive forces, and a large population, but our socialist system is advanced and the relations of production with socialist public ownership as its basis has many advantages. On this issue, we must also give play to our strong points, avoid weak points, and properly handle the contradictions between politics and the economy, between the relations of production and productive forces, and between the advanced and backward.

II

In the early 1950's, after we completed the work of economic recovery, the CPC Central Committee put forth the general line for the transitional period calling for gradually fulfilling socialist industrialization of the state and socialist transformation of agriculture, the handicraft industry, and capitalist industry and commerce. In formulating China's First 5-Year Plan for developing the national economy, we defined "a relatively long period" set in the general line as about 15 years. As is known to all; we were eager for success in implementing the plan and to actually spend only 3 years fulfilling the socialist transformation and basically fulfilling the public ownership of the means of production. This caused many problems. In his speech at the 8th CPC National Congress in 1956, Comrade Chen Yun pointed out various defects in China's rapidly established socialist economic structure. Afterwards, by summing up the practical experience of the masses and the correct views of the comrades within the party, he gave many important opinions on what socialist economic structure China should establish and how to respond to the situation. In short, his opinions can be summarized as the following.

On the structure of ownership and economic operation, Comrade Chen Yun raised the view of three "main bodies" and three "supplements," namely, state-run economic operations and collective-run economic operations are the main body of industry and commerce, and a certain amount of individual economic operation is their supplement; planned production is the main body of industry and commerce, and a certain amount of individual economic operation is their supplement; planned production is the main body of industrial and agricultural production, and liberal production according to market changes within the limits of state plan is its supplement; state market is the main body, and free market within a certain scope under the leadership of the state is its supplement. This view of Comrade Chen Yun about planning as the dominant aspect and liberalism as the supplement; and concentration as the dominant aspect and deconcentration as the supplement was written into the resolution of the 8th CPC National Congress. We all know that due to the emergence and development of the "leftist" guiding thought afterwards, his view was abandoned for a period of time. The "communist wind" during the people's commune movement and "cutting capitalist tails" during the Cultural Revolution totally obscured the necessary demarcation lines in the stage of socialist construction and seriously dampened the enthusiasm of the laboring people. In the course of bringing order out of chaos after smashing the "gang of four," Comrade Chen Yun wrote in 1979 an outline entitled "Plan and Market," in which he, integrating the theory of Marxism and Leninism with China's practice, reexpounded the view that planned economy and market regulation must exist in the whole socialist period with planned economy as the dominant aspect. He criticized two unhealthy tendencies in planned management, namely, unnecessary strictness and unnecessary relaxation, and the outmoded view of ignoring the law of value. The market regulation to which he referred means developing production merely according to the changes in supply and demand in the market and without a plan, namely, blind regulation. Comrade Deng Xiaoping also said last year that integrating planned economy with market regulation can better liberate the productive forces and speed up economic development. The practice of China's economic structural reform over the past few years has proved that in the elementary stage of building socialism, with the foundation of public ownership, the state can master the economic liveliness concerning the life of the masses, allow the existence of individual economy, state capitalist economy, and other economic patterns, and use market regulation as a supplement to the planned economy. This is advantageous to the development of China's planned commodity economy.

As early as in 1957, in view of the defects and problems in China's economic management system, Comrade Chen Yun personally drafted regulations for the State Council on improving the management system of three important departments, namely, industrial, commercial, and financial departments. The contents of the three regulations and many important opinions given by Comrade Chen Yun at the 8th CPC National Congress and after 1977 on reforming the economic management system can be summarized as the following 10 points: 1) Under the unified state plan, give more administrative power to local governments and enterprises according to local conditions. Local authorities must be given a certain amount of floating funds within a limit, so as to ensure the funds needed for the state's priority projects. 2) After assigning some of the powers of central authorities to lower levels, it is necessary to balance the work of the whole country. 3) Change the previous purchasing and marketing relationship of industrial and commercial enterprises; that is, change the previous method of factories making products on orders from commercial departments to the method of factories buying raw materials and marketing their products by themselves. Except for the products related to people's daily life, in which a state monopoly of purchasing and marketing should continue, other products should be purchased selectively. 4) The production of the handicraft industry and the production of sideline products in agriculture should be carried out in a deconcentrated way, and it is necessary to overcome blindly concentrated production proceeding from a one-sided view. 5) Commerce must be operated in a deconcentrated way; the state must relax market control. Except for products in short supply, which must be distributed according to state plans, the assigned purchase method from the upper to the lower levels must be abandoned for other products, and the free purchase method from the lower to the upper levels must be introduced and small free markets for native products must be set up in rural areas. 6) The state's price policy must be advantageous to production. Prices must be stable, but we cannot simply adopt the method of "setting unified prices" or "freezing prices." It is necessary to pay serious attention to the prices of grain and economic crops and the comparison between the two prices, and to maintain a certain proportion between grain and economic crops and industrial products, so as to help develop agricultural production and improve people's livelihood. 7) Improve planned management methods of the state and reasonably reduce mandatory planning targets. Variuos economic regulation means must be adopted in carrying out mandatory planning targets and guidance targets. 8) While bringing into play the role of market regulation and enlivening the economy, it is necessary to avoid the trend of abandoning state plans. State plans are an important means to ensure proportionate and harmonious economic development. 9) It is necessary to bring into full play the regulatory role of economic levers, but the state may, if necessary, adopt administrative measures to intervene in economic affairs. 10) Using foreign funds and bringing in new technology is an important policy. Under the condition of relying on our own efforts, we must make full use of favorable international conditions, borrow some money from foreign countries which will not cause losses, and bring in advantageous technology to speed up socialist modernization.

Comrade Chen Yun repeatedly stressed that the economic structural reform we are carrying out is a reform of the socialist economic structure and a self-improvement and self-development of the socialist system. How are we to understand this viewpoint?

We believe that it can be understood in this way: The reform of the socialist economic structure should naturally be suited to the inherent nature of the socialist system. Therefore, it is necessary to first of all study and sum up the conditions and experience in China and continuously reform and improve the system which has been proved unsuitable to the development of the productive forces. On this premise, we must learn the successful experience of other countries, including that of capitalist countries, which we can use. However, in applying the successful experience of other countries, we must not copy them indiscriminately and uncritically, but must integrate them with China's reality and digest and absorb them, so that they can become our own experiences.

Comrade Chen Yun also pointed out that as the current economic structural reform involves many fields, most cadres are not familiar with it, and many unpredictable problems will arise in the course of the reform. Therefore, we must make explorations and sum up experiences while carrying out practice. He used a vivid expression of "crossing the river by touching the rocks" to describe it.

III

As one of our party's principal leaders, Comrade Chen Yun has been in charge of economic work for a long time. But he was time and again labelled a "conservative rightist deviationist" after 1958. Practice has proved that he has always been a sober-minded and practical economist. In the several "leftist" waves, he always adhered to his scientific attitude and never gave up his practical views which had been formed after his thorough investigation and repeated pondering. This reflects the true qualities of a proletarian revolutionary who strictly upholds the principle of party spirit.

In his protracted leadership over economic work, Comrade Chen Yun put forth many suggestions which stood the test of practice and won the support of quite a few leading comrades. Most articles included in the "Selected Works of Chen Yun" are about economic work and have substantial contents. In addition to the above opinions on reform of the economic structure, many of his views on economic construction are familiar to the vast number of economic workers. We now make necessary explanations on that part of his views which is of practical guiding significance to the current work.

1. PROPORTIONATE DEVELOPMENT IS THE QUICKEST PACE. Comrade Chen Yun repeatedly said that proportionate economic activities and harmonious relationships will bring the fastest and best results. Although the economy can develop under the situation of partial imbalance and not affect the overall situation, it is impossible to achieve faster and better economic results. If there is a serious imbalance in most economic relationships, including that affecting the overall situation, the economy will retrogress and a crisis will arise. At the National Conference of Party Delegates held last year, Comrade Chen Yun once again pointed out: "In the final analysis, we must advance steadily in a planned and proportionate way. This is the fastest way. Otherwise, various troubles and runaway situations will arise. Setbacks will be unavoidable. The result is a slow progress. 'Haste makes waste.'"

Even a capitalist society requires that the economy develop in proportion. Once the main proportionate relationships are seriously imbalanced and break up, there will be a crisis and economic retrogression. What is different in a socialist country is that it can use the means of planning to swiftly and properly regulate economic activities and avoid a protracted and serious imbalance of proportionate relationships.

This is a possibility, not a fact. If we make mistakes or serious mistakes (the common mistakes are impetuosity, rashness, and excessively high targets), there will also be a crisis, or "setback" as people say. Therefore, in carrying out economic work, we must try to master the overall situation and find out problems, particularly the problem of several basic proportionate relationships. We must use the means of planned regulation, bring into play the role of various economic levers, and adopt various effective measures to harmonize all kinds of proportionate relationships. In general, we must not weaken planning work, but must meticulously improve and continuously strengthen planning work so as to ensure the healthy economic development. This is because ours is a planned commodity economy with socialist public ownership as its foundation, not a market economy which is totally regulated by the market.

Proportionate economic development also involves the correct handling of the relationship between priority projects and general projects. It is necessary to give prominence to some priority projects, but if we fail to pay attention to general projects, economic development cannot last long and priority projects will be a failure in the end. While giving prominence to priority projects, we must give consideration to general projects in a reasonable way. This is also a problem we must pay attention to from time to time.

2. REACHING AN OVERALL BALANCE IS THE BASIC WAY FOR BRINGING ABOUT PROPORTIONATE DEVELOPMENT. Comrade Chen Yun said that reaching a balance means proportionate development. If we fail to reach a balance, we cannot develop the economy in proportion. Overall balance includes the balance between all departments and parts in the national economy, as well as the balance within a department, an area, or a part. To guide economic activities throughout the country, we must first reach an overall balance. Their overall balance must be based on the balance in each part and must guide and restrict the balance in each part.

What are the main contents of the overall balance? In 1957, when talking about the problem that the size of construction must correspond to our national strength, Comrade Chen Yun spoke of the balance in three fields: the balance between financial income and expenditure, the balance between deposits and granting of credit loans, and the balance between the supply and demand of goods. Of the three balances, the most essential is the balance between the supply and demand of goods. The production and supply of consumer goods in daily life must be suited to social purchasing power. The production and supply of the means of production must be suited to industrial and agriculture production, circulation, and the size of fixed assets investment. These are the most important two balances in goods. Since we adopted the policy of opening up to the outside world, the balance of income and expenses in foreign exchange has become an important part of the overall balance. China has rapidly developed economic and cultural ties with other countries over the past few years, and the scale of the economic and cultural ties is becoming larger and larger. Paying attention to the balance of income and expenses in foreign exchange is an important issue.

While our country is still relatively poor, we must try to catch up with developed countries as soon as possible. For this reason, it is impossible for us to be well-off in all fields, and maintaining a balance under the circumstance of a shortage of goods is inevitable. Even if there is an ample supply of goods for a time, the situation may change, as China has a large population. Therefore, we must not be careless when we are well-off and have an ample supply of goods. Maintaining a delicate balance is unavoidable.

However, as Comrade Chen Yun has said repeatedly, we must not maintain a balance to such a tense degree as to break it. If so, simple reproduction cannot be guaranteed and the loss is too heavy. This situation appeared in the early 1960's. To avoid a balance to an excessively tense degree and the breakup of the balance, Comrade Chen Yun held that in maintaining an overall balance, we must maintain a balance according to the "short line," not the "long line." Of course, when weak points appear, we must do our best to improve the situation and to gradually harmonize the proportionate relationships. Using planning means and the method of overall balance to bring about proportionate economic development is an advantage of the socialist system.

3. WE MUST TAKE INTO CONSIDERATION BOTH ECONOMIC CONSTRUCTION AND PEOPLE'S LIVELIHOOD. This view stems from the characteristic that China has a large population and limited arable land, and Chinese people are poor, and it uses the historical experiences of China and other socialist countries for reference. In 1981, Comrade Chen Yun stressed: First, we must feed the 1 billion population; and second, we must carry out socialist construction. If we care for feeding only and eat up and use up everything, our country will be hopeless. While adequate food is ensured for people, the state must have remaining strength to carry out construction.

In economic activities, the relationship between construction and livelihood is reflected as the proportions of accumulated funds and consumer funds in the distribution of national income. The problem of controlling accumulation rate was first raised by Comrade Bo Yibo at the 8th CPC National Congress and was highly valued by all principal central leading comrades, who approved of an accumulation rate between 20 to 25 percent. Along with the subsequent development of the "leftist" guiding thought, the accumulation rate was often too high, exceeding 30 percent or even reaching 43 percent in some years. Facts have proved that the excessively high accumulation rate was due to the excessive targets for growth rate, the excessively large size of capital construction, and the excessively large scale of our construction. This cannot rapidly expand the ability to develop production, but will result in a serious imbalance in main fields, causing heavy losses.

The excessively large size of capital construction and the excessively large scale of construction is a "common disease." In the course of economic readjustment in the early years of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, we achieved initial results in curing this "common disease." However, in the last 2 years of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the "common disease" once again emerged together with a "complication," namely, the failure to control consumer funds. As a result of our failure to control both accumulation and consumption, there were inevitably "deficits" in the distribution of national income. This was the main reason for the sharp price hike. The deficit in the distribution of national income is a matter concerning the overall situation which should not be ignored. In view of this, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have adopted effective measures to deal with it and have achieved initial results. However, we must continue to carry out the measures so as to prevent the diseases from recurring.

4. WE MUST ADHERE TO TAKING AGRICULTURE AS THE FOUNDATION. This view, which was first raised by Comrade Mao Zedong, is also decided by China's real situation and corresponds with the basic tenets of Marxism-Leninism. In the 1950's, Comrade Chen Yun pointed out that agriculture is a problem concerning the food and clothing of the people of the whole country.

If economic construction is not based on this, it cannot be consolidated. The problem of agriculture is first of all the problem of grain. At that time, he put forth the thesis: "Stable grain output brings stability; shortage of grain results in a tight market." On the eve of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, in view of the serious damage to the agricultural production then, Comrade Chen Yun once again stressed that it was necessary to import some grain to ease peasants' burden. In this way, he hoped the peasants would feel relieved and resume and develop agricultural production. Regarding this problem, we suffered many setbacks, the main reason being that we had not found a way to give full play to peasants' initiative. Our economic structural reform over the past few years began in rural areas. In the course of the reform, we adopted many methods of developing agricultural production which were discovered by peasants in practice, and we instituted various responsibility systems with output linked to contract. All these plus the government move to greatly increase the prices of agricultural products have brought about rapid changes in China's rural areas and resulted in an economic boom throughout the country. However, some areas make mistakes in handling the relationships between agriculture and industry and between grain and economic crops. They put undue emphasis on the idea of "no industry, no wealth," and "no commerce, no brisk market," resulting in tendency to relax agricultural production, grain production in particular. In view of this, Comrade Chen Yun reminded us not to forget the truth of "no agriculture, no stability," and "no grain, no peaceful situation."

5. THE SCALE OF CONSTRUCTION MUST BE SUITED TO THE NATIONAL STRENGTH. At a central conference held in early 1957, Comrade Chen Yun pointed out: "The scale of our construction must be suited to the financial and material resources of our country, and whether they are suited or not is the demarcation line between a stable or unstable economy." In the speech, he also raised the view that it is easier to correct a conservative tendency than to correct a rash tendency; the view that financial income and expenditure and banking credit must be balanced with some surpluses; the view that in times of short supply of goods, it is necessary to first of all guarantee the production of daily necessities, then the production of the means of production, and finally capital construction; the view that the upgrading of people's purchasing power must be suited to the supply of consumer goods; and the view that the balance between the scale of capital construction and financial and material resources must be consistent and free from sudden rise and fall. In short, these views mean that we must carry out construction according to our own abilities. This guiding thought is applicable not only to capital construction, but also to all economic departments and to other departments in a certain sense. They are the guarantee of protracted, stable, and healthy development in economic and other causes. This thought was previously criticized and labelled as mechanical materialism which negates subjective initiative. But history has proved that it was not those criticized degenerating to mechanical materialism, but those criticizing others degenerating to the will for power doctrine.

In recent years, Comrade Chen Yun also said that we communists of course want to achieve faster and better results. The problem is whether we have the conditions to do so. Stressing conditions is not mechanical materialism, but dialectical materialism. If we have no conditions or our conditions are not ripe enough, we of course must do our best to create conditions and must not adopt a passive attitude. But creating conditions is also restricted by the material conditions at that time and our subjective ability.

In addition to the above five major problems, Comrade Chen Yun also gave many important opinions on the other fields of economic work. For example, he believed that in building new enterprises and tapping the potential of old enterprises and reforming and transforming old enterprises, the stress should be laid on the latter. Meanwhile, it is necessary to bring in new technology on the existing basis, by either filling in technological gaps of forming complete sets of equipment so as to march forward steadily. To digest and apply the new foreign technology, it is necessary to mainly rely on our existing technological forces, that is, millions of technological personnel and scientific research personnel trained by us since the founding of the PRC. Comrade Chen Yun stressed that properly carrying out commercial work and maintaining market prices is not only an economic problem, but also a political problem. He demanded that cadres, staff, and workers engaged in commercial work acquire a political viewpoint, a mass viewpoint, and a production viewpoint, and avoid and overcome exclusive concern about profession and the tendency of routinism. Due to the limited space of this article, we are not going to discuss this in detail. Discreet readers may find from Comrade Chen Yun's articles some things which are still useful today.

IV

Building a powerful party which is consolidated politically and organizationally is a task which all party members, leading party cadres in particular, must not ignore at any time. Without such a party which leads us in building socialism, our cause cannot advance and succeed.

When assuming the post of the organizational department director of the CPC Central Committee in Yanan, Comrade Chen Yun expounded in detail problems about the requirements of party members, party branches, the party's mass work, party discipline, the party's policy on cadres, and the study of theory. In volume 3 of the "Selected Works of Chen Yun," in view of the problems in the new historical period, Comrade Chen Yun put forth many important suggestions on the building of our party. The main content of his suggestions can be summarized into the following four areas:

1. IT IS NECESSARY TO GRASP IMPROVEMENT OF PARTY STYLE. Comrade Chen Yun was elected first secretary of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission at the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. In January, at the first meeting of the commission, he pointed out that the basic task of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission was to safeguard party regulations and law and to straighten out party style. In November 1981, he raised the important view that the problem of the style of a ruling party is an issue concerning the life and death of the party, and called for improving party style permanently. The practice over the past few years has proved that this view of Comrade Chen Yun struck home. In January 1982, he and other Standing Committee members of the CPC Central Committee [zhong yang chang wei 0022 1135 1603 1201] called for hitting hard at serious economic crimes. In June of the same year, he said that in the course of straightening out party style, it is necessary to pay attention to the phenomena of ignoring principles and confusing right and wrong, to correct the trend of fearing problems, struggles, and offending others, and not to isolate those who uphold principles. He believed that only by first forming within the party a general mood of distinguishing right and wrong will the party be united and have combat strength.

Consequently, the general social mood will improve, healthy tendencies will rise, and unhealthy tendencies will disappear. At the 2d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee held in October 1983, Comrade Chen Yun once again pointed out that since the party came to power throughout the country, the leadership power of central organs, grass-roots units, enterprises, institutions, and production teams have been in the hands of party members. Party members can use the various powers in their hands to seek private interests. Many of those who have committed corruption were party members or were protected by party members. If we fail to hit hard at those who seek private interests by taking advantage of their power and position, party style will be ruined and the party will become unpopular. At the national conference of party delegates in September 1985, Comrade Chen Yun also stressed that leading cadres at all levels, high-ranking leading cadres in particular, must pay serious attention to the prime issue of party style, and must set a good example in improving party style. Incumbent and retired high-ranking leading cadres must also set a good example in properly educating their sons and daughters. In his written speech at the Sixth Plenary Session of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, Comrade Chen Yun further pointed out that if we turn a blind eye to the evil tendencies which undermine socialist construction and corrupt the party style and general social mood, and if we let the tendencies developed unchecked, it is necessary, in addition to punishing those individuals who do evil, to affix responsibility to the CPC committees and discipline inspection committees of the units and areas concerned. From the above exposition of Comrade Chen Yun, we realize that straightening out party style is a prime issue which can ensure the smooth progress of our economic construction and economic structural reform.

2. WE MUST ADHERE TO DEMOCRATIC CENTRALISM. Whether or not acting upon the principle of democratic centralism is a major indication of normal or abnormal political life within the party, we had bitter lessons regarding this problem in the past. One of the important reasons for the continuous development of the "leftist" guiding thought after the founding of the PRC was the abnormal inner-party political life and that Comrade Mao Zedong had the final say on major problems under the increasingly weakened collective leadership. Thus, the erroneous guiding thought was hard to correct and became more and more serious, leading to the "Cultural Revolution" in the end. Comrade Chen Yun profoundly pointed out that the lack of democratic centralism within the party and the abolishment of collective leadership within the party was the main reason for the appearance of the "Cultural Revolution." He repeatedly said that there must be both democracy and centralism in inner-party political life, and different opinions and disputes should be allowed within the party. This is not a bad thing, as we can be more prudent and make fewer mistakes. What we fear is not if people give wrong opinions, but if people keep silent within the party. If no one speaks at a meeting, it will not be a good thing. Party organizations must allow comrades to raise different views, for this is a good phenomenon indicating a boom in our party's cause. Leading comrades in charge of important work must especially be modest. They must constantly heed different opinions and listen to opinions from the opposite side. Otherwise, people will not speak out and tell the truth and will only speak lies and flattery. This is very harmful to the party's cause. Comrade Chen Yun also expressed the hope that middle aged and young cadres who have newly joined the leading groups will act upon the principle of democratic centralism.

3. WE MUST PAY SERIOUS ATTENTION TO TRAINING AND PROMOTING MIDDLE-AGED AND YOUNG CADRES. In accordance with Comrade Deng Xiaoping's views on earnestly selecting successors, in 1981, Comrade Chen Yun called for immediately training and promoting thousands upon thousands of middle-aged and young cadres so as to take over from veteran cadres and build a cadre contingent consisting of old, middle aged, and young cadres who can serve modernization construction. Both these men believe that this is a strategic task determining the task of our party and state.

Comrade Chen Yun has all along stressed that the requirement for promoting and employing cadres is that they must have both ability and political integrity, and that the stress must be laid on political integrity. In the new historical period, the party raises more strict requirements on cadres. Being loyal, being unselfish, upholding principles, observing discipline, working hard, being skillful in integrating theory with practice, maintaining close links with the masses, carrying out criticism and self criticism -- all these remain the basic requirements which all party cadres must meet. However, modernization construction demands that all cadres, particularly leading cadres at all levels who are in the first line, have a higher cultural level, better professional knowledge, and management experience, and be in the prime of life and energetic, which many veteran cadres lack. Different historical periods have different tasks. New tasks call for establishing a new cadre contingent, which is a demand raised by history. In his two articles, "Promoting and Cultivating Middle-Aged and Young Cadres Is an Immediate Concern" and "Promoting Thousands Upon Thousands of Middle-aged and Young Cadres," Comrade Chen Yun repeatedly expounded the necessity and urgence of this problem, arousing the attention of the whole party.

We have made remarkable achievements in cultivating and promoting a great number of middle-aged and young cadres over the past few years. A great number of veteran cadres and party members have voluntarily withdrawn to the second line or retired in the interest of the whole party. At the National Conference of Party Delegates held in 1985, central leaders made proper arrangements in regard to leaders at different echelons. This is undoubtedly of far-reaching significance to China's socialist modernization.

4. WE MUST FIRMLY GRASP THE BUILDING OF SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION. This is an important matter which has a directly bearing on the improvement of party style and general social mood. Comrade Chen Yun and Comrade Deng Xiaoping, together with other central leading comrades, vigorously advocated building material and spiritual civilization simultaneously and combining and grasping the building of the two civilizations. Without good party style and general social mood, people will have no great ideals, no strong will, and no hard-working spirit, and the building of material civilization will be seriously disrupted, not be carried out smoothly as scheduled, and not be successful. Comrade Deng Xiaoping recently stressed that if we genuinely grasp the building of spiritual civilization, we will have hope. If we fail to firmly grasp the building of spiritual civilization, we will be hopeless. We all know that political and ideological damage caused to our party by the "Cultural Revolution" are more serious than organizational damage, for the "Cultural Revolution" are more serious than organizational damage, for the "Cultural Revolution" confused people's ideas and corrupted their style. Moreover, in the course of enlivening the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world, we relaxed ideological and political work for a time.

As a result, decadent bourgeois ideas and style broke through when we were off guard, and some abominable behavior of feudal society revived to corrode our party's body and corrupt our party style. Comrade Chen Yun seriously pointed out at a meeting: If we fail to build socialist spiritual civilization simultaneously, the building of material civilization will deviate from the correct path. Worse, it may even deviate from socialist and communist ideals, which is very dangerous. Comrade Deng Xiaoping also warned the whole party that China must build modernization, and must not carry out liberalism and take the road of Western capitalism. These are important opinions and instructions.

V

Those who are familiar with Comrade Chen Yun and his works all strongly feel that Comrade Chen Yun is very practical in ever ing. He adheres to proceeding from reality in thinking over problems and making decisions. Comrade Chen Yun is one of those leaders who have all along upheld the principle of seeking truth from facts among the veteran proletarian revolutionary of our party. From Cormade Chen Yun's revolutionary practice over the past 60 years, we can see that it was precisely due to his adherence to seeking truth from facts that he made fewer mistakes and achieved relatively better results in fulfilling all complicated and arduous tasks assigned by the party.

Seeking truth from facts, which is an ideological principle the whole party must follow, is the most powerful weapon for transforming the objective world. Its basic characteristic is the correspondence between the subjective world of human beings with the objective world. To genuinely and thoroughly seek truth from facts, we must first understand the basic tenets of Marxism, and master correct standpoints, viewpoints, and methods to sum up both positive and negative experience in our work, so that our knowledge can move from partial to overall and from perceptual to rational, and so we can understand the essence and objective laws of things. We have also seen from historical experiences that to adhere to seeking truth from facts, we must also have a high degree of party spirit, set an objective of wholeheartedly serving the people, guard against arrogance after winning victories, be modest and prudent, be good at heeding the opinions from the masses, and carry out democratic centralism heart and soul. It is unimaginable that one who knows nothing about the theory of Marxism-Leninism, has no practical experiences, and lacks strong party spirit would adhere to principle of seeking truth from facts and transform the objective world successfully.

As early as the early 1940's, after following Comrade Mao Zedong in the study of Marxist philosophy and summing up experiences of the protracted revolutionary struggle in Yenan, Comrade Chen Yun put forth the view of "not following all instructions of the higher leadership, not copying books, and adhering to facts," which called for deep thought. "Blindly following instructions of higher leadership and copying books" was the cause for the third "leftist" line within the party during the second civil course. Of course, "not following instructions of higher leadership" does not mean that we can refuse to implement resolutions collectively made by the higher leadership, and not copying books" does not mean that we can refuse to read books of Marx and Lenin or even abandon the basic tenets of Marxism-Leninism. This should not be misunderstood.

At that time, Comrade Chen Yun used the words of "not following all instructions of higher leadership, not copying books, and adhering to facts" to express the dialectical materialist attitude which we communists must adopt. Afterwards, he himself adhered to the words in his work. In the 1950's, he summarized the way to know the truth as "completely, comparatively, and repeatedly." He reexplained and developed this idea after the serious setbacks of the "great leap forward" and the people's commune movement. He told us that we must not view problems in a lopsided way, but must view problems in an overall way so as to avoid onesidedness. While studying problems, formulating policies, decisions, and plans, we must make comparisons between the past and present and between China and other countries, and must not get into a corner. On some complicated problems, in addition to having a complete understanding and making comparisons in many fields, we must make decisions after turning the matter over again and again and must not make hasty decisions. The words "completely, comparatively, and repeatedly" are the essence of dialectical materialism.

After decades of practice, the above words of Comrade Chen Yun have been proved simple to understand and practicable. In knowing things, we always proceed from facts and take the road of practice-knowledge-practice again-knowledge again, strive to have complete knowledge, make more comparisons, and think over and over. Only thus can we gradually reach the truth. It is thus clearly seen that these words of Comrade Chen Yun are the unity of materialism and dialectics. Only by adopting a practical attitude and strictly adhering to dialectical materialist theory on knowledge and methodology can we truly seek truth from facts.

Comrade Chen Yun has said more than once that we must spend more than 90 percent of our time conducting investigations and research and less than 10 percent of our time making decisions. When considering an important problem, he often obtains basic information first and then holds various meetings to solicit opinions. In the course of investigation and research, he always pays special attention to opinions different from his ideas. If no different views are aired at meetings, he tries to guide people to consider the problem from the opposite side. After listening to various positive and negative opinions, he makes a comparison and turns the matter over in his mind again and again, and then makes a decision. When studying the three volumes of the works of Chen Yun, the foremost and essential thing is to learn his scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts and his way of thinking and working.

Comrade Chen Yun has personally examined and read all the volumes of the "Selected Works of Chen Yun." He requested that no alteration be made in compiling and selecting his articles so as to avoid unauthenticity and that even wrong parts should not be revised. He repeatedly said that every effort should be made not to magnify his merits in explaining and introducing his articles. We must attribute all our achievements first to the masses, then to the party, and finally to individuals. As for the mistakes we have made, we must have the courage to correct them and draw lessons. Comrades taking part in the editing of the book were deeply moved by this practical spirit and modest attitude of Comrade Chen Yun.

People may find in the three volumes that there are no articles written by Comrade Chen Yun in the 15 years from March 1962 to March 1977. This was the period in which his correct ideas were negated and criticized and he was basically deprived of his right to speak.

During this period, he upheld truth, strictly observed party discipline, refused to be contaminated by evil influences, and devoted himself to the exploration of truth. After the smashing of the "gang of four," he immediately dedicated his heart and efforts to the party's cause and put forth many valuable ideas and opinions on key and important issues. This noble character of maintaining a strong party spirit under a difficult situation is shared by many veteran protetarian revolutionaries. This character will pass from generation to generation and educate all communists.

FORUM ON PARTY RECTIFICATION HELD IN HUNAN

[Excerpts] Changsha, 20 Jun (XINHUA) -- After sponsoring the two forums in Zhengzhou and Nanjing in mid- and late May on the work of party rectification in 10 provinces and 1 municipality in northern China and in the 5 provinces and 1 municipality along China's coast, the Central Party Rectification Guidance Commission sponsored another forum in Changsha in early June on the work of party rectification in the 7 provinces and autonomous regions in south China. The forum pointed out: The current party rectification is a new starting point for development party building in the new period and an important step in strictly running the party. After fulfilling their task in conducting party rectification at the township level, various provinces and autonomous regions in south China must begin to carry out party rectification at the village level on the basis of the local situation. At the same time, they must consolidate and develop their achievements in party rectification in various units at and above the county level and carry out their work well in party rectification from beginning to end. After party rectification, they must continue to strengthen party building and strictly run the party, to overcome negative factors, and to strengthen the party's militancy in order to ensure healthy developments in carrying out reforms and developing the economy.

Attending the forum were party committee secretaries in charge of party rectification in Hunan, Hubei, Jiangxi Guangxi, Sichuan, Yunnan, and Guizhou.

The forum pointed out: Township enterprises are something new that have cropped up in the course of carrying out rural reforms. They are of great strategic significance in developing rural economy. In areas where economy is less developed, we must build township enterprises even move vigorously.

The forum also discussed issues regarding party building in the new period. It believed that we must pay full attention to rectifying party style, overcoming the negative factors in the party, and continuing to strengthen the party organizations either in the course of conducting party rectification or afterward.

At the same time, the Central party Rectification Guidance Commission also held a forum in Lanzhou on the work of party rectification in areas inhabited by people of minority nationalities and in remote areas. The Central Party Rectification Guidance Commission has now finished covening the four forums of party committee secretaries in charge of party rectification in various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly uder the central authority. These forums on party rectification were held with central authority approval.

LU DONG ON INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION, DEVELOPMENT

[Article by Lu Dong, minister of State Economic Commission: "Persist in Carrying out Reforms, Advance to New Victories in Modernization" -- capitialized passages published in boldface]

[Text] The Sixth 5-Year Plan period was an important one for our industrial production after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee decided to shift the focus of the work of the whold party to economic construction. Under the guidance of the policy of readjusting, restructuring, consolidating and improving the national economy and the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, and through the effort of hundreds of millions of all state and collective workers and other employees, we have opened up the most prosperous situation in economic development since the founding of the People's Republic. Over the past 5 years, China's total industrial output value (including rural industries) has increased at an average annual growth rate of 12 percent. This rate is roughly the same as that of the First 5-Year Plan period, higher than that of the other plan periods and higher than that of many countries in the corresponding period.

The successful fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan is the result of the correct leadership of our party and of the efforts made by everyone in the country. In arranging economic work around the central task of bringing about better economic results, we have initially probed some work methods.

ENHANCING THE QUALITY OF ENTERPRISES IN ORDER TO LAY A GOOD FOUNDATION. By the end of 1985, nearly 50,000 state-run enterprises of industry, transport, commerce, land reclamation and the building industry which were listed in the state plan for enterprise consolidation were by and large checked and accepted by the government. This means that we successfully fulfilled the talk of straightening out all existing enterprises before 1985. Through consolidation, the basis of enterprises has become more firm than before and their managerial systems in various aspects have been improved. In addition, the succession of the new to the old for their leading bodies has been completed; more than 80 percent of cadres appointed to these leading bodies are at the level of university or college education and most of them are in their forties.

PERSISTING IN CARRYING OUT REFORMS SO AS TO INSTILL GREATER VITALITY INTO THE ENTERPRISE. Over the past few years, we have conducted a series of experiments to look into how to invigorate enterprises. Generally speaking, they are: Proceeding from readjusting the distribution relationship between the state, the enterprises and the worker, we have extended decision-making power to enterprises in production and management; starting with invigorating collective enterprises and small state enterprises, we have also done so in large and medium-sized enterprises; beginning with introducing the economic responsibility system inside enterprises, we have also made efforts to improve external conditions for enterprises, combining overall reforms with enterprise management reforms.

PROMOTING TECHNOLOGICAL ADVANCES TO TRANSFORM EXISTING ENTERPRISES. Taking the replacement of products as the key, over the past few years we have linked up technological development, imports, and transformation and done all these at one go, not bit by bit as before.

In the past 5 years we have made an investment of over 140 billion yuan in technological transformation, with more than 200,000 projects transformed. Agreements for importing 3,000 technological projects in the last 3 years of the Sixth 5-Year Plan which were sanctioned by the State Council have been concluded; when we add the projects imported by local authorities and departments, the total comes to 14,000. Some of these projects have been completed and commissioned. Thanks to technological transformation, during the Sixth 5-Year Plan steel-producing capacity increased by 12 million tons, the extracting capacity of the coal which is supplied in a unified way by 36.4 million tons, the capacity of shipping coal from Shanxi Province to other provinces by 30 million tons, the handling capacity of berths grew by 13 million tons, and the capacity of saving energy is equivalent to 25 million tons of coal. Through technological development, import and transformation, the level of our country's industrial technology has been elevated to a new high.

STRENGTHENING CONTROL OF MACROECONOMIC ACTIVITIES AND IMPROVE COORDINATION

Over the past few years, local economic commissions have consistently paid equal attention to both economic growth rate and economic efficiency, both quantity and quality, and both production and circulation, and adopted a number of measures with the cooperation of the departments concerned. These measures mainly included the formulation and execution of annual plans, making energy production dovetail with transport, studying and coordinating the relationship between supply and demand, supporting and developing lateral economic ties by bank loans, readjusting the structure of production by combining war industry with its civil counterpart, expanding production of daily consumer goods and promoting exports, improving the quality of products, issuing production permits and strengthening supervision of the masses, encouraging the conservation and better use of energy by strengthening examination and public appraisal, adopting more measures for safety production and management of equipment, and encouraging enterprises to promote the growth rate of production and to increase tax delivery and profits simultaneously so as to improve the country's financial situation.

STRENGTHENING POLITICAL AND IDEOLOGICAL WORK AS WELL AS TECHNICAL TRAINING AMONG WORKERS AND OTHER EMPLOYEES

Over the past few years we have paid attention to political and ideological work among workers and other employees and carried out the education of "encouraging them to foster lofty ideals and moral integrity, to become educated and cultivate a strong sense of discipline" in coordination with other departments concerned. Meanwhile, all localities and departments also helped young workers, who account for two-thirds of the total of our country's workers, make up what they had missed in education and technical training, and had the director (or manager) of big and medium-sized enterprises trained through unified examinations. In addition to this, we have set up 92 institutes for training cadres engaged in economic management and 9 enterprise management training centres. These endeavours have greatly enhanced the political quality of vast numbers of cadres and workers as well as their educational level and technical competence.

The successes scored in the past 5 years are obvious. Nevertheless, we still face many problems in our work. When listening to work reports early this year, leading cadres of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat and the State Council called on us to build a socialist system of economic management with Chinese characteristics. There is still a long way to go to meet this requirement. Therefore, we must persist in reform and improve management through new explorations and repeated practice so as to satisfy the needs of economic development.

The Seventh 5-Year Plan covers a crucial period in which we must lay a good foundation for the revitalization of the economy in the 1990's. During this period, the total value of industrial output should increase by an average of 7.5 percent (or 7 percent if rural industries are included). This growth rate is slightly lower than that achieved during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, but still it will not be an easy job. During the next 5 years, we should create better conditions for the reform, lay a foundation for further economic development, and continue to raise the people's living standards through increased production. There are still various kinds of contradictions ahead of us. To deal with these contradictions, we must first and foremost greatly improve the economic performance of enterprises and enhance the capacity to earn foreign exchange through exports. At present, the key to the two problems lies in raising the quality of enterprises and fully tapping their huge potential. We must see that under the new situation of reform, opening up and invigoration, great changes have taken place both inside and outside enterprises. Enterprises are gradually freeing themselves from the fetters of traditional, old management patterns and are turning themselves into relatively independent economic entities having full management authority and full responsibility for their own profits and losses. With the change in the position and role of enterprises as well as in their technological level and production due to import of advanced foreign technology and technological transformation, we must adopt corresponding management methods and systems.

During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the management of enterprises has somewhat improved through overall consolidation and initial reforms. However, the management level of enterprises as a whole in the country is still low. The major problems in this aspect are poor quality of products, high consumption of materials, and low economic efficiency. Such problems have resulted from the backwardness of both technology and management. Our comrades can clearly see the backwardness of our technology, but they fail to see the backwardness of our management. It is therefore necessary to call on vast numbers of our cadres and worker to work hard so as to raise our enterprise management to a new level.

According to the real state of our enterprises, what we should do in strengthening the work of enterprise management during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is: First, we must complete the reform of the enterprise leadership system. By summing up experiences in experiment units, we must extensively introduce the system under which the director (or manager) assumes full responsibility. Second, we must perfect the economic responsibility system and strengthen political and ideological work. Third, we must pay equal attention to technology and management so as to continuously raise an enterprise's self-regulation ability. All trades should arrange manufacture of their major products in accordance with international standards and in 1990, the properties and quality of the greater part of their products should attain the level of those produced in the developed countries in the late 1970's or early 1980's. Over two-thirds of industrial output value and state revenue set in the Seventh 5-Year Plan should be achieved by our existing enterprises.

To achieve this, we must do three important things:

1. Raise the quality of products and lower consumption of materials.

Concretely speaking, a) we must gradually exert overall control over the quality of products in a planned way and link the quality index with the political honor and material gains of workers as well as with their monetary reward; b) the state will strengthen supervision over the quality of industrial products. A recent sample investigation of product quality has made a great impact on enterprises. This shows that this is an effective method; c) it is necessary to institute an effective system for energy saving; d) industrial enterprises will be encouraged and rewarded for low consumption of raw and semi-finished materials and energy and will be fined for excessive consumption; e) the work of choosing the advanced in improving the quality of products and saving energy through public appraisal will continue.

2. REFORMING THE LEADERSHIP SYSTEM OF ENTERPRISES AND MAKING LEADING BODIES RELATIVELY STABLE.

With the institution of the system in which directors assume full responsibility, there are more requirements for them than before. They must adopt an overall point of view and correctly handle the relationship of interests between the state, the enterprise, and the worker. They must have a long-term point of view and know to link immediate interests with the long-term interests. They must have correct guiding ideas for management, and good qualifications and professional competence. They must have a good grasp of production and management and know how to make good policy decisions. They must have good work style and know how to exploit the collective wisdom and unite with all the forces that can be united in work. They must handle matters impartially and take the lead in checking all kinds of unhealthy tendencies.

3. STRENGTHENING POLITICAL AND IDEOLOGICAL WORK AND PAYING ATTENTION TO THE BUILDING OF THE RANKS OF WORKERS AND OTHER EMPLOYEES.

At the National Conference of Party Delegates, quite a few of the central leading comrades stressed most the importance of strengthening the building of spiritual civilization and doing a good job of political and ideological work. With regard to this problem, we must do two things in earnest: First, we must strengthen political and ideological work. On the one hand, we must conduct thoroughgoing and painstaking ideological work and spark the great enthusiasm of workers and other employees with the lofty ideals of communism; on the other, we must correctly implement the party's policies, be concerned with the well-being of the masses, and promptly solve practical problems appearing in study, work and the lives of workers and other employees. Only by linking the two aspects will it be possible to fully exploit political and ideological work. Second, we must strengthen the building up of the party ideologically and organizationally. The views of the masses reflect that the exemplary vanguard role of the communists and the role of the party branch as a powerful fighting force have been becoming weak. We must take effective measures to strengthen them.

The Seventh 5-Year Plan covers an important period in which we are laying the foundation for achieving the grand goal of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production and also an important period in which we are exploring and building a socialist economic structure with Chinese characteristics. The Seventh 5-Year Plan ratified by the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC has drawn up a blueprint for our economic construction.

Under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee, we should go all out without delay to improve the work style of leading organs, go deep into the realities of life to serve the grass roots, and mobilize and rely on the people of the whole country to work together with one heart and to pool their wisdom and strength in the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan so as to advance to new victories in our four modernizations.

CHEN MUHUA ON BANK SUPPORT FOR FOREIGN TRADE

HK190915 Beijing GUOJI SHANGBAO in Chinese 29 May 86 p 1

[Report: "To Energetically Support Foreign Trade Is an Important Task of the Bank -- Chen Muhua Answers GUOJI SHANGBAO Reporters' Questions"]

[Text] Our reporters have recently interviewed Chen Muhua, state councillor and concurrently president of the Bank of China on the question of how banks should support foreign trade to expand import and export trade. Chen Muhua has answered some of the questions raised by our reporters.

Question: What do you think of the present situation concerning the import and export trade of our country?

Answer: The situation concerning our foreign trade in the first few months of this year is good and there has been a tendency of continued growth. The total foreign trade volume in the first quarter of this year increased by 13.9 percent as compared with that in the corresponding period of last year, accomplishing 22.5 percent of the annual plan. This increase surpassed the increase reached by us in the past. If this momentum can be maintained, there will be no problem in accomplishing our annual export plan. Because of the drop of oil prices on the international market and the readjustment of the purchasing prices of some of the commodities to be exported, our foreign trade now has a bigger demand for renminbi credit funds. As a result, there is great pressure on the work of the banks because when exporting the same amount of commodities, the banks need to provide more funds than before. When there is a shortage of funds in the various aspects of our economic construction, this appears to be a difficult task. However, our guiding ideology is clear, that is to give top priority to supporting the production and purchase of the commodities to be exported on the premise of exercising sufficient macroscopic financial control. We have been doing our work according to this guiding ideology. And in the future, we will continue to do our work according to this guiding ideology.

Question: What is the present situation concerning the bank funds which are used for supporting the export trade?

Answer: To support the reasonable need of funds for producing and purchasing the commodities to be exported has always been an important aspect of our banks' provision of credit funds. By the end of April of this year, the loans provided to the foreign-trade oriented enterprises had reached 56.2 billion yuan, accounting for over 20 percent of the total amount of commercial loans. Last year, when we tightened the money market and controlled the scope of credit, the bank loans to foreign trade still increased by 17.4 billion yuan, an increase of 32.8 percent, which far surpassed the increase rate of 22.1 percent for all bank loans. In the first 4 months of this year, the bank loans to foreign trade increased by 3.2 billion yuan whereas in the corresponding period of last year, the banks recovered one billion yuan of loans.

From this, we can see that the people's bank and other specialized banks have greatly supported the foreign trade loans with funds. And we can say that the banks have basically met the reasonable demand for funds needed to expand the import and export trade.

Question: Do the banks have any more plans to support foreign trade?

Answer: To develop foreign trade is the common task of the banks and the foreign trade department, so both sides should strengthen their cooperation and jointly promote our foreign trade. Besides supporting the production and purchase of the commodities to be exported with funds, the banks should also provide good services to foreign trade and strengthen credit supervision. At present, the banks' method for settling accounts and delivering funds is still relatively backward, and the speed of settling accounts is slow. All these things do not conform with the needs of the development of foreign trade. The Bank of China, which is responsible for all these, is now taking measures to improve its work, and trying to adopt electronic technology, strengthen voucher delivery, increase the speed of receiving remittance, improve the service quality and provide better services. While providing good services, banks should also strengthen credit supervision. To strengthen credit supervision is also a kind of service. Credit supervision consists of both the supervision of receiving remittance and the settling of the accounts concerning remittance, and credit restrictions on purchasing commodities at higher prices and purchasing the commodities that are overstocked or cannot be sold well so as to raise the management standard of foreign trade and increase the economic results of foreign trade.

As far as the foreign trade units are concerned, to make a good use of limited funds is also an important subject. All the foreign trade units should carry out research and improve their work. Last year, the value of the stored commodities in foreign trade increased by over 7 billion yuan. Because of the increase of the remittance with long-term collection periods in foreign trade, more funds for settling accounts have been used. However, the proportion of the funds used for settling accounts is too big now, with an overspending of several billion yuan. The foreign trade units should raise their management standard to improve this situation. First of all, the foreign trade units should purchase the commodities which are sold well and badly needed and the commodities which can create more foreign exchange, and try to reduce and stop the purchase of commodities whose qualities are poor and whose prices are high, and which cannot create foreign exchange. In the meantime, the foreign trade units should accelerate the circulation of funds, improve the efficiency of using funds and realize quick purchasing and quick selling so as to make the best use of the funds. I believe that through the cooperation of both sides, our country's foreign trade will certainly be promoted.

Question: How will the reform of the financial structure cooperate with the reform of the foreign trade structure?

Answer: The reform of the financial structure and the reform of the foreign trade structure are two important aspects of the reform of the economic structure. The two reforms are well under way at present. Though they have different emphasis, the two reforms are closely linked with each other. The activities of the funds of the foreign trade are concerned with the entire financial system, and the various specialized banks and insurance companies all have close links with the foreign trade. What is more, the various links of foreign trade have relations with the various organs of the financial system.

From developing the bases for foreign trade commodities to the production of the industrial and agricultural products to be exported to the supply and transport of the commodities to be exported, and from the purchase of the commodities to be exported, the foreign trade department has business relations not only with the Bank of China, but also with the People's Construction Bank, the Industrial and Commercial Bank of China, the Agricultural Bank of China and insurance companies. All these procedures cannot be accomplished by one financial institution and no procedures can be replaced by any other. Therefore, all the institutions of the financial system must actively cooperate with the reform of the foreign trade structure and the development of foreign trade business, actively support and provide services for foreign trade and do the work of supervision well under the unified leadership and management of the central bank.

BAN YUE TAN REVIEWS ECONOMIC SITUATION

HK260417 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 11, 10 Jun 86 pp 8-10

[Article by BAN YUE TAN Economic editorial office: "Economic Situation in the First 5 Months of This Year"]

[Text] During the first 5 months of this year, China's economic development continued to maintain its momentum of coordinated and stable growth. A personage in the economic field has described economic development of the first few months of this year as a summer scene of Xi Hu: "Lotus leaves linking up with the sky are luxuriantly green, whereas lotuses upon which the sun shines are particularly red."

Agriculture is the foundation of the national economy. On the basis of a good harvest last year, agricultural departments have rationally readjusted the acreage under grain, and changed the situation of continuous decrease of acreage over the past few years. This year's summer harvest of grain is expected to be good, except for two or three provinces. With regard to the work of purchasing grain based on contracts, the confirmed amount of grain purchase has accounted for 99 percent of the purchase quotas fixed by the state in the contracts. In most regions, grain purchase quotas have been assigned to peasant households. There is a more rational distribution of the new vital force of the rural commodity economy - 3 million specialized households throughout the country working in the fields of planting, industry, animal husbandry, catering trade, service trade, transportation, building construction, and so on. In the meantime, there is a new trend of joint operation by specialized households.

Industrial production is a main source of financial revenue of the state. During the first 4 months the growth rate of the total industrial output value was 4.2 percent higher than last year. Last year's growth rate was a high as 23.3 percent. Such a growth rate was not low. According to statistics issued monthly, there is a proper ratio between light and heavy industries, between processing industry and energy, communications and transporation, and between power production and industrial and agricultural production. All this shows that the present growth rate is normal.

Energy production is encouraging. In the past, the growth of electric energy production was always 50 percent lower than that of total industrial output value. However, the monthly growth rate of electric energy production has exceeded that of total industrial output value since the beginning of this year.

A buyers' market for coal has continued to occur in some localities. Coal mines under unified control by the state have continued to overfulfill their production quotas. The growth rate of some light industrial products is gratifying. Production output of watches, color television sets, recorders, cameras, electric fans and refrigerators was 10 to 60 percent higher than the same period last year. During the next sugarcane reaping season, production output of sugar is expected to exceed 5 million tons, 70 tons higher than last season, which was a record output since the founding of new China. During the first 4 months of this year, production output of beer was close to 1 million tons, an increase of 35.8 percent over same period last year. Production output of canned food, dairy products and other things also increased by a big margin. The output of pure cotton cloth, which had been unsalable over the past few years, increased considerably. Production output of silk, silk knit goods, woolen goods, wool, etc., went up by a larger margin. There was considerable growth in the production output of steel products, wood, cement and plate glass in the raw and processed materials industry, as well as generating facilities, precision machine tools, and other things in the machine building industry.

According to the instructions issued by the Central authorities, the growth of investment in capital construction has begun to slow down. The number of new capital construction projects was 1,228 less than the same period of last year. During the first 4 months of this year, the investment amount of capital construction projects by units under ownership by the people only increased by 1.3 billion yuan over same period of last year. The growth rate was under two figures. This rarely happened in recent years. It is precisely because of this that the progress of 190 key construction projects of the state has been accelerated. Conditions have existed in some departments in charge of communications and transporation, goods and materials, facility manufacturing and so on, and regions concerned to give the green light to these key construction projects.

A stable market and the increase of commodities kept in stock are other characteristics of this year's economic situation. During the first 5 months of this year, total retail turnover of social commodities of the whole country increased by about 10 percent over same period last year. Judging from the retail market situation in April and May, we know that the sale volume of vegatable oil, sugar, cigarettes, pork, eggs and other nonstaple food increased, and that the supply of these good was better than previous years. Since the start of the free market in nonstaple food, the margin of increase of retail price index has gradually dropped month by month. In April and May, pork and fresh eggs sold well. There was a downward trend in their retail market price. In Hebei, Jiangsu, Shandong, Sichuan and other provinces where the supply was ample, the retail price of pork and fresh eggs was 10 to 20 fen per jin lower than the same period last year. In some regions, their price returned to the level before the start of the free market.

The reserve of products and commodities has also markedly increased since this year. Of 21 kinds of main good and materials, the reserve of 16 kinds increased. There were only 5 kinds of goods and materials which had dropped in their reserve. Although there was a fairly large quantity of unsalable commodities, the supply of high quality and famous-brand commodities was still insufficient.

A new development has also been achieved in foreign trade. According to statistics, the export volume of the first 4 months of this year was 9.5 percent higher than same period of last year. The growth of imports was higher than that of exports. However, in import commodities, the increase in the means of production was higher than that of exports. However, in import commodities, the increase in the means of production was higher than that of the means of subsistence. The situation of incomes and expenditure in foreign exchange in various fields other than trading was also good.

Financial revenue increased and withdrawal of currency from circulation continue to improve. From January to April, financial revenue at home, based on comparative approach of calculation, increased by 7.1 percent over the same period of last year. Revenue far exceed expenditures. The amount of currency withdrawn from circulation increased by some 7 billion yuan or so over the same period last year. By the end of April, saving deposits of urban and rural residents reached 182.3 billion yuan, an increased of 20.1 billion yuan over early this year.

The overall economic situation in our country has been good since this year. However, some problems have occurred. The main problem is that in some regions, the development of industrial production is not even, and its economic results are not satisfactory. From January to April, profits and tax of industrial enterprises dropped. The profit tax they turned over to the state also decreased. Their material consumption and production costs have gone up, whereas their product quality has declined. They have suffered from more losses incurred in more fields. The main reasons for these problems are: in some localities, enterprises have slackened their efforts to grasp ideological and political work for the workers and staff members. Their sense of economic responsibility has been weakened. The implementation of the responsibility system of factory managers is not effective enough. The line of demarcation has not yet been clearly drawn in the process of overcoming unhealthy trends. Enterprises are short of circulating funds. At present, efforts are being made to solve these problems.

With the continuous improvement and implementation of measures for reform in cities, and sufficient progress in ideological and political work, we believe that our industrial production and economic situation will further develop in the months to come. According to an estimate made by some experts, the growth rate of total industrial output value of our country will be faster during the latter half of this year. The growth rate of the total industrial output value of the whole year will be as high as about 8 percent.

RENMIN RIBAO ON ENLIVENING COLLECTIVE ENTERPRISES

[Text] The third national workers' congress of light industrial collective enterprises opened in Beijing yesterday. This is a grand gathering of China's light industrial collective enterprises, and we wish it success.

The light industrial collective enterprises have been developing on the basis of the cooperative transformation of China's handicraft industry. Under the influence of the "leftist" guiding thought, the collective economy of light industry developed slowly for a long time. Since the 3d Plenum of the 11th CPC Central Committee, after bringing order out of chaos, we have gradually corrected some wrong ideas on collective economy.

"The decision of the CPC Central Committee on reform of the economic structure" further stated: "The collective economy is an important component of the socialist economy, and we can give the collectives a free hand in running enterprises in many areas of production and construction." The party's policy of carrying out reforms and enlivening the economy has vigorously promoted the development of the light industrial collective economy.

Adhering to reform is the only way to develop the light industrial economy. Over the past few years, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have formulated and issued a series of policies on supporting and developing collective economy, but these policies have been implemented to different extents in different areas. Some comrades still harbor confused ideas on the nature, characteristics, position, and role of collective economy, and treat developing collective economy as an expedient. Some areas and departments even went so far as to violate policies, transfer resources without compensation, and appropriate property of collective enterpries. They wilfully encroached upon the decision-making power that enterprises should have in business operation, thus seriously dampening the enthusiasm of staff, workers, and cadres of collective enterprises. The only way to enliven light industrial collective economy is to adhere to reform and to earnestly implement the relevant policies of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council.

An important content of the reform of light industrial collective enterprises during the Seventh 5-Year Plan is to run enterprises in strict accordance with the nature and characteristics of collective economy. Over the past few years, the light industrial collective enterprises have learned the experiences of the rural responsibility system with contract linked to output, and more than 80 percent of them have instituted various contract responsibility systems. In the furure, we must gradually and closely integrate this reform with the reforms in other aspects of the enterprise management system and factory manager responsibility system, and make it a system. We must strengthen democratic management, adhere to the principle of distribution according to one's work, and gradually carry out pricing reform to change the previous phenomenon of restrictions on the expansion of varieties and the upgrading of the quality of small commodities due to the excessively strict price control system. It is necessary to continue the measures and methods of reform that have been proven effective in practice. Powers that should be assigned to collective enterprises must be assigned to them, and must not be recovered under any excuse. We must correctly handle the relationship between the state exercising macroeconomic control and giving free hand to and enlivening enterprises, and correctly handle various complicated relationships in the switch from the old to the new system to ensure the healthy development of the reform of collective enterprises.

Historical experience has proved that only by adopting policies of encouragement, support, and protection can light industrial collective economy develop in a healthy way. If we adopt the policies of discrimination, restruction, and suppression, light industrial collective economy would suffer setbacks.

At present, most collective enterprises have a weak economic foundation, lack funds and talented people, have poor technological equipment, are deficient in raw materials, and shoulder heavy social burdens, so they are unable to transform and develop themselves. To tap potentials of light industrial collective enterprises, it is necesary to rely on a series of policies and all areas and departments must assist them in various fields. Only thus can light industrial collective economy develop in a steady, continuous, and coordinated way during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

Enterprise Growth Urged

[Text] Beijing, June 23 (XINHUA) -- Democratic management is of paramount importance for vigorous growth of light industrial collective businesses, an editorial of the WORKERS' DAILY stated today.

"Collective enterprises are independent economic organizations in which laborers jointly own the means of production, work together and receive remuneration according to work," explained the editorial marking the third national congress in light industrial collective enterprise employees which opened here Sunday. "This makes it absolutely necessary for collective businesses to be democratically managed and ensure that employees can act as masters of their enterprises," it pointed out.

According to the paper, 7.45 million employees in such enterprises provide daily necessities and small merchandises for domestic and foreign markets. Under China's Constitution, collective businesses practice democratic management and their employees have the right to elect and recall management staff and make major decisions on management and operations. The editorial called for improving the system of the workers congresses to strengthen democratic management and ensure the employees' democratic rights. "The congress should meet regularly to discuss and take decisions on the growth of enterprises and the workers' interests," it said.

The congress is a body and authority in collective businesses, rather than a consultancy or a supervisory organization, the editorial explained. Once elected by the congress, business executives have responsibility for production and management. "But directors must report on work to the congress regularly and solicit employees' opinions," it said, adding that the congress has the right to recall directors who prove unqualified.

Meanwhile, a commentator's article in today's PEOPLE'S DAILY called for aid to collective businesses and their protection to ensure sustained, balanced and stable growth in the next five years.

PROVINCIAL LEADERS VIEW OBSTACLES TO LATERAL TIES

HK260653 XIAN XIBEI XINXI BAO in Chinese 16 Jun 86 p 1

[Article by Shaanxi Provincial External Economic and Technical Cooperation Commission: "Some Provincial CPC Committee Secretaries and Governors Point Out That There Are Great Obstacles to Lateral Ties"]

[Text] Liaoning Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Guan Shuren recently pointed out that a major problem currently affecting and hampering the developmenmt of lateral ties is that the leaders of certain areas, departments, and enterprises have still not fundamentally solved the question of their understanding of the significance of this work.

This is mainly shown in the following ways: 1) Some enterprises leaders, accustomed to a closed-style of "large and complete" or "small and complete" production, always feel that it is better that one should have something onself rather than that others should have it; they enthusiastically engage in forming their own system, and avoid seeking help from others in any circumstances. 2) Some people only stress microeconomic results instead of all-round economic results. Enterprises with good sales outlets are afraid that if they forge ties the number of their competitors will increase. Some large enterprises fear that medium and small enterprises joining in ties will fly away still unfledged, so they are wary and leave room for maneuver in forging ties. 3) Some enterprise leaders lack strategic vision and regard ties as just an expediency; they view the organization of ties as something of little account and are unwilling to work hard at it. 4) Enteprises vie with each other for the "leading position" in forging ties; if I am the dominant factor in the tie-up, then I work positively; if others are the "leaders" and I am just in a "supporting role," than I have no interest. 5) Some areas and departments, accustomed to old management methods, only allow the enterprises to forge ties within their own area or department; they are afraid that ties spanning different areas, departments, and trades will result in taking the enterprises away, while their own powers are diminished and their own interests are uncared for. They are therefore unenthusiastic about such ties and even erect obstacles and interfere with them.

Guizhuo Provincial Governor Wang Chaowen said that the idea of small production remains a major obstacle to developing lateral ties as far as remote and backward areas are concerned. Judging by the present reports from the enterprises, 1) There is fear of loss of "one's own forces," of an offspring factory "flying away," and of running at a loss; there is also far of losing one's own brand name. 2) Certain enterprises that manage to get by are content with a "comfortably well-off" standard, and slowly get on with production behind closed doors, instead of diffusing it among small enterprises and township enterprises, since they have lingering love for the "large but complete" or "small but complete" pattern. 3) Certain areas with rich resources only think of asking the higher authorities for money instead of teaming up with other units to exploit these resources.

Hunan Provincial Governor Xiong Qingquan said that when lateral ties are mentioned, everyone raises his hand in assent, but the moment real ties are forged, certain people come out to interfere, raise awkward questions, and erect obstacles. This shock wave hits our own heads at all levels and in all departments. This means that the resistance to lateral ties maybe coming from our own departments in charge and ourselves, not from elswhere.

JIEFANGJUN BAO REPORTS DEEDS OF NUCLEAR SCIENTIST

OW241113 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2130 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] The 24 June JIEFANGJUN BAO published a report, as the leading article on the front page, on the advanced deeds of Deng Jiaxian, one of the pioneers and founders of China's nuclear arms development program, whom people describe as the father of the atomic and hydrogen bombs. In the past 2 decades and more, Deng Jiaxian made important contributions to the development of China's nuclear weapons.

In order to carry forward Deng's revolutionary spirit of seeking neither fame nor wealth, working hard and disregarding his own safety, the Ministry of Nuclear Industry recently called on the vast number of scientific and technological cadres to learn from him. Earlier, Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Central Military Commission, signed an order and appointed Deng Jiaxian vice chairman of the Science and Technology Committee under the Commission of Science, Technology and Industry for National Defense.

Deng Jiaxian returned to China to start new China's nuclear physics research work in the early years of the People's Republic, soon after he received his Ph.D. degree in physics in the United States. In a situation in which the Soviet Union unilaterally tore up contracts and agreements, and there were neither data nor research facilities, Deng Jiaxian led a group of new college graduates in a research project. They made a major theoretical breakthrough on the atomic bomb, and completed a theoretic design for an atomic bomb in as little as 6 months.

China's successful development of the atomic and hydrogen bombs was amazingly fast, thanks to the foresight, sagacity, and leadership of Deng Jiaxian and other scientific research organizers. Deng Jiaxian set three research orientations based on his knowledge of nuclear science, thereby accelerating China's development of nuclear weapons. He used modern management methods, formulated strict rules and regulations, paid attention to arousing enthusiasm, relied on collective wisdom, and thus made important academic progress.

Deng Jiaxian has been engaged in China's development of nuclear weapons for more than 20 years. He personally took part in, and made final conclusions on, research and exploration of many important theoretic questions and wrote many plans, but never claimed authorship. He often told young comrades: you must be ideologically prepared to seek neither fame nor wealth before you come here, but your work must attain the world's advanced level.

He once concealed his identity and worked his heart out for the motherland's national defense science and technology. His willingness to remain an unknown hero was in the national interest. A contingent of scientists and technicians capable of passing the stiffest test has been formed under the influence of his lofty moral character and leadership.

YANG SHANGKUN, QIN JIWEI AT PHOTO EXHIBITION

[Excerpts] Beijing, 19 Jun (XINHUA) -- More than 100 photographs on military subjects taken by Wang Jianmin, a young photographer, were put on display in the Chinese Art Gallery in Beijing today. The photographs show the progress of PLA's revolutionization, modernization, and regularization.

Central Military Commission Vice Chairman Yang Shangkun and Beijing Military Region Commander Qin Jiwei cut the ribbon for the photo exhibition which is entitled "The Most Lovely Persons of Our Time." Responsible persons of the departments concerned Shi Shaohua, Wu Yinxian, and Guo Chaoren attended the opening ceremony.

FUJIAN: CHEN GUANGYI ATTENDS PARTY RECTIFICATION MEETING

[Excerpts] A meeting of the provincial CPC COmmittee's Standing Committee on 13 June called for promoting rural reform and economic development in carrying out party rectification, and for tightening party discipline and strengthening the building of party organs at the grass-roots level with the increasing efforts to open up to the outside world and enliven the domestic economy.

Chen Guangyi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, presided, and Zhang Yumin, member of the provincial CPC Committee's Standing Committee and deputy head of the provincial CPC Committee's group for guiding party rectification, reported on the guidelines of the seminar on party rectification, convened by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification in Nanjing, and on the implementation of those guidelines.

The meeting noted that, with smooth progress and sound development, Fujian has achieved considerable success in party rectification. Under the encouraging situation in rural party rectification, the province should fully and realistically affirm its achievements in party rectification. However, it should also notice that unbalanced development in various places has given rise to many problems. Party committees at all levels should retain their composure, continue to increase their leadership over party rectification, and offer appropriate guidance. Without relaxing in the least, they should pay close attentin to doing a good job in carrying out the latter stage of rural party rectification, make more thorough efforts, and achieve greater results.

The meeting stressed the need to take a clear-cut and specific approach to upholding the guiding ideology of promoting and protecting rural reform and economic development in launching rural party rectification.

The meeting emphasized persistent efforts to conduct positive education in the course of party rectification, in order to make the party members ideologically more conscious; improve their understanding of the party's fundamental goals; strengthen their concepts of party spirit; dispel mercenary ideas; induce them to achieve prosperity through hard work, proper conduct, and law abidance; and remind them of the need to serve the people, though themselves prosperous, by leading the masses to achieve common prosperity and by playing an exemplary evanguard role in developing a commodity economy.

The meeting underscored the needs to tighten party discipline and strengthen the building of party organs with te increasing efforts to open up to the outside world and enliven the domestic economy, to remove the phenomenon of noncontrol among parties at various levels, and to give impetus to the development of material and spiritual civilizations by persevering in building the two civilizations simultaneously.

The meeting asked the provicial party rectification office to send people to investigate party rectification and its problems in coastal and hilly rural areas; to study the problems in rural party rectification and the measures and ideas to solve them; and to convene a postmortem meeting to transmitd and implement the guidelines of the seminar on party rectification held by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification and for arranging the next phase in rural party rectification.

FUJIAN FOREIGN ECONOMIC RELATIONS, TRADE DISCUSSED

HK250529 Beijing XINHHA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 1414 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] Hong Kong, 23 Jun (XINHUA) -- Zhang Liang, vice chairman of the Fujian Provincial Committee for Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, said today: Fujian's exports to Hong Kong account for more than 30 percent of the province's total export value and its imports of Hong Kong products and transit goods account for one-third of the province's total import value.

At the invitation of the Hong Kong Trade Development Council, Zhang Liang will preside over a symposium on Fujian's foreign economic relations and trade. He said that in Hong Kong there are over 700,000 compatriots of Fujian origin, who have played an important role in making investments in their native place. Since the implementation of the policy of opening up, some 70 percent of the foreign capital (not including loans) attracted by Fujian Province has come from Hong Kong.

In discussing the prospects for economic cooperation between Fujian Province and Hong Kong, Zhang Liang said: Hong Kong's production technology in electronics, plastics, light industry, and packaging is of great practical significance to Fujian. At the forthcoming symposium the province will make public 31 imported technological equipment and cooperative production projects, in which it hopes to further strengthen cooperation with Hong Kong industrial and commercial circles.

Zhang Liang pointed out: Fujian's economic, trade, and technological cooperation and exchange with foreign countries have been very flourishing. Over the past few years, it has approved the establishment of 699 Chinese-foreign joint ventures and cooperative enterprises and foreign-owned enterprises. Of this total, 368 enterprises have started business or gone into production. In line with the state development plan, Fujian has initially developed a multilevel, multiform, and multifunctional framework for opening up to the outside world, which includes the Xiamen Special Economic Zone, the open city of Fuzhou, the Mawei Economic and Technological Development Zone, and the Xiamen-Zhangzhou-Quanzhou triangular open economic zone in southern Fujian.

Fujian Province has economic and trade exchanges with over 120 countries and regions. Its total import and export volume was $1,090 million in 1985, a 440 percent increase over that of 1978 or an average annual increase of 27.2 percent. Of this, the import volume was $600 million and the export volume was $490 million, an increase of 4,710 percent and 160 percent respectively.

Jointly sponsored by the Hong Kong Trade Development Council, the Fujian branch of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade, and Fujian enterprises Company Limited, the symposium will be held in Hong Kong on 25 June. On that occasion, 300 people from Hong Kong industrial and commercial circles will be present.

JIANGSU: MAJOR DEVELOPMENT PLAN APPROVED FOR SUZHOU

[Text] Nanjing, June 26 (XINHUA) -- The central government has approved a big development plan for Suzhou -- often referred to as the "Venice of the East" -- which stresses the importance of preserving its ancient character.

The city is famed for its many waterways, traditional gardens and ancient buildings. It has a history of 2,500 years, and is now a big tourist attraction. A local official said that under the development blueprint, small towns would be developed around Suzhou to divert the influx of rural labor and prevent overcrowding, and service trades would be expanded. Construction of new factories and the expansion of existing ones in the city proper would be moved out. The blueprint stressed environmental protection and tree-planting. The official said new residential areas, to be built with the help of modern technology, would be designed to blend in with the city's ancient architecture.

YELLOW SEA OIL DRILLING STARTS OFF SHANDONG

[Text] Shanghai, June 26 (XINHUA) -- Sino-foreign oil companies began to sink the first well in the northern part of the Yellow Sea today. The Zhucheng 1-2-1 exploratory well is located in a 45-meter-deep area 160 km east of Qingdao, one of China's open coastal cities in Shandong Province. It is being sunk by the China National Offshore Oil Corporation, Britain's Cluff Oil PLC, and Norway's State Oil Company. A contract for the project was signed by the Chinese and British companies in October 1983, a Chinese oil official said. The British company completed seismic prospecting in a 1,350 kilometer area in 1984. Altogether, five exploratory wells sunk in the southern part of the Yellow Sea have discovered petroleum gas with a small amount of crude oil. The drilling is expected to last three months and will be done by the Chinese side.

SHANGHAI: RUI XINGWEN ADDRESSES PARTY WORKERS FORUM

[Text] According to JIEFANG RIBAO, at a grass-roots level party workers forum sponsored by the editorial department of SHANGHAI ZHIBU SHENGHUO [LIFE OF SHANGHAI PARTY BRANCHES] in commemoration of the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC on the afternoon of 23 June, Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, said: Party members and party organizations at all levels in Shanghai Municipality should become models of reform and vanguards of the four modernizations. Comrade Rui Xingwen said: As we approach the 65th birthday of the CPC, on behalf of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, I wish to extend my most cordial greetings and heartfelt thanks to all party members and all grass-roots party organizations in this municipality.

Comrade Rui Xingwen pointed out: The urban economic structural reform going on in our country is, in fact, a profound revolution. Ready answers to many questions arising in reform may not necessarily be found in books. Only we party members of the comtemporary era can solve these questions in a creative way by following the basic principles of Marxism and proceeding from actual conditions. There are no ready-made models for implementing reform. We must all have the courage to blaze new trails. It is permissible to commit errors while making reform, but it is not permissible to refrain from reform. The CPC Central Committee and the State Council are pinning great hopes on Shanghai; so are the people throughout the country. While blazing new trails, all our party organizations and all party members in Shanghai must have courage and work out more measures. To support, spur on, and actively participate in reform is the best way to commemorate our party's birthday.

ZHEJIANG'S WANG FANG STRESSES EXPORT PRODUCTION

OW251018 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Accompanied by (Wang Xingfa), director of the Zhejiang Provincial Bureau of Rural Enterprises, Provincial Party Committee Secretary Wang Fang, Governor Xue Ju, and other provincial leaders, with great interest and zest, visited the first provincial exhibition of export commodities produced by village and town enterprises yesterday afternoon. They made some valuable suggestions on the future development of production for export by rural enterprises and on what goals should be pursued.

After asking Comrade (Wang Xingfa) how well rural enterprises were doing in earning foreign exchange by selling products overseas, Comrade Wang Fang said cheerfully: Village and town enterprises are an important force in earning foreign exchange through exports. After several years of efforts you should be able to raise the competitiveness of your export commodities and expand your share of the international market to earn more foreign exchange for the state.

Talking about his impressions of the exhibition, Comrade Xue Ju said: In manufacturing export commodities, village and town enterprises should pay attention to developing traditional handicraft products garments, silk fabrics, and materials, but the raw materials for them are available locally. If their quality is improved, these products will be quite competitive on the international market.

Comrade Xue Ju said: We should also strive to find overseas markets for our industrial products. We should give full play to the superiority of rural enterprises in manpower and effectively make use of this by mainly manufacturing standardized parts and accessories of machinery and electrical equipment. We should avoid rashly undertaking the manufacture of whole sets of machinery. Comrade Xu Ju also called for efforts to improve garment designs and food products packaging and preservation.

GUANGXI CONCLUDES RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION CONFERENCE

[Excerpts] A regional party rectification work conference has stressed that in rural party rectification it is essential to grasp the focal points, clearly understand the guiding ideas, persevere in conducting education by positive example, strengthen leadership, and fulfill the rectification task on time and up to the mark in quality. It is also necessary to consolidate the fruits of party rectification. Rural party rectification should spur and ensure the development of rural economy and the smooth progress of reform. This is a fundamental guiding idea that must be implemented throughout this rural party rectification.

The focal points in rural party rectification are to rectify and build the township and village leadership groups, and solve certain serious abuses of power and violations of law and discipline by township and village party-member cadres and other outstanding problems. In dealing with ordinary problems involving ordinary party members and with problems left over from past political movements, we should enhance ideological understanding by educating by positive example and learning from experiences and lessons.

The region's rural party rectification work should be basically completed by February 1987. Certain units should complete the work by the busy spring farming season in April. In order to ensure the fulfillment of the task on time and up to the mark in quality, it is essential to concentrate the leadership forces. We must make all-round arrangements and make full use of the slack farming season for party rectification, to ensure that both rectification and production can proceed smoothly. We must also focus on solving the main problems.

We must draw strict policy demarcation lines, seriously correct unhealthy trends, and promote the development of the township enterprises. The necessary expenditures of township enterprises on business activities cannot be regarded as unhealthy trends. Mistakes in work must be strictly distinguished from unhealthy trends. We must be sure to protect people's enthusiasm for reform.

The conference was held in Nanning on 23 and 24 June. Ou Jiwen, a member of the regional CPC Committee's party rectification leadership group, convened the spirit of the party rectification work conference of six southern provinces and one autonomous region convened by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification. Regional CPC Committee Secretary Chen Huiguang and Deputy Secretary Jin Baosheng made speeches.

GUANGDONG: XIE FEI SPEAKS ON RURAL CULTURE

HK260357 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] This morning, Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Xie Fei made a report at the provincial rural mass culture work conference on the role of 4-way cultural centers as important bases in building the two civilizations in the rural areas. He proposed that all parts of the province actively popularize the experiences in developing such centers, which combine the functions of spreading knowledge of science and technology, providing economic information, launching cultural and sports activities, and conducting ideological education.

Xie Fei said in his report that this type of cultural center developed in rural Guangdong represents a valuable new experience. It has opened up a new way for conducting rural cultural and ideological work in the new historical period, and is of far-reaching significance for promoting the building of the two civilizations in the rural areas. Hence, the leaders at all levels, especially the comrades engaged in rural work, must profoundly understand the changing rural scene, accurately keep their finger on the pulse of the peasants' thinking, and actively satisfy the masses' needs to get rich and to improve their cultural life.

ARTICLE DESCRIBES GUANGDONG'S DAYA BAY NUCLEAR PLANT

[Article by Wang Wenhua: "A Milestone Erected on Daya Bay -- Information on China's First Large Nuclear Power Station"]

[Text] Guangdong nuclear power station, China's first large nuclear power station, is under construction at Daya Bay which is located on the South China Sea Coast. A few days ago, guided by engineers and technical workers from the Guangdong Nuclear Joint Venture Company, this reporter drove by car from the city of Shenzhen and covered a distance of about 70 kilometers before eventually arriving at the nuclear power station construction site -- Malingjiao. He had brought with him questions raised by his interested readers.

The location is surrounded by mountains and stands by the sea. The former mountain top, with an elevation of 67 meters, has now been leveled off and moved to the sea. Now a scene of well-ground, smooth and broad "new continent" has presented itself before us. In the middle of the construction site, two small eye-catching red flags are erected. This will be the precise location of the center point of the nuclear reactor. On the shore, stands a mole, 1,400 meters in length and 14 to 16 meters in height, which can resist the stormy waves of Daya Bay. Projects such as waterproof layering which is used to prevent the penetration of sea water, a 1,000-ton class wharf for loading and unloading materials, a reservoir with a storage capacity of 1.3 million cubic meters, carrier telephones, an asphalt road which links the location with Shenzhen, and others, have been successively completed. The first phase of projects for the nuclear power station, including the "five infrastructure" projects needed before construction of the nuclear power station officially began, started on 2 April 1984, and was completed as scheduled in May this year. All this has laid a solid foundation for full-scale construction and the nuclear power station facility installation projects.

Guangdong nuclear power station in Daya Bay is an economic cooperative project with the greatest value to date, between China and Western Europe. The cost of the entire project is 3.7 billion. In March this year, Guangdong Nuclear Joint Venture Company, which is jointly run by Guangdong Nuclear Power Investment Company and Hong Kong Nuclear Power Investment Company, signed letters of intent respectively with The Framatome Company of France, Electric Power Company of France and the General Electrics Company of Britain on equipment and facility supply and related engineering services for the nuclear island and regular islands. The principal part of the nuclear power station project is expected to start in September this year.

According to the project timetable, the first generating unit will go into operation in 1992. After completion of the whole project, the nuclear power station, with an installed capacity of 1.8 million kilowatts and which is equipped with pressure reactors, will generate as much as 10 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity annually.

This will be equal to 70 percent of the existing generated energy in Guangdong Province. This project is aimed not only at making up for the insufficient power supply in Guangdong, but also at demonstrating China's determination to maintain the stability and prosperity of Hong Kong. After completion of the project, 70 percent of the power generated by the nuclear power station will be available for Hong Kong.

In the command headquarters, two of the officials in charge answered, the questions raised by this reporters in great detail. They said that insufficient power supply was a great obstruction to the acceleration of the four modernizations program in China. The eastern, southern and northeastern parts of China are industrially developed regions. Their industrial output value has accounted for more than 70 percent of the industrial output value of the whole country. However, these regions are poor in energy resources. Therefore, it is our imperative task to solve the energy supply problem in these regions by developing nuclear power energy.

At present, there are more than 300 nuclear power stations in operation throughout the world. Generated nuclear power energy in France, Sweden, Finland and others accounts for more than 30 percent of the total generated power energy of these countries. A large number of developing countries are also actively developing nuclear power. In Pakistan, India and China's Taiwan Province, there are nuclear power stations in operation. China's nuclear industry has a solid foundation. The building of the nuclear power station in Daya Bay has marked the start of China's nuclear power undertaking. Like Gezhouba, its name will also go down in history as a milestone in China's power construction projects.

With regard to safety problems, responsible technical personnel of the Shen Junwen nuclear power station maintained that the Guangdong Daya Bay nuclear power station can be regarded as perfectly safe. It is equipped with pressure reactors produced by France, with three protective screens for safety purposes. It is extremely difficult for nuclear radiation to leak through these three protective screens. Nevertheless, the nuclear power station will also adopt sufficient measures to prepare for the worst, and get rid of nuclear radiation. On 21 May, Vice Premier Li Peng inspected the nuclear power station construction site. He urged departments concerned to adopt a more serious attitude and take more forceful measures to ensure the safety of the nuclear power station.

Engineers and technical workers who accompanied this reporter to inspect the project added: "The final decision to choose Malingjiao as the site of the station was made after very careful consideration of the safety problems. It took more than 3 years to choose the site. Investigations were made in more than 30 locations. The final decision was made after appraisal through discussions by 48 experts from 17 units throughout the country. The persons concerned stressed that even if a strong earthquake of force seven occurs, the nuclear power station will still stand rock-firm.

China's nuclear power industry has just started. People are paying close attention to this large nuclear power station in Daya Bay. They will follow every solid step it takes with interest.

EMBEZZLER LENIENTLY PUNISHED IN GUANGZHOU

[Text] Guangzhou, June 25 (XINHUA) -- A Guangzhou factory official whose embezzlement and bribery totalled 116,700 yuan has been dealt with leniently because he turned himself in, returned all the money and reported other criminals.

Zhang Shixiong, 37, former deputy chief of the technological section of the Guangzhou high-voltage electrical appliance factory, embezzled 115,400 yuan within one year from March 1985 by writing phoney receipts and making false reports on equipment maintenance costs, an official of the Guangzhou Intermediate People's Court said here today. He also accepted a 1,300 yuan bribery from a cutting tool factory in Anhui Province earlier this year.

He has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment with five years' probation. All the ill-gotten money is confiscated. The court official said Zhang should have been penalized severely according to China's criminal law for abusing his power to embezzle a huge sum of public money. Zhang was dealt with leniently because he showed remorse, reported his crime, returned all the illegal money and revealed other offenders, the official added.

Legal education began in Zhang's factory on April 1. His wife pleaded with him to turn himself in. He reported the affair to the Guangzhou Procuratorate on April 4.

GUANGDONG TO USE TECHNOLOGY TO 'SPUR' ECONOMY

[Text] Guangzhou, June 24 (XINHUA) -- Guangdong Province in southern China will mainly rely on science and technology to develop its rural economy in the future, according to a high-ranking local official. Speaking at a recent meeting, Guo Rongchang, deputy secretary of the provincial Communist Party Committee, said this is part of the country's "sparking plan". The plan, created by the State Science and Technology Commission, is aimed at developing practical technology to spur China's rural economy. It covers 24 major sectors including the development of mountainous areas, aquaculture, livestock farming, and processing of farm and sideline products.

Guo, who is in charge of rural work, said that with rural reform going ahead in the province, the role of science and technology has shown more and more importance in rural economic development.

From now on, he said, the province will mainly depend on science and technology to develop rural productivity, and modern means of production should gradually take the place of old ones. "This is a big change in our guidelines for rural economic work," he said.

The province will give technical training to 50,000 educated young people for its township-run factories during the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990), he said.

Other projects include developing technology and equipment for rural factories, establishing 25 research and production centers, and arranging 200 science demonstration projects.

For the near future, emphasis will be laid on developing aquaculture, poultry breeding, fodder processing, production of foodstuffs and daily necessities, mining, construction and storage and packing techniques.

HUNAN'S MAO ZHIYONG STRESSES NEED FOR GOOD TEACHERS

HK260303 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Excerpts] According to HUNAN RIBAO, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Mao Shiyong said at a recent meeting that mobilizing ex-teachers to return to their former profession, reducing the number of district and township education administrative personnel and organizing them to return to teaching in school, and building a stable, ample, and well-qualified teachers contingent represent a current important measure and urgent task in strengthening basic education. This is also the most important practical thing that the party and government leadership at all levels can do for education. The party committees and government at all levels must learn from the Changde Prefectural CPC Committee and Commissioner's Office and summon up great resolve to do this work well. The task should be basically completed by September.

In recent years some 3,800 backbone primary and secondary school teachers have been transferred to party and government organs and various other departments in the province, or have switched to other work. Some 10,000 teachers have been transferred to upper-level education departments as non-teaching administrators. This has caused serious instability in the secondary and primary teacher contingent.

The Changde Prefectural CPC Committee and Commissioner's Office have acted in light of the instructions of the central departments concerned and the provincial CPC Committee and government and taken resolute action to mobilize teachers to return to their former profession and reduce the number of administrative personnel, with good results.

Comrades Mao Zhiyong, Liu Zheng, and Wang Xiangtian pointed out at the meeting that if the whole province can act like Changde and summon up resolution to tackle the work, the province will easily be able to mobilize several thousand or as many as 10,000 teachers to return to the schools to teach. This would be the equivalent to 1 year's output of all teacher-training colleges and schools in the province.

SICHUAN: CHONGQING SUPPORTS FACTORY REFORMER

["News Feature: Joys and Hardships of Reformers" -- XINHUA headline]

Liu Guyin, 55, a director of the Chongqing Rubber Belt Factory, is one of the successful managers who experienced the joys and hardships of a reformer.

When she was appointed director in 1982, she took over from a group of unqualified cadres. She set up detailed production regulations and in three years, the economic results propelled the factory from the bottom to the top of the country's 300 rubber belt enterprises.

Early last year, she organized a meeting to promote rubber belt sales. It unexpectedly brought the factory a profit of one million yuan. However, because of the meeting, she was blamed for "going too far in the reform".

There was a stir in the city when she became the target of criticism in the press and was put under investigation by some discipline and financial inspection teams. The criticism centered around some popular singers who performed for potential buyers and the excessive use of funds on the meeting. Some people even used the event to launch unjustified accusations.

For a period of time, Liu was in a deep depression and doubted her fate as a path-breaker. But many of her fellow workers supported her. The city authorities also sent officials to the factory to check facts. They fully confirmed the merits of the director and encouraged her to go on with her reforming programs.

"CHONGQING DAILY" made a public apology for its inaccurate report on the factory.

The mayor of Chongqing, Xiao Yang, told XINHUA that it is especially urgent now to create an atmosphere which encourages people to take up creative methods in economic reforms.

Since 1983, about 400, or one-third of the enterprises under the direct leadership of the Chongqing government, now employ the manager responsibility system in which factory managers can appoint deputy directors and other assistants and can set up rules and regulations governing production and discipline. With their intelligence and creativeness, many new leaders have helped their enterprises make unprecedented profits and also improved the economic benefits of the employees.

A new regulation issued by the city government last month stipulated that these directors cannot be removed from their posts at the will of their superior departments without reason.

An official of the municipal committee for economic restructuring told XINHUA that while exercising their power over the personnel, reward and penalty systems, the new leaders would unaviodably affect some people's interest and conventional ideas.

That is why some people looked for minor flaws in the enthusiastic reformers. "Mistakes are unaviodable in the process of reform, the result of which hinges China's future," he said. "Therefore we must warmly support the initiative reformers and help them remove obstacles."

In another case, the city authorities discovered that false accusations had been made against five officials from four furniture factories. Public meetings were then held in these factories to clear facts and confirm the achievements of reform. Because of the enthusiastic support of the local government and Communist Party authorities, many factory managers now are more confident in their work.

Liao Bokang, secretary of the municipal party committee, wrote a letter to Ye Zubi, 49, an official of the furniture factory, to show his support. Ye said: "I firmly believe that reformers nowadays have a much brighter future than those in the past."

SICHUAN DISCUSSES JUVENILE DELINQUENCY PROBLEMS

[Excerpts] The work of educating and saving young delinquents is currently facing a new situation and urgently needs reforming and strengthening. This was a major topic of a provincial conference on helping and educating juvenile delinquents who commit minor crimes, which concluded in Chengdu today under the auspices of the provincial Public Security Department.

The province has scored a certain degree of success in helping and educating young delinquents in recent years. A number of minor offenders have mended their ways after education. From 1983 to 1985, over 70 percent of those helped and educated were properly reformed and ceased their activities.

However, juvenile delinquency remains a very prominent problem today. It has become a problem threatening public order, and it must not be neglected. Youths and juveniles are involved in a high proportion of crimes.

The participating comrades held that the fundamental reason why the juvenile delinquency problem has not been completely solved is that measures for dealing with the problem in a comprehensive way have not been firmed up. They appealed to the departments concerned to pay sufficient attention to the work of helping and educating delinquent youths and juveniles. Under the leadership of the party committees and government, it is necessary to mobilize all units and departments and the grass-roots party and government organizations in the rural areas to tackle this task together and score still greater achievements in providing help and education.

YUNNAN URGES IMPLEMENTING POLICY ON INTELLECTUALS

HK200237 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Excerpts] The Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee held a meeting of responsible persons of provincial units on the afternoon of 19 June, which called on all provincial units to basically complete by year-end the task of implementing policies on intellectuals.

A responsible comrade of the Organization Department of the provincial CPC Committee pointed out: Some provincial units have recently done well in implementing the policies on intellectuals. The leaders have attached importance to this work, and the work has progressed well. Some have basically completed this task. However, progress has been slow and work mediocre in many units. This is very unfavorable for meeting the province's deadline for implementing the policies on intellectuals. He put forward the following views for the next stage of this work in the provincial units:

1. The party organizations must seriously study the spirit of the relevant central documents. They amust also strengthen and augment the work groups for implemlenting the policies on intellectuals, establish work responsibility systems, increase inspection and supervision, and go deep into reality to discover and solve problems.

2. Victims of miscarriages of justice during and before the Cultural Revolution who have not yet been rehabilitated must have the verdicts on them promtly corrected. We must help those who have been rehabilitated to resolve problems of the aftermath. Those who have not been completely rehabilitated must be completely rehabilitated, without any stain being left.

3. We must seriously and fully review personnel files on intellectuals that have not yet been reviewed. We must assign reliable people with upright work style who are trusted by the intellectuals to take charge of this work.

4. We must seriously return property and housing taken from the intellectuals during the Cultural Revolution. We must also carry out ideological and political work on those people currently holding intellectuals' property and occupying their houses. Salaries withheld from intellectuals during the Cultural Revolution must be made up in full. College graduates sent back to their hometowns during the 3 difficult years should be taken back and have work assigned by their original units. We should also hurry to solve problems of separation of husband and wife or transfer of household registration from rural to non-rural areas resulting from work arrangements and so on. We should solve problems of recruiting intellectuals into the party.

Liu Shuji, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and head of the provicial liaison group for work concerning intellectuals, spoke at the conclusion of the meeting.

BEIJING MAYOR ATTENDS PUBLIC SECURITY MEETING

[Excerpt] On the afternoon of 10 June, the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee held a conference to make arrangements for carrying out a drive of severely dealing blows to those who seriously jeopardize public security and social order.

Chen Xitong, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee and mayor of the municipaltity, presided over the conference. Li Guang, Standing Committee member of the municipal CPC Committee and secretary of the Political and Legal Commission of the municipal CPC Committee, and Feng Ming, vice mayor of the municipality, attended the conference.

In their speeches to the conference, responsible comrades of the municipal CPC Committee pointed out: The capital's public security situation has been generally good since the beginning of this year. There exists a prominent problem in which the number of criminal cases, serious criminal cases in particular, continues to increase. Such serious criminal cases as murder, rape, robbery, and theft and cases involving hooligans assaulting people have seriously damaged public order. Thus, we should concentrate this struggle on dealing blows to murderers, rapists, robbers, bomb planters, arsonists, serious thieves, and hooligans who assault women.

Responsible comrades of the municipal CPC Committee pointed out: The struggle against serious criminal offenders who jeopardize public security and social order is a matter which will decide whether or not the capital can attain the goal of realizing a stable turn for the better in public security, ensure the smooth progress of the two civilizations, and safeguard the people's lives and property.

The municipal CPC Committee called on CPC committees and governments at all levels to vigorously grasp the propaganda and mobilization work and urged all localities and units to hold meetings of party members, CYL members, and cadres and mass rallies to ferret out criminal activities jeopardizing public security and social order. All departments and units should regard this struggle as an important task and firmly attend to it. On the basis of conscientiously analyzing and studying the public security situation, we should formulate specific measures for safeguarding public security, organize powerful working groups headed by leading comrades on a responsibility basis to take charge of waging the struggle, strengthen supervision and examination, and firmly and deeply grasp the struggle.

XING CHONGZHI AT HEBEI MEETING ON RECTIFYING PARTY STYLE

[Excerpts] This afternoon, the provincial party rectification leading group held its fourth party rectification meeting of provincial organs.

The meeting stressed that in rectifying party style and in consolidating discipline in particular, we should not slacken our efforts to implement the policy of "being first resolute and second persistent in doing our work," and should continue the work in a dovetailed manner.

At the meeting, the provincial Public Security Department, the provincial Labor and Personnel Department, the general office of the provincial government, the provincial Light Industrial Department, the provincial Supply and Marketing Cooperative, and the general office of the provincial CPC Committee submitted written reports to the meeting to introduce their situations in consolidating discipline and handling cases.

A comrade of the investigation group of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission gave an account of the problems concerning the serious violations of discipline in the course of selecting and appraising the province's "10 top" sportsmen.

Han Guang, permanent secretary of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission; Xing Chongzhi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; and Bai Shi, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee, secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, and deputy director of the party rectification leading group of the provincial organs, attended and spoke at the meeting. Lu Chuanzan, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and secretary general, presided over the meeting.

Comrade Xing Chongzhi also gave a speech, in which he said: Hebei Province has favorable conditions because at present, we have the party's correct policies and the enthusiasm of the broad masses of people. The key to making our work successful lies in the work of our leaders at all levels. The broad masses of cadres should promote the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountain and do their work well. Does the current rectification of party style affect reform? The rectification of party style in our Hebei Province has promoted reform. Persisting in reform is our primary task and rectifying party style is an important guarantee for the smooth advance of reform. We should not slacken our efforts to grasp the rectification of party style, and should grasp the work earnestly for 2 years. He stressed: While rectifying party style and consolidating discipline, the party organizations at all levels should pay attention to improving the democratic life, and persist in democratic centralism, because they have a vital bearing on consolidating the party rectification achievements. The inner party life should be regularized. It is necessary to promote democracy and conduct criticism and self-criticism. Leading cadres of the party should receive supervision from the party members and the masses. At the end of his speech, Comrade Xing Chongzhi expressed the hope that the various provincial units will firmly foster the idea that leadership means service, render better service to the lower and the grass-roots levels, thoroughly change our work style, do a good job in reform, and advance our economic work.

GANSU MEETING DISCUSSES RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK240159 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] At the provincial forum on rural party rectification work which concluded on 23 June, Hou Zongbin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Wang Zhanchang, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and permanent deputy head of the provincial CPC Committee's party rectification leadership group, stressed that all localities must further strengthen leadership and do a good job in rural party rectification work from beginning to end.

Party rectification has been launched in an all-round way in the province's township seats and in enterprises and units below county-level since the rural party rectification work forum in March. According to statistics, party rectification has now been completed in 30.9 percent of the township seats in the province. A further 31.1 percent are now conducting comparison and examination or rectification and correction.

Rural party rectification has not developed evenly during this period. In some places slow progress has been made in investigating and dealing with major violations of discipline, and action has been ineffective.

In view of these problems, Hou Zongbin and Wang Zhanchang said that the party organizations at all levels must regard the implementation of Comrade Hu Yaobang's important instructions delivered during his inspection of Gansu as the guiding ideas for rural party rectification. They must conduct education in party spirit for party members in a variety of ways, and help them to establish great ideals and play a model and leading role in developing commodity production, promoting diversification, and building the two civilizations in the rural areas.

Hou Zongbin and Wang Zhanchang also demanded that all localities start party rectification by grasping major and important cases, focusing on solving problems of abuse of power and violations of law and discipline. It is necessary to break through networks of relationships, clear away interference, carry investigations through to the end, and ensure the proper completion of rural party rectification work in Gansu.

GANSU FORUM EXAMINES QUESTIONS ON PARTY STYLE

[Excerpts] A provincial symposium on work regarding party style concluded in Lanzhou on 25 June. The meeting was attended by leading comrades of the province including Li Ziqi, Huang Luobin, Jia Zhijie, Liu Bing, Wang Bingxiang, Hou Zongbin, Lu Kejian, Wang Zhanchang, Ma Zuling, Wang Jintang, and (Song Jingchun). Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Li Ziqi conveyed the important instructions delivered by Comrades Hu Yaobang and Tian Jiyun during their inspection of southern Gansu, Lanzhou, Dingxi, and Pingliang. He also made an important speech on the province's implementation of the central instruction on doing earnest work for 2 years to straighten out party style.

Hou Zongbin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Wang Zhanchang, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, respectively spoke on the basic experiences in straightening out party style in Gansu and on how to further improve this work amid the new situation of reform.

The responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee stressed that in order to get a good grasp of party style in the new situation of reform, it is necessary to study the new situations, sum up the new experiences, and integrate straightening out party style with promoting economic work. We should reach the goal of both straightening out party style and ensuring and stimulating the smooth progress of reform.

QINGHAI PLANS TO DEVELOP INDIVIDUAL ENTREPRENEURS

HK241110 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Text] The provincial Industry and Commerce Administrative Bureau recently formulated a plan for developing individual entrepreneurs in industry and commerce in our province during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. The orientation and principle for the development of individual entrepreneurs in industry and commerce in our province during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period are:

The urban industrial zones with Xining and Qaidam as the centers must actively create conditions for vigorously developing commercial information and advisory work, the repair trade, service trades, and the tertiary industry, including laundry, dyeing, running bathhouses, haircutting, running beauty parlors, preschool education, and nurseries. They must do a good job in providing services before and after production and in resolving residents' practical problems.

In the wake of the readjustment of the production structure, the eastern agricultural zones must vigorously help and recruit the surplus labor force and embark on trades, including the agricultural and sideline product processing trade, house repairing trade, communications and transport trade, repair trade, and service trade, in order to invigorate the economy, develop community production, eliminate poverty, get rich, and change the outlook.

The animal husbandry zones must vigorously do propaganda work and lead herdsmen to change their traditional customs and to develop commerce, communications, transport, the livestock product processing trade, and production of small commodities needed by herdsmen. In particular, it is necessary to vigorously support the processing and production of articles for use by nationalities.

Regarding the exploitative trades, including mining, gold mining, running small hydroelectric power stations, and greening barren mountains, the industry and commerce administrative departments must relax the conditions for examination and approval and give support in the aspects of materials, funds, factory sites, and technology. As to the repair and service trades whose labor quantity is large and charges low, the administrative charges levied on them can be suitably reduced or remitted to encourage these trades to develop.

At the same time, individual entrepreneurs in industry and commerce from other provinces and places are welcomed to our province to do business.

By 1990, the number of individual entrepreneurs in industry and commerce in the whole province will be 73,000 and the number of their workers 135,000, accounting for 3 percent of the total population of the whole province.

SHAANXI: BAI JINIAN EXPLAINS PARTY CONTRADICTIONS

[Text] Shaanxi Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Bai Jinian said at a gathering of leading party-member cadres of the provinical organs on 23 June that it is essential to increase education in party spirit, seriously investigate and deal with major and important cases, clear away the remnants of feudalism, and put poltical life and democratic centralism on a sound basis in the party organizations at all levels.

Bai Jinian pointed out: All units, whether they have completed party rectification, are now in process of doing so, or have not yet started it, must regard Comrade Hu Yaobang's 9 April 1986 speech on party style and contradictions in the party as an important topic for study. The party organizations at all levels must first get a good grasp of conducting education in party spirit for party members, and especially in the program of serving the people wholeheartedly. It is essential to inherit and carry forward the glorious revolutionary traditions of the Yanan period, strengthen affection for the masses, eliminate bureaucratism truly care for the masses' interests and well-being, and do good and practical deeds for them.

Second, we must get a good grasp of investigating and dealing with major and important cases. While tackling major economic cases, we must not neglect cases that have done serious political damage to party discipline. We must seriously investigate and deal with people who deliberately insert, promote, and employ in important positions, relatives and cronies, squeeze out, deal blows at, and lay false charges against comrades whose views differ from theirs, base their judgments and sentences of cases on their own personal interests, and even deliberately perpetrate miscarriages of justice, and people whose extreme irresponsibility and serious bureaucratism cause heavy economic and political losses.

Bai Jinian stressed: In studying Comrade Hu Yaobang's speech, we must correctly view and handle the two kinds of contradictions in the party. One kind consists of contradictions between different views and opinions in work. The other kind consists of contradictions between individual interests and the interests of the party and people. Most cases of these two kinds of contradiction are not antagonistic. We should solve them mainly by conducting education and putting inner-party political and democratic life on a sound basis. However, party members who boycott the CPC Central Committee's ideas and policies in their work, who spread, outside the party organization, their own ideas and policies in opposition to those of the Central Committee, who seriously violate law and discipline, who abuse power for private interests, and who seriously damage the interests of the party and people cannot remain in the party unless they mend their ways. Those who break the state laws must be dealt with according to the law.

Li Xipu, head of the procincial CPC Committee's party rectification leadership group, at the gathering conveyed the spirit of the north China forum on grass-roots party rectification. He also outlined arrangments for grass-roots party rectification and for consolidating and developing the fruits of party rectification in units at and above county-level.

TAIWAN FISHERMEN TAKE SHELTER IN SHANGHAI HARBOR

[Text] Forty-five fishing boats from Taiwan ports arrived in Shanghai Harbor on 24 Jun to take shelter from a storm. On 25 June, nearly 400 fishermen went ashore, visited Sun Yat-sen's residence, worshipped Buddha at the Longhua and Yufo temples, and visited the Boashan Iron and Steel Complex.

The Taiwan Affairs Office of the Shanghai Municipal People's Government gave a luncheon for the Taiwan compatriots at the Pujiang Hotel on 25 June. During the luncheon, Vice Mayor Li Zhaoji had a cordial conversation with the compatriots from across the Taiwan Strait, welcomed them to Shanghai while taking shelter from the storm, and wished them success in their fishing business. The Taiwan fishermen lustily sang a Taiwanese song "We Are From One Family," expressing their wish for an early peaceful reunification of the motherland.

To our knowledge, an all clear has been issued from this year's typhoon No 5. The Taiwan fishing boats will leave Shanghai Harbor for their fishing zones on 26 June.

COMMENTARY DISMISSES PRC'S 'DIPLOMATIC JUGGLING'

OW261445 Taipei CNA in English 1408 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Taipei, June 26 (CNA) -- The following is a commentary by the Broadcasting Corporation of China (BBC) in Taipei entitled "Peking's Trail Balloon":

In the wake of an Argentine naval attack on an unarmed fishing vessel from the Republic of China earlier this month. Peking's Foreign Ministry sent a note to the Argentine Government to express its "concern" over the incident. The ROC representative office in Buenos Aires immediately reminded the Argentine Government that it was purely a matter between Taipei and Argentina in which Peking had no voice whatsoever. Understandably, the Argentines also ignored Peking's gesture.

Political observers believe that Peking did not really expect any official answer from Argentina but made the move anyway as a trial balloon with a view to finding out the reaction from free China and the international community.

The speculation is well-founded. Peking recently inaugurated a "Taiwan Affairs Office" in its Foreign Ministry for the exclusive purpose of creating the impression that the ROC on Taiwan is a local authority equal to post-1997 Hong Kong and Macao in status. It is natural for the communist regime to want to know how the international community responds to the gimmick. As a matter of fact, Red China began trying to pull the wool over the eyes of the family of nations several years ago when it notified foreign governments asking them not to set up representative offices in or issue entry visas to ROC citizens.

However, Peking's request has been totally ignored -- and for good reasons. First, free China has been universally accepted as a sovereign state even though its official representation has shrunk drastically since the early 1970's. In addition to more than 20 official missions abroad, the ROC has set up scores of semi-official offices in free world nations. Besides, the ROC's across-the-board progress has won recognition worldwide. Consequently, the country has been able to maintain and expand substantive relations with all but communist nations in the world.

Secondly, the Peking regime itself has nothing to show except the size of the territory and population under its control. After more than 30 years rule on the Chinese mainland, the communist regime is beset by internal problems and has nothing to boast of in external relations.

Despite the vast resources at its disposal, Red China remains the most backward and poorest country in the world. Although it has been courted by both the U.S. and the Soviet Union in recent years, the fact remains that it is no better than a regional power and is being played by the superpowers as a "card" in their geopolitical game -- and a dubious card at that.

So far as the ROC remains strong and keeps progressing, no amount of diplomatic juggling or sleight of hand by Peking will affect its international position as a constructive member of the world community.

COMMENTARY WARNS PHILIPPINES ON PRC INTENTIONS

[Text] Taipei, June 25 (CNA) -- The following is a commentary by the Broadcasting Corporation of China (BCC) in Taipei entitled "Don't Be Naive":

During the recent visit of Philippine Vice President and Foreign Minister Salvador Laurel to Red China, he received assurances from Teng Hsiao-ping and Chao Tzu-yang that Peking's policy toward the Philippines is "non-intervention, non-involvement and non-interference."

Laurel seems to take the assurance at their face value. He said, and we quote "I have been emphatically assured by Chairman Teng Hsiao-ping and Premier Chao Tzu-yang that the Chinese Communist Party has stopped, I repeat stopped, all contacts with the Communist Party in the Philippines." As a result, Laurel added, the Philippine Communist Party no longer will be able to misconstrue any fraternal greetings that Red China has extended to it as encouragement of subversive activities. He also accpeted Peking's story that Red China gave material support to other communist parties only during the first 10 years of the communist regime.

With all due respect for the Philippine vice president, one must say he has been taken in by Peking's sweet talks. In our view, he and other leaders of the new Philippine Government should listen to the views of others who understand the Chinese communists better.

Now let's see what the Indonesians are saying about Peking's assurances of "non-intervention, non-involvement and non-interference." INDONESIAN TIMES said in its words:

"The Philippine Communist Party has been fighting the Philippine Government for many years with increasing success. So far the expressed attitude of Red China towards the Philippine Communist Party and other underground communist parties in Southeast Asia is that it would not provide material support but would continue to provide moral support to them. Therefore, the latest assurance from Red China does not in fact constitute any change in the Communist China's policy towards the underground communist parties operating in the Southeast Asian countries. By sending fratenal greetings to an insurgent communist party implies recognition of that party and approval of its rebellion against the government of the country, and this attitude renders dubious the assurance that Red China does not give material support. Besides, there is not means to verify the truth of this assurance.

"Actually Red China is pursuing a double-faced policy. While professing to establish friendly relations with the governments of the southeast Asian countries, it tries to keep itself in the good book of the underground communist parties of Southeast Asia so that if any of them succeeds in coming into power, Red China can immediately assume diplomatic and other relations with the new communist regime and turn it as its loyal ally."

The paper concluded its editorial comment by saying: "The Southeast Asian countries, especially the ASEAN member countries, should continue to be on their alert against Peking's policy and the activities of the underground communist parties."

While we are sympathetic with the new Philippine Government's desire to get help from all sides to resolve the country's various problems, we must warn Manila that one thing they should avoid is to put faith in communist promises or assurances.

COMMENTARY ADVOCATES RECIPROCITY IN U.S. TRADE TALKS

OW241347 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Text] Last week the Republic of China [ROC] and the United States launched a series of trade talks, which will last through the next 3 months. Last week talks were held in Taipei on opening local markets to U.S. wine and tobacco imports, while this week in Washington representatives of the ROC and the United States will hold the second round of talks on textile trade.

For the purpose of conducting these talks, the U.S. Government has formally forwarded to the ROC a plan for balancing the ROC-U.S. trade. Using trade laws as a bargaining chip and setting specific scopes and schedules, the U.S. Government has once again asked the ROC to lower tariffs, provide market access to U.S. imports, and allow more U.S. investments in local service businesses.

To cope with these talks, the ROC Govenment arranged for Chao Yao-tung, chairman of the Council for Economic Planning and Development, to invite the ministers of foreign affairs, finance, economic affairs, and communications to a meeting with the ad hoc group for ROC-U.S. trade under the Executive Yuan on 10 June to discuss the extent the ROC can accept the U.S. plan and to work out countermeasures.

It seems that these ROC-U.S. trade talks will be an arduous struggle for the ROC representatives. In addition to saluting them for their hard work, we should make the United States realize the basic facts. The ROC's switch from a long series of deficits to surpluses in its trade with the United States is not an accidental phenomenon, but is a result of many factors. It is closely related to the differences in the ROC and U.S. economic structures and to the ROC's rapid economic growth. Limited in economic scale and natural resources, the ROC naturally relies on an open and export-oriented economy. Although the ROC exports its products to all parts of the world, the strong consumer demand in the United States has singled that country out as the ROC's primary market. Moreover, the United States can well afford to import ROC goods becaue of its own huge economic scale and high incomes.

Particularly popular with U.S. consumers, ROC industrial goods have become the main import commodities for the United States. However, the ROC market potential for U.S. imports is so limited that U.S. consumer goods account for only some 7 percent, with machinery and industrial and agricultural raw materials accounting for over 90 percent. Nevertheless, the ROC market is considered to be flooded with foreign goods even with this seven percent.of imported U.S. consoumer goods. On the other hand, the ROC cannot buy from the United States the important products it needs because of restrictions imposed by the U.S. Government. Oil is an excellent example in this connection. Therefore, the U.S. representatives should be made to realize that the trade balance in favor of the ROC is by no means the result of unfair trade policies taken by the ROC.

Moreover, every nation has its own unique system and policies for national construction. These systems and policies should be respected; failing this amounts to interference in the internal affairs of that nation. The ROC should stand its ground on its wine and tobacco monopoly practices, which are part of the ROC's financial system. The United States should also respect the ROC stand in order to facilitate the talks. The process of transition from misunderstanding to understanding, through exchanges of views, that marked the talks on opening the ROC market to U.S. wine and tobacco imports should serve as a perfect model for conducting talks. It is hoped that the second round of talks on textile trade will end successfully, as a result of a complete exchange of views and mutual understanding.

In a nutshell, we sympathize with the U.S. concern over its trade deficit, and agree that ROC-U.S. trade relations should be improved by conducting talks. However, in holding these talks, the two sides should stand on an equal and mutually beneficial footing and seek fundamental and reasonable solutions to the basic causes of problems in order to resolve the ROC-U.S. trade imbalance through consultations.

WANG DONGXING REAPPEARS IN BEIJING 26 JUN

["Special Dispatch": "Wang Dongxing Appears in Beijing"]

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jun -- Wang Dongxing, the former leading CPC political figure, who had not appeared for a long time, was driven in a car this morning to the Wenjin Club, the entertainment center for high-ranking cadres, where he was in high spirits as he watched a martial arts display. Wang Dongxing is currently a member of the Central Advisory Commission. Also present on the occasion were Rong Gaotang, Zhao Cangbi, Liu Jianzhang, and Jiang Yizhen. Some commentators here hold that the appearance of Wang Dongxing on a public occasion shows that the CPC is striving to create a political atmosphere of relaxation and harmony.

PRC CONCERNED AT BEING USED AS DRUG STAGING POST

HK270419 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 27 Jun 86 p 10

[By Kevin Sinclair]

[Text] China is becoming increasingly concerned at being used as a drug-running staging post by international narcotics rings. Close links have now been forged between the national police in Beijing and law enforcement bodies in other nations to help combat shrewd drug runners who use Chinese airports as take-off points to slip drugs abroad. There is particularly close and active co-operation between the Guangdong Public Security Bureau, the Chinese Customs Service, the Royal Hong Kong Police and the Hong Kong Preventive Service.

In the past 18 months there have been at least seven major cases, mostly in the New Territories frontier area, involving the seizure of opium, cannabis, mandrax and other artificial depressant drugs. They are thought to have been smuggled into Hong Kong across the border. But although Hong Kong remains a convenient base for smugglers, the focal point for drug runners has moved north.

When China opened its doors to the outside world, drug smugglers were among the first eager people to duck inside. As communications have improved, so the flow of drugs has grown. China has carried out a relentless campaign to clamp down on drugs. Although figures are not available, it is known that people caught dealing in narcotics have been executed.

The profits are such that the traffic continues despite the risk of a bullet in the head.

According to reliable sources within China, Hong Kong, Australia and South East Asia, there are two main routes that take drugs into China and out to the world. The first involves Hong Kong.

Chinese law enforcement officials have told visiting police that opium is being smuggled into southwest China then taken overland to Hong Kong via the Guangzhou area. The source of the drug is that old bugbear of international drug fighters, the Golden Triangle. By masterminding the traffic, the Kuomintang remnant armies there are still fighting a rearguard action against Beijing.

Another part of this pattern is by sea, with drug consignments from Thailand unloaded along the unguardable coastline of Guangxi and Guangdong and then taken by road towards the Hong Kong border. Now there are suspicions that at least some of the opium seeping eastwards from Yunnan could have been grown inside China.

The second route from South and Southeast Asia through China to the rich markets of the drug-hungary Western world is more modern and a lot more sophisticated. This involves the new air routes that link China with Thailand and Pakistan. Intelligence reports complied by international drug enforcement bodies, and confirmed by Chinese officials, say this well-oiled system sees paid couriers from Bangkok and Karachi flying into China with hand baggage full of opiates. In Chinese transit lounges, the drugs are passes on to other couriers catching aircraft for Australia, Europe or North America.

Another version of the drugs trail is to carry narcotics in suitcases, in the belief that China's inexperienced customs officials will not find skillfully hidden drugs among tourists' luggage. Once the narcotics are inside China, they can be carried with relative impunity inside the country until being handed over to the courier who is being paid to run them into a target country.

Why go to all this trouble? Ironically, because of China's good standing and reputation as a drug-free society. When a Civil Aviation Administration of China aircraft arrives in Sydney, for example, customs men are likely to be less suspicious of arriving passengers than if they had come direct from a notorious drug centre, such as Bangkok. "To say that Chinese officials are furious at their country being used in this manner is a great understatement," one American agent has said.

UNCERTAIN FUTURE OF MACAO POLITICAL PARTIES VIEWED

[By Albert Chan]

[Text] Beijing's opposition to political parties in Hong Kong has touched a sensitive nerve in Macao, where politics is alive and well. Hong Kong's Legislative Councillors do not belong to political parties, but it is a different story in Macao, where the Legislative Assembly is made up of representatives of several major parties.

Although leaders are reluctant to label their groups as political parties, the way they operate is unmistakably political. In fact, Macanese politics has long been dominated by groups with political links in Portugal. Some Macanese have been active in the territory's complex political wrangling for years.

The best known example is the bitter row in 1984 between the leader of the Association for the Defence of the Interests of Macao (ADIM), Dr Carlos d'Assumpcao, his supporters and the then governor, which led to the dissolution of the assembly. However, Dr d'Assumpcao said ADIM should not be called a political party, "political parties are very expensive to run. We are a civic association," he said.

He is well aware of Beijing's sensitivity to party politics. "I understand China wouldn't like a fire near its door," he said.

Apart from ADIM, two other groups are prominent in Macanese politics. They are the Macao Democratic Centre (CDM), led by lawyer Dr Neto Valente, and the Macao Independent Group (GIMA), led by journalist Mr Leonel Borralho.

Mr Alexandre Ho, an outspoken commentator on Macao affairs, is the leader of a group of Chinese called Flower of Friendship and Development of Macao (FADEM).

Like Dr d'Assumpcao, he denied his group is a political party. "We are a team only," he said. He said his "team" is immature and has no strong ideological or political lines. "In Macao, the Chinese do not have any political parties. Only the Macanese do," he said.

Some observers believe China is less concerned with politics in Macao because none of the parties is anticommunist or has strong links with Taiwan. But one big question remains: whether China will tolerate the Macanese parties after it resumes control from Lisbon.

U.S OFFICIALS SAY USSR COMPROMISING ON MISSILES

[Text] Washington, June 29 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has told the United States that he is ready to compromise on the issue of medium-range missiles, today's NEW YORK TIMES quoted U.S. officials as saying. Gorbachev's offer was contained in a letter sent to U.S. President Ronald Reagan on Monday by Yuriy Dubinin, the new Soviet ambassador to Washington. But the Soviet leader did not specify the nature of the compromise, the paper said.

U.S. officials called Gorbachev's offer "promising" and Reagan has asked his experts to prepare reactions to the offer and other Soviet arms proposals, the paper said. Both superpowers have proposed the elimination of medium-range missiles in Europe but differ on what to do about Soviet missiles in Asia and about French and British missiles.

Reports said Gorbachev might propose that some Soviet missiles remain in Europe and Asia and that the United States be allowed to keep an equal number in Europe and elsewhere. This proposal is expected to be more acceptable to Western European and Asian countries and does not differ very much from the U.S. offer.

It was reported that U.S. State Department holds that the United States should respond positively to the Soviet proposals or risk jeopardizing the arms talks. Some U.S. officials called Gorbachev's letter "practical" and "positive". But they said its principal message was that a summit meeting between Gorbachev and Reagan would be "a waste of time" without the promise of "concrete or material achievements" on limiting nuclear arms, THE NEW YORK TIMES reported. However, Gorbachev's letter avoided any hint that this was a precondition for the summit.

Murrin, president of the Westinghouse Electric Corporation energy and advanced technology group, and his party here today. Li briefed the visitors on China's policy of energy and developing nuclear power. He expressed his appreciation of the Westinghouse Corporation which is among the earlist to transfer the technology of a conventional turbing group to China. Murrin said that his corporation is willing to strengthen cooperation with China in the thermo and nuclear power and electronics.

DECLINING OIL PRICES, U.S. ECONOMY VIEWED

HK260901 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 12, 16 Jun 86 pp 9-10

[Article by Shi Min: "Will the Decline in Oil Prices Bring About a New Upsurge in the U.S. Economy?"]

[Text] In 1984, the U.S. economy grew at the highest rate since 1950, but in 1985, its growth rate dropped sharply to a mere 2.3 percent. Many people, including this writer, estimated that in the latter half of this year or next year, a new economic recession would emerge in the United States. However, since the end of last year, oil prices have dropped sharply and by last April they had dropped 60 percent. The decline in oil prices has brought "good news" for Western oil-importing countries. International economic institutions and the governments of various countries one after another raised their estimates concerning economic growth rates. The Reagan administration has forecast a 3.4 percent growth rate this year and continued growth of 4 percent next year.

Indeed, the decline in oil prices is very favorable for the United States, which imports one-third of its domestic oil consumption. For example, it enables the United States to reduce its import expenditure and trade and budget deficits, by large margins, to lower its inflation and interest rates, to stimulate investment and consumption, and thus to achieve additional economic growth. It is possible for the U.S. economic growth rate to exceed that of last year, but will there be an "upsurge," as expected by the U.S. Government? My answer is in the negative. Now I am going to try to make an analysis of the reasons for this.

First, in the U.S. economic structure, the proportion of industry is declining and that of tertiary undertakings is rising. The proportion of industry in U.S. domestic production has dropped from about 40 percent in the sixties to less than one-third, while that of service trades has risen from 60 percent to over two-thirds. In its industry, the proportion of capital-intensive industry that consumes much energy has dropped; while that of technology- and knowledge-intensive industry has risen quickly. The energy elasticity coefficients for developed industrialized countries (the ratio of the rate of increase in energy consumption to GNP growth rate) has dropped from a figure of 1.1 to 1.3 in the seventies to about 0.5 now, and that for the United States is lower than 0.4. The proportion of oil in energy consumption has also dropped. Therefore, the current decline in oil prices will have a far smaller impact in promoting U.S. economic growth than the two oil price rises did in causing economic recession. According to an estimate by the U.S. magazine FORTUNE, in 1973 and 1979-80, the rises in oil prices caused increases in U.S. fuel expenditure equal respectively to 2 and 3 percent of its GNP, but the recent decline in oil prices will only reduce U.S. fuel expenditure by an amount equal to about 1 percent of its GNP.

Second, calculated at $15-$16 per barrel, the decline in oil prices wil enable U.S. enterprises and individual people to reduce their expenditure by $50-$60 billion, but only $20 billion of this will be from a reduction in imports, and the rest will be a reduction of expenditure in the purchase of oil produced domestically. The latter only means a transfer of funds within the country. In other words, as oil consumers' expenditure is reduced, so, correspondingly, will oil producers' income. Generally speaking, this part of the reduction in fuel expenditure will not bring any new stimulus to the U.S. economy as a whole.

Third, the oil-exporting countries' income will be reduced and they will reduce their imports. This will inevitably affect U.S. exports to them. For example, last year, 21 Arab countries' imports from the United States were about 50 percent less than they were the year before. This year there will be a further decline. This will offset part of the positive effect of the reduction in payments for the import of oil and will, in a relative manner, greatly hinder the growth in the production of building materials such as rolled steel, machinery, equipment, and durable consumer goods.

Fourth, owing to the decline in oil prices and the fall in inflation and interest rates, this year, U.S. investment in fixed assets other than housing will probably rise by 0.9 percent over last year, but compared with the 9.7 percent increase last year, this year's rise will be very small. However, oil companies will reduce their prospecting and exploitation investment by $6 billion; therefore, total capital expenditure will be about $484 billion, slightly more than be $476 billin last year.

Fifth, our estimate is that this year, stocks in U.S. factories and enterprises will not increase (last year's total stocks rose by only $7.3 billion over the year before, the same figure which had risen by $63 billion over the year before that). According to a recent investigation by FORTUNE MAGAZINE, in spite of the decline in oil prices, many enterprises still hope that the ratio of their stocks to sales will continue to fall. Therefore, this will not bring new stimulus to production either.

Sixth, the fall in oil prices will heighten consumers' purchasing power, and in particular will stimulate the sales of automobiles and the prosperity of the domestic tourist industry (plane and other fares will fall). However, the peak of automobile sales has already passed. Except for tourism, no service trade sector will be greatly benefited. According to estimates, total consumption expenditure this year will rise by a mere $2.3 billion. The expenditure on purchasing new houses will rise by about 5 percent over last year, owing to the decline in mortgage interest rates. However, the increase in construction will mainly be in the sector of housing for single-person households, while there will not be much increase in the construction of apartments because of the large number of vacant apartments for rent.

Seventh, this year's unemployment rate will stay at a relatively high level. Last February, it dropped to 6.8 percent, but it rebounded to 7.3 percent last March. Apart from the impact of floods in the western state of California, the rebounding of the unemployment rate was mainly caused by falling oil prices, which forced many oil companies to reduce production and workforces. Over the past 2 months, about 60,000 oil workers have lost their jobs and in some oil-producing areas,the unemployment rate already exceeds 13 percent. In the first 4 months of this year, the energy and manufacturing industries had already cut their staff and workers by 166,000, and they had already reduced their staff and workers by 125,000 last year. Moreover, the trend of cutting staff and workers is continuing in the oil industry.

Eighth, the decline in oil prices will cause the oil-exporting countries with heavy debts to suffer huge losses and make them unable to repay the principal of their debts or the interest. This will be a tremendously great threat to some big U.S. banks. (For example, the eight largest banks in the United States have lent $11 billion to Mexico which have not yet been repaid, and the loans the U.S. commercial banks have made to Mexico total about $25 billion.) Many medium-sized and small banks in the United States which have made many loans to the oil industry and agriculture will also have fund circulation difficulities because they will not be able to collect their loans. Last year, 120 banks went bankrupt in the United States, setting a record since 1933, and it is possible another record will be set this year.

Ninth, there was some reduction in the trade deficit in the first quarter, but the monthly average was still above $14 billion, which is still a big figure. Though the declining oil prices and U.S. dollar exchange rates will gradually play their role in stimulating exports and reducing imports, and will cause trade deficits to fall substantially, the total trade deficit this year will still exceed $100 billion ($148.5 billion last year). It will be very difficult to remove the unfavorable impact of this trade deficit on economic growth and the balance of international payments.

To sum up, from the point of view of current development trends, generally speaking, the decline in oil prices means more of an advantage than a disadvantage for the United States, and its economic growth will be better in the latter half of this year than in the first half. It is not likely that an economic recession will emerge this year. As a whole, this year's economic growth rate will be slightly higher than last year's and will reach about 2.5 percent. This will be lower than the optimistic estimates of the U.S. Government and some economists, but it will still be higher than the lower forecast made by some people in the United States. Of course, the decline in oil prices will not bring any "miracle" to the U.S. economy.

U.S. MILITARY TACTICS IN LIBYA EXAMINED

HK270522 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 10, 16 May 86 p 18

[Article by Lin Geng: "Operational Characteristics of the U.S. Air Raids on Libya" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] The flames of war in the Mediterranean have shocked the world, but the advanced weapons and tactics employed by the United States in the two air raids have, all the more, attracted attention from military circles of different countries in the world. U.S. military planners themselves described the attacks as "successful ones under the present-day conditions."

From the military point of view, the two U.S. air raids have the following important features.

FIRST, A POWERFUL SYSTEM OF COMMAND, CONTROL, COMMUNICATIONS AND INTELLIGENCE, PROVIDE AN IMPORTANT GUARANTEE FOR HIGHLY EFFICIENT COMMAND AND QUICK INFORMATION AND REACTION. It was reported that the system was composed of the Aegis air-defense system and E-2C command-and-control aircraft. It could accurately monitor all Libyan missile, warship and aircraft activities in Libyan coastal areas and the Gulf of Sidra, so that it could promptly guide U.S. warplanes and warships to prepare attacks on targets and give them sufficient warning of the firing to elude Libyan missiles. Actual combat shows that a highly automated system of command and communications can provide an important guarantee for victory in modern warfare.

SECOND, GIVE FULL PLAY TO THE SUPERIORITY OF ELECTRONIC TECHNOLOGY TO SUPRESS THE ENEMY'S FIREPOWER. To coordinate the air attacks, the United States drew on EA-6B Prowler aircraft and EF-111 electronic warfare planes. When the radar towers at Libya's SAM-5 missile sites started operating, EA-6B planes immediately started electronic jamming according to the frequencies intercepted from the radar towers in an attempt to fool Libya's radar system. At the same time, these planes also launched dozens of decoy targets to lure SAM-5 missiles astray. This is why in the first U.S. air attack, Libya fired six SAM-5 and two SAM-2 missiles but none of them hit U.S. warplanes.

In the second U.S. air attack, EF-111 electronic warfare planes once again played an excellent role and their powerful jamming capacity disabled all radar stations sited from Tripoli to Benghazi. At this time, U.S. F-111 fighter-bombers sent out false radar readings in order to mislead Libyan anti-aircraft guns and missiles, and then fired Shrike and Harm missiles which are designed to destroy anti-aircraft missile launchers by homing in on their radar transmissions. Before long, all five radar stations in Tripoli and Benghazi were destroyed. With the radars blinded, Libyan anti-aircraft guns and missiles became virtually useless. U.S. pilots who took part in the mission said that Libyan anti-aircraft firepower was very strong but it could not be directed at the targets. In the whole course of the air raid, only one U.S. F-111 plane was hit by anti-aircraft fire.

THIRD, ASSEMBLE MAXIMUM MILITARY POWER AND EMPLOY BOTH NAVAL AND AIR FORCES TO FORM A HUGE STRIKE FORCE. Under the guidance of the military idea of concentrating a superior force to destroy the enemy, the United States originally planned to put two aircraft carriers to use in its first attack on Libya, but finally it dispatched an extra one to the Mediterranean. When the three flattops met together, they formed a huge air-and-sea combat group with 34 warships and 240 warplanes. In the second air raid, in order to carry out a successful strike at five military targets, the United States employed its air force squadron stationed in Britain and the U.S. 6th Fleet, and altogether it mustered 2 aircraft carriers, 21 warships and 200 warplanes.

In the military operation, the United States stressed the joint action of naval and air forces but clearly they divided their duties up. F-111 fighter-bombers, as well as 1-6 and 1-7 carrier-based raiders were assigned to launch attacks. KC-10 and KC-135 tankers were to refuel the F-111s in midair, and EF-111 and EA-6B electronic warfare planes were to conduct electroic jamming while F-14 and F-18 carrier-based fighters were to provide overall air cover. When orders for action were given, over 100 carrier-based planes took off immediately in an orderly manner. The tacit coordination between naval and air forces formed a huge, solid offense-defense system.

FOURTH, OBTAIN ACCURATE INFORMATION AND ADOPT THE TATICTS OF NIGHT ATTACK AND CLOSE-RANGE FIGHTING. Libya has a powwerful air force with a total of 592 warplanes of different types, including about 100 Soviet-made MiG 23 and MiG 25 fighters, and over 100 French-made Mirage fighters. However, Libyan Air Force planes do not take off at night. With this information, the United States decided to launch night attacks. Of the two air raids on Libya, one occurred at midnight, the other at dawn. It was reported that during the U.S. air raids, no Libyan warplanes took off to repulse attacks. Thus the losses incurred by the United States in the two air attacks were very slight.

Libya's anti-aircraft force is very strong. It has more than 30 air-defense systems of different types, including 10 SAM-2, 20 SAM-3, and two SAM-5 missile batteries. However, SAM-5 missiles cannot acquire low-altitude targets. Knowing this, the United States decided to launch a raid with high speed, low-altitude fighters and bombers. When U.S. warplanes approached Libyan coastal areas, they immediately swooped down and flew at an altitude of only 60 to 150 feet to elude antiaircraft fire and to launch surprise attacks. This tactic yielded good results.

Of course, the shortcomings of U.S. weapons were exposed in actual combat. For example, in the second air raid, five F-111s and two A-6s failed to reach the target zones and some warplanes were forced to abort their bombing runs because of various glitches. Moreover, some bombs went astray because of deviations in the infra-red scanner locating the targets.

USSR INSTALLS AIR BASES ON DISPUTED JAPAN ISLANDS

[Text] Tokyo, June 29 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union has established five air bases on Kunashiri and Eterofu, two of the four disputed islands in northern Japan, the local press reported today.

Sources from the Japanese Defense Ministry said yesterday that there are three Soviet air bases established in Etorofu and two in Kunashiri. The five are among 30 Soviet air bases which encircle Japan's Hokkaido Island and pose a threat to northern Japan. The biggest base is at Tennei on the islandof Etorofu where two 3,000-meter runways are used by 40 MiG-23 interceptors. The communication equipment, ammunition depots and barracks have been increasing year after year at the Tennei base. The other air bases with each having a runway of 1,500 to 2,500 meters can be used by civil planes and planes for border garrison troops.

The military buildup on the islands, which are located 1,300 km northeast of the island of Hokkaido, began in 1978. Both the Soviet Union and Japan claim sovereignty over the two islands, which together with Habomai and Shikotan were occupied by the Soviet Union after Japan was defeated in the Second World War.

DPRK FILM RECEPTION MARKS CPC ANNIVERSARY

[By reporters Li Tu and Gao Haorong]

Addressing the opening ceremony of the photo exhibition, O Mun-han, vice chairman of the KCCRFC and vice chairman of the Korea-China Friendship Association, said: The 65 years of the CPC is a glorious course during which the CPC, under the banner of Marxism-Leninism, has won brilliant victories fighting internal and external enemies, in winning freedom and emancipation for the Chinese people, and in carrying out socialist revolution and construction.

O Mun-han continued: After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central committee, our fraternal Chinese people, displaying the revolutionary spirit of relying on their own efforts and carrying out arduous struggle, have achieved enormous successes in their socialist revolution and construction. China has a new outlook, and the Chinese people's livelihood is undergoing fundamental changes.

He said: It has been the unswerving policy of the Workers' Party of Korea [WPK] to treasure Korean-Chinese friendship, and to continue to consolidate and develop this friendship. The Korean people will do their utmost to carry forward and develop the friendship and cooperation between the Korean and Chinese peoples for generations to come.

Chinese Ambassador to Korea Zong Kewen also addressed the opening ceremony. He said: The CPC and the WPK have forged their fraternal friendship and unity on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, and in the course of long revolutionary struggles. This friendship and unity have withstood historical tests and have great vitality. The CPC and the Chinese people will continue to make efforts to promote the friendship between the CPC and the WPK and the peoples of the two countries.

Nearly 100 pictures showing the achievements of the Chinese people under the CPC are on display at the exhibition.

The KCCRFC also gave a film reception today to mark the CPC's 65th founding anniversary. A Chinese movie entitled "Dragons and Snakes of the Great Lakes" was shown at the reception.

Present at the ceremony and the reception were KCCRFC Chairman Yi Mong-Ho, and Leading members of authorities concerned Kim Chae-pong and Yi Wong-kuk.

JAPANESE EXPERTS ADVISE ON UPGRADING ENTERPRISES

[Text] Yangzhou, Jun 27 (XINHUA) -- The advice of 651 Japanese experts has produced "good results" in state-owned enterprises over the last five years, according to Zhu Rongji, vice-minister of the State Economic Commission.

In remarks released today, Zhu told Chinese and Japanese participants in a five-day forum here the Japanese managerial and technical consultants had "helped upgrade" 131 enterprises by suggesting management reforms and technological improvements.

The enterprises have also benefited in the last five years from the finding of 400 Chinese technicians who have studied Japanese enterprises.

Zhu said improvements at the Yangzhou Dahua cotton textile mill were "typical" of the results of Japanese assistance. "After being technically transformed with the help of Japanese experts," he said, "the mill can now export more than 70 percent of its products, up from 40 percent in the past."

For the Japanese, Zhu said, assistance has led to joint ventures and co-management agreements. "We want such contacts to continue and to grow," he said.

To promote long-term cooperation with the Japanese, according to Zhu, China is "willing to provide Japanese enterprises with the most preferential treatment in production and investment" and to overcome problems caused by the rapid increase in yen's value and the growing trade imbalance between the two countries.

Participants in the forum, sponsored by the State Economic Commission, included representatives of the Japan International Cooperation Agency, the Japan-China Economic Relations and Trade Center, and the Japan-China Association on Economy and Trade.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTARY ON ASEAN MEETING

["Short commentary": "The Sound of Justice"]

[Text] The 19th ASEAN Foreign Ministerial Conference was held in the Philippine capital of Manila on 23 and 24 June. At the conclusion of the meeting, the six participating foreign ministers signed a joint communique expressing support for the 8-point proposal for a political settlement of the Cambodian problem put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea [CGDK], pointing out that this proposal is reasonable, flexible, and complete, and can be regarded as a constructive idea on the just settlement of the Cambodian problem. The foreign ministers denounced the overbearing attitude of Vietnam in rejecting the 8-point proposal, demanded that Vietnam withdraw its troops from Cambodia by stages, and also showed that the "partial withdrawal" announced by Hanoi is no more than a trick to deceive the international community. The foreign ministers of the six ASEAN countries expressed profound regret that the Vietnamese authorities have displayed not the slightest degree of sincerity for solving the Cambodian problem through negotiations. They demanded that Vietnam reconsider the fair and reasonable 8-point proposal put forward by the CGDK.

During the 2-day meeting, the ASEAN foreign ministers also urged the Soviet Union to withdraw its forces from Afghanistan and demanded that the superpowers halt the arms race. The foreign ministers also issued a statement denouncing the South African authorities' policy of suppressing the blacks. The meeting stressed that it is necessary to strengthen economic ties within ASEAN and also with countries outside ASEAN, and demanded that the developed countries abolish trade protectionism. All these demands and cries are just. Of course, it was essential that the Cambodian issue should attract the particular attention of the six countries, since it has a direct bearing on peace and stability in the region.

Vietnam's war of aggression against Cambodia, which has lasted nearly 8 years now, has not only brought serious calamities to the Cambodian people, but also directly threatens the security of the ASEAN countries and poses a menace to peace in Asia and the world. Hence, ending this war as soon as possible has become the urgent task of the Asian region and the international community. The Asean foreign ministers meeting's support for the CGDK's 8-point proposal, together with their positive efforts to find a political solution to the Cambodian problem, fully reflect the desires of peace-loving countries and peoples that uphold justice. This just stand has therefore naturally been extensively appreciated and supported by the peoples of Asia. People can see that, by contrast, Vietnam, clinging stubbornly to its aggressive stance, has been strongly denounced by the international community and has become more and more isolated. This stark contrast precisely reflects the will of the world's peoples.

It is essential to put an end to Vietnam's war of aggression against Cambodias as soon as possible for the sake of peace and tranquillity in Southeast Asia. It is the international community's duty today to continue to put pressure on Vietnam and compel it to withdraw its troops from Cambodia at an early date. As Philippine Vice President and Foreign Minister Laurel pointed out at the ASEAN foreign ministerial meeting, only if there is continual international denunciation of Vietnam's armed intervention in Cambodia can the conflict in the region be settled as soon as possible and can peace and stability be restored. This ASEAN foreign ministerial meeting precisely played a positive role in this respect.

ASEAN DIALOGUE WITH WESTERN PARTNERS SUMMARIZED

[By Wang Yongsun]

[Text] Manila, June 27 (XINHUA) -- Six ASEAN nations wound up the two-day dialogue with their major Western partners here today with the latter expressing their support to the ASEAN's position on the Kampuchean problem.

The ASEAN six partners -- the United States, Japan, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the European Economic Community -- also showed their willingness to help ASEAN states tide over the current economic difficulties by opening further their markets to ASEAN goods and providing more assistance.

The annual dialogue forum immediately following the ASEAN foreign minister conference has become a fixed practice to promote better understanding and cooperation between ASEAN and its partners on important political and economic issues of mutual interest.

The Kampuchean problem was one of the major issues that drew serious attention of the dialogue participants. The dialogue partners in their discussion shared the ASEAN's view that the eight-point proposal offered by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK) is a reasonable, just and comprehensive framework for negotiation of a political settlement to the eight-year-long conflict in Kampuchea. They expressed their regrets at Vietnam's intransigent attitude towards the peaceful and political solution, and urged Vietnam to reconsider the eight-point proposal. They joined ASEAN in reiterating their calling for the withdrawal of the Vietnamese troops and leaving the Kampuchean people to solve the problem themselves.

Foreign ministers or representatives from the industrialized world also showed their appreciation of ASEAN efforts, and reiterated their support to ASEAN's initiatives to bring the Kampuchea war to a political settlement.

The two-day post ministerial dialogue meeting as well as the ASEAN foreign minister confernce also tackled the ticklish issue of trade protectionism by developed countries. ASEAN states presented the major problems besetting their economies and asked for concessions, particularly a liberalization of their trade policies.

ASEAN representatives pointed out that a rising tide of protectionism, a reduced flow of financial resources and a collapse of commodity prices have a particularly debilitating impact on the development processes of ASEAN and other developing countries. The total collapse of the prices of all the major commodities export on one hand and the continued increasing of the manufactured goods on the other has made ASEAN, being the major commodity producers and manufactured good importer, lose billions of U.S. dollars, they said.

Philippine Foreign Minister Salvador Laurel, chairman of the ASEAN foreign minister meeting, pointed out that despite numerous pledges of trade cooperation and easing of the protectionist measures, little has been done to remove the restrictive trade barriers, especially those restrictions on ASEAN exports to the industrialized countries. Thus, what they want now, the ASEAN foreign ministers indicated, is more actions and less words from the developed countries.

To the demands of ASEAN, the dialogue partners generally expressed their readiness and willingness to fight the protectionist trends and to take measures to find markets for ASEAN products. They agreed that the issue should be discussed in the GATT round of talks. However, they still differ in approaches, U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz assured ASEAN that the American Administration will continue to fight protectionism, but he demanded in return that other ASEAN partners do likewise, and "demonstrate an equal commitment to more open trade".

Japan, another ASEAN trade partner, promised new forms of aid. But its Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe in his dialogue with ASEAN counterparts chose to deviate from directly addressing to the issue of protectism, nor did he mention anything about much awaited liberal opening Japanese market to ASEAN products.

The European Economic Community, while admitting protectionism is a world wide problem, denied the accusation of engaging in protectionism. EEC representative Claude Cheysson denied that the EEC is protectionist, saying EEC countries remain the third largest market for ASEAN exports. He proposed the setting up of ASEAN-EEC joint ventures.

In short, this year's dialogue meeting has made better understanding of each other's position, especially the ASEAN got their partners' support for ASEAN's reasonable stand on the Kampuchean issue. But quite a few problems, particularly in the economic field, still remain unsolved.

MALAYSIA'S RITHAUDDEEN ON ASEAN TALKS, PRC TIES

OW291451 Bejing XINHUA in English 1412 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Manila, June 29 (XINHUA) -- Malaysian Foreign Minister Tengku Ahmad Rithauddeen stated here today that Malaysia was very satisfied with the results of the just concluded ministerial meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN).

He said, "ASEAN is successful because the member countries have been together almost 19 years. We have quite identical views on international issues. We have some differences, but we agree on basic and fundamental issues.

Turning to Malaysia's relations with China, the foreign minister said, "It is important for Malaysia to develop good relations with China, because China is not far from this part of the world."

He said that through the Malaysian prime minister's visit to China last November, "We Malaysians understand China's position and China also knows our position. So nothing can stop us to develop good relations."

He said, "We should develop trade and some investment and other economic relations, because Malaysia would like to participate in the development of China."

He noted that there are many ongoing cooperation projects and joint ventures between Malaysia and China. Three agreements on trade, shipping and investment guarantee are being discussed. "We should try our best to finalize the agreements in order to promote more trade between the two countries," he said.

RENMIN RIBAO LAUDS HU'S SUCCESSFUL EUROPEAN TOUR

HK270238 Beijing RENMIN OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 27 Jun 86 p 2

[Editorial: "Cooperate Hand in Hand and Advance Toward the Future -- Warmly Greeting the Complete Success of General Secretary Hu Yaobang's Visit to Western Europe"]

[Text] General Secretary Hu Yaobang concluded his official visit to Britian, the FRG, France, and Italy on 23 June and returned to Beijing yesterday. This visit was the first visit made by a CPC general secretary to Western Europe, and was a major diplomatic step taken by our country to further develop friendly and cooperative relations with Western Europe. This important visit has made positive contributions to the maintenance of world peace, and has effectively promoted long-term and stable cooperative relations between China and Western Europe. The visit has achieved the purpose of "deepening mutual understanding, strengthening friendship, expanding cooperation, and safeguarding peace." Thus it was a completely successful visit.

Safeguarding world peace is a common desire of both China and Western Europe. During his visit to the Western European countries, General Secretary Hu stated emphatically that although the danger of war still exists, the forces for safeguarding peace are growing. At the same time, he made clear the principled stand of the Chinese Government and the Chinese people on the issue of maintaining world peace: China will support all undertakings which are favorable to world peace and stability and will oppose all hegemonist actions. Opinion in Western Europe held that this clear-cut stand which represents the wishes of the one billion Chinese people greatly inspired the people in Western Europe, and strengthened people's confidence in maintaining world peace. When a united and strong Europe which holds its destiny in its own hands, and an economically developing China which pursues an independent policy, strengthen cooperation and support each other, this undoubtedly will be an important factor in maintaining world peace and stability.

Both China and Western Europe need a peaceful environment for their development. On various occasions during his visit to the West European countries, General Secretary Hu made it clear from different angles that prolonged and stable cooperation between China and Western Europe is in the interests of both sides. He also announced solemnly: "China is trying to develop prolonged economic cooperation with Europe," is determined to "promote the continuous and steady development of the Chinese economy by adopting reform and open policies," and "will pursue an independent and peaceful diplomatic policy to ensure the continuity of the nation's concentration on economic construction." This is the basic national policy of our country, which will never change. During his visit, General Secretary Hu Yaobang also mentioned the need to take a scientific attitude toward Marxism. He pointed out that Marxism is a science that needs to be continuously developed and enriched in the course of practice. All these remarks attracted close attention and evoked strong reactions among West European people in all circles. They said that the visit and speeches of General Secretary Hu gave them "new ideas." That is, the "new process" of reform and opening up in China will be firmly continued, and Europe should strive to enhance the quality of its economic and technolgical cooeration with China.

General Secretary Hu's visit has not only greatly developed friendship and cooperation between China and Western Europe, but has also helped Western Europe understand China more deeply and extensively, thus increasing Western Europe's friendly feelings toward China. During the visit to the four countries, the CPC general secretary was always recived in a warm, friendly, and solemn atmosphere.

His talks with leaders of the four countries reached agreement on a wide range of issues. He also met with many statesmen of both ruling and opposition parties and people in all circles in these countries. Among the people he met, there were not only old friends, but also many new friends. The general secretary also held three press conferences and a joint press conference, which also provided people with a key to understanding China. Although the statesmen of the ruling and opposition parties in these four European countries differ in their political opinions, they hold an identical viewpoint on the need to develop friendship and cooperation with China. In the period of half a month, the press and mass media, including the national and local TV networks in the four West European countries, gave wide coverage to reports about General Secretary Hu's visit. As a West European television station said, the friendly and cooperative relationship between China and Western Europe "has taken root in the hearts of the people."

"The most valuable wealth of mankind is hope. If we are merely content with the present conditions, we would not go ahead and sow seeds." During his visit to Western Europe, General Secretary Hu quoted this famous remark by the famous philospher Voltaire, to encoure people to set their sights far ahead. He called for "making Sino-European friendly relations continue to develop for a long time" and for China and Western Europe to join hands to sow seeds for lasting world peace!"

PRC, PORTUGAL TALKS ON MACAO TO BEGIN 30 JUNE

Portuguese Delegation Arrives

[Text] Bejing, June 27 (XINHUA) -- A Portuguese Government delegation arrived here today to attend the first round of Sino-Portuguese talks on the future of Macao. The talks will be held on Monday and Tuesday in Beijing.

Zhou Nan, vice-minister of foreign affairs, who will be head of the Chinese side at the talks, greeted the Portugese delegation, which is being led by Rui Medina. Extending his welcome to the delegation, Zhou said very good relations exist between China and Portugal. He is convinced that the talks between the two governments to solve the problem over Macao, which has been left over from history, would be conducted very harmoniously and smoothly. Zhou said the talks between the two friendly countries would take the form of a relationship between partners not opponents.

Medina said he fully agreed, adding: "What I want to say, you have already said."

Shaking hands with Medina, Zhou said: "We not only hope for harmonious talk, but also wish you a happy stay here." He invited Medina and his party to visit Chengde, and 18th century summer mountain resort in Hebei Province, after the talks. Medina accepted.

Medina, 61, has served as portuguese ambassador in Beirut, Helsinki, Stockholm and Berlin, and as head of the Department of Treaties and Law of the Foreign Ministry.

Two other members of the delegatin, Nuno Lorena, 50, and Joao Ascensao, 64, arrived here today, and three others are due tomorrow.

First Round Of Talks Begins

[Text] Beijing, June 30 (XINHUA) -- China and Portugal began their first round of talks on Macao at the Diaoyutai State Guest House here this morning.

When the Portuguese delegation arrived, they were greeted by Zhou Nan, China's vice-minister of foreign affairs and head of the Chinese delegation. Zhou Nan extended warm welcome to Ruy Medina and his party, saying that the coming talks between China and Portugal are important and will be beneficial to both.

Zhou recalled his March visit to Portugal and said he was impressed with the beautiful landscape of the country.

Medina said he feels honored to represent his country in the talks. He said he was glad that the Chinese side has a realistic understanding of the questions to be discussed between them, as well as of Portugal and Europe as a whole.

Attending the talks as advisor to the Portuguese delegation was also Portuguese Ambassador to China Octavio N. Valerio.

The second session of the first round of talks is scheduled for tomorrow.

NEW PORTUGUESE SOCIALIST LEADER MEETS CPC GROUP

[Text] Lisbon, June 29 (XINHUA) -- The Portuguese Socialist Party today elected Vitor Constancio as general secretary and Tito de Morais as chairman at the close of its three-day sixth national congress. The 1,500 delegates approved a revamped party platform, noting that the Socialist Party is a political organization which seeks solutions to national problems in a democratic society and is capable of responding to the social and political demands of the times.

The new platform vows to implement democracy in politics, economy, culture and society, and to maintain a foreign policy for state interest and national independence. It also pledges to work for the establishment of a new international order based on preserving peace and human rights.

Constancio, 42, former Central Bank governor and former finance minister, joined the party in 1975 and entered the party's secretariat in 1981.

After the congress concluded, Constancio met with Zhou Jie, deputy director of the General Office of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China. Constancio accepted the invitation and expressed the hope there will be lasting development of relations between the two parties.

FRG'S KOHL LAUDS PRC TIES, URGES ARMS CONTROL

[Text] Bonn, June 25 (XINHUA) -- Federal German Chancellor Helmut Kohl today praised his country's relations with China, saying they were strengthening following fruitful political dialogue and increasing economic ties between the two countries. In a speech to the German Foreign Affairs Association on Federal Germany's Foreign Policy, Kohl pointed to the recent visit by Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang as evidence of the "increasingly closer" ties between the two countries.

Saying that China "under the leadership of Deng Xiaoping, has opened its door to the outside world and has undertaken more international obligations," Kohl said that scientific and technological cooperation and exchanges with China are growing rapidly. He added that it would be ideal if imports from China could grow as fast as Federal German exports.

Referring to the situation in the East Asian and Pacific region, Kohl said the region is assuming ever greater importance in the world both politically and economically, and that his country has been strengthening ties with it since 1982 through repeated official visits.

Like most member countries of the United Nations, Federal Germany has called on the Soviet Union to pull its troops out of Afghanistan and end its war against the Afghan people, Kohl said. Kohl appealed to both the United States and the Soviet Union to grasp all opportunities for arms reduction and expressed confidence that the U.S.-Soviet summit will be held this year. If the summit actually took place, Kohl said, it would boost East-West dialogue and bring arms reduction talks to a more positive stage. Kohl said both Federal Germany and the West want a comprehensive ban on medium-to-long-range weapons that includes short-to-medium-range weapons. They also want to see a ban on chemical weapons worldwide, a comprehensive ban on nuclear tests and progress in cutting conventional weaponry.

He spoke positively of the new Soviet leadership's stance on East-West relations, saying there has been signs since Gorbachev assumed office that the Soviet Union is interested in bringing about essential improvement in East-West relations and does not want to limit the relations to security policies only. He said he supports Gorbachev's idea that military means are not adequate to ensure security, which should be a political task shared by both the East and the West. Kohl said that Moscow now no longer utterly rejects the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, also known as the "star wars" program, and has shown some flexibility in the Geneva negotiations. There might have been changes made by the new Soviet leadership in its internal and external policy, Kohl said.

He stressed that Federal Germany today still attaches "prime importance" to relations with the Soviet Union and will try to enter into political dialogue with it.

On relations with the United States, Kohl said Europeans and Americans have difficulty understanding each other, but no substantial differences separate them.

Kohl also said he still wants the unified internal market within the European Economic Community to be formed in 1992, capital flow among EEC countries liberalized and trade barriers removed. Meanwhile, Federal German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrick Genscher, in a speech on Monday, predicted "profound change" in East-West relations, and said his country should be a "motivating force" in the betterment of East-West relations.

HU YAOBANG CONGRATULATES SFRY'S RENOVICA

He also expressed the hope for further consolidation and development of the friendship between the two parties, countries and peoples of Yugoslavia and China.

LEAGUE OF COMMUNISTS OF YUGOSLAVIA CONGRESS ENDS

'Roundup' Reviews Congress

["Roundup: Yugoslav Party Congress Stresses Unity and Self-Management System -- (by Li Daijun)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Belgrade, June 29 (XINHUA) -- The 13th Congress of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia which ended Saturday stayed with the country's socialist self-management system and strengthened party unity. At the four-day party forum, delegates not only criticized mistakes in the party's work, but also made many useful proposals to help the party leadership improve their work.

The delegates hoped that the party would enhance its unity and play a more active role in perfecting the country's socialist self-management system and in stabilizing the national economy through the congress. They noted that the entire party should carry out the resolutions adopted by the congress and that the situation wherein party resolutions have frequently not been implemented by local organizations in recent years must be changed. Only by leading the country out of its current social and economic crisis can the party increase its prestige among the masses, they said.

Milanko Renovica, new president of the Presidency of the party Central Committee, said at the end of the congress that all the delegates believe the only way to overcome the difficulties facing the country is "to perfect the socialist self-management system" and to develop the national economy by relying on the unity of the party and the people.

Another impressive thing at the party forum was that the plenary session of the congress elected the new Central Committee by secret ballot instead of approving the lists of names put forward by the local and army party congresses. Under this new system, a Central Committee member must be supported by two thirds of the ballots cast.

The new election method was aimed at electing those who care for the interests of the entire country and won the support of the entire party. Meanwhile, the measure is also conducive to increasing the accountability of the Central Committee members of the entire party rather than just the republics or autonomous provinces they represent.

Out of 165 central committee members chosen by this congress, 127 are new and their average age in 46 years, making the members of the new central committee on average six years younger than their predecessors.

The new presidency of the party Central Committee consists of 23 members, among whom 14 are newly-elected. They are intelligent, competent, trusted by the entire party and are determined to implement the resolutions of the congress.

Stresses Need for Economic Reform

[Text] Belgrade, June 27 (XINHUA) -- The League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) has stressed that the only way to rid the country of its socio-economic problems is through reform. The LCY Central Committee's report, approved today by the league's 13th congress, listed its present tasks as: to overcome the economic crisis, to ensure a stable economic growth, to create favorable conditions for further develpment of socialist self-management, to strengthen the unity and equity among all nationalities, to enhance the league's role in political and ideological guidance, and to expand the country's international role in non-aligned movement and other international affairs.

The report reviewed the LCY's work since the last congress four years ago and analysed the international situation. It said socialism in the world faces new challenges in its development. New socialist ways and approaches have emerged. The report pointed out that China has been undergoing a dramatic change in its efforts to build socialism with distinctively Chinese characteristics. The report also said that Yugoslavia has maintained smooth relations both with the Soviet Union and the United States.

JARUZELSKI ADDRESSES 10TH POLISH CONGRESS OPENING

[Text] Warsaw, June 29 (XINHUA) -- Polish leader Wojciech Jaruzelski today opened the 10th Congress of the Ruling United Workers' Party with a call for faster restructuring of the country's economy. In a keynote address to the congress, Jaruzelski said economic reforms designed to increase efficiency should be carried out "at a drastically accelerated pace". Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev is among the foreign party delegates attending the congress.

Jaruzelski noted in his report on behalf of the Central Committee that the primary task of the party in developing socialism in Poland is to intensify the process of development so as to make up for lost time and close the gap between Poland and the scientifically and economically advanced countries.

The 1980 Solidarity labor unrest and the ensuing Western economic sanctions plunged Poland into social chaos and pushed it to the verge of economic collapse. The three-year Economic Stabilization Program (1983-85), though it brought about a gradual economic recovery, failed to return the economy to its pre-solidarity 1979 level.

Jaruzelski told the congress that, in order to develop faster, profound changes must be made in all spheres of life, both materially and ideologically. The principal levers for efficiency in Poland's economy, he explained, are scientific progress, structural reforms, eradication of waste, improved product quality and expanded participation by Poland in the international division of labor.

Jaruzelski also outlined measures to combat the rising inflation, which is a constant public complaint. He said that the most important thing is to restore economic balance, link the workers' wages with their output, increase commodity production, reduce production costs and adjust prices. The party chief added that the immediate social objectives in coming years are improved housing and food supplies, expanded and modernized educational facilties, better medicare and environmental protection. The Congress is being attended by 1,776 delegates representing the party's 2.12 million members. Representatives of Poland's United Peasants Party, Democratic Party, Patriotic Movement for National Rebirth, trade unions, youth organizations and other social groups were invited to the congress.

Urges End to Arms Race

[Text] Warsaw, June 29 (XINHUA) -- Polish leader Wojciech Jaruzelski said today that Eastern and Western Europe, which are burdened by an unprecendented buildup of armaments, should make simultaneous efforts to arrest the arms race. In a keynote address to the 10th Congress of Poland's Ruling United Workers' Party, Jaruzelski declared that Poland is prepared to actively participate in disarmament talks and make its due contribution to an agreement on concrete measures for balanced disarmament in various categories.

Voicing full support for Soviet peace proposals, the Polish leader said that eliminating the threat of a nuclear catastrophe is the primary task for the Polish people and indeed for civilized humanity. Jaruzelski, while accusing the United States of being the principal advocate and executor of policies and actions which are detrimental to the interest of Poland, reiterated that his country's unbreakable alliance and friendship with the Soviet Union is the cornerstone of its foreign policy.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev was sitting with other foreign dignitaries in the Hall of Culture in Warsaw when Jaruzelski delivered his four-hour speech to the 1,776 representatives attending the congress.

'Formidable Difficulties' Exist

["News Analysis: A Party Congress Faced With Enormous Tasks (by Wen Youren)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Warsaw, June 26 (XINHUA) -- The 10th Congress of the Polish United Workers' Party, which opens June 29, will be the most important event in the country's political life since the Solidarity labor unrest rocked the nation in the early 1980's. The Congress will take stock of the accomplishments and setbacks of the party in steering the country through the most difficult time in post-war history, and chart a course for further political stability and quicker economic recovery.

Compared with conditions in 1981 when the previous congress was held and in 1982 immediately after martial law was imposed, things in Poland are much better today and the nation could have reason to heave a sigh of relief. But formidable difficulties still exist and no one should be overly optimistic.

The tasks set in the 1983-85 economic stabilization program have been largely achieved, with a aggregate 15.7 percent increase in national income, a 16 percent rise in industrial output, a 10 percent expansion of agricultural production and a 13 percent increase in consumption for the average Pole. In 1982 when the program began, scarcity of consumer goods was prevalent, and ration coupons were needed for dozens of daily necessities. Today, shops are well stocked with an increasing variety of goods and only meat remains rationed.

But still, many things are still beyond the reach of the average person in the street and, as Prime Minister Zbigniew Messner rightly said, the country "is still in a difficult economic situation". National income in 1985 was 10 percent lower that the pre-solidarity 1979 level. If the rapidly expanding population is considered, the country's per capita national income was even lower -- 14.3 percent below the 1979 figure. Government financial deficit in 1985 reached 125 billion zlotys (about 735 million U.S. dollars) and retail prices and service charges went up by 14.7 percent.

Economic management remains poor and inefficient as the econonmic reforms initiated in 1982 have encountered resistance from both within and without the party. Foreign debt owed to the West swelled to 31.2 billion U.S. dollars at the end of the first quarter of this year, on top of another 5.8 billion roubles (about 6.4 billion U.S. dollars) debt with the Soviet Union and East European countries. The gradual economic recovery and the government policy of dialogue and consultation with various political forces have made the once turbulent political scene increasingly quiet. The influence of the underground solidarity, which plunged the country into utter chaos in its heyday, has been waning. Eight members of its interim coordinating committee including Zbigniew Bujak have been arrested and two others have given themselves up to the police. Its calls for boycotts of local and parliamentary elections and strikes against price increases received little public response. As a result, the committee announced last December that it would no longer organize strikes or street demonstrations.

Meanwhile, the "confidence crisis" that emerged in the early 1980's has eased to a certain degree and the party is regaining social trust. Party membership, which diminished by one third in the early 1980s due to mass quitting, began to expand in 1985, with half of its new blood being young people. On the other hand, the remnants of the underground solidarity and other opposition forces are still very active and refuse to cooperate with government. Quite a few citizens remain skeptical of government policies and indifferent to their work, resulting in low productivity. This suggests that much remains to be done by the party before the society is fully mobilized in its social and economic endeavors.

The documents prepared for the congress indicate that the primary task of the gathering will be to adopt the party's first program and formulate future social and economic policies which emphasize respect for the nation's unique characteristics in socialist construction. In particular, it will push the economic reforms into their second phase.

Top priority will be given to the restructuring of the central administrative institutions, and market forces and scientific accelerated economic development.

ZAMBIAN PARTY DELEGATION ARRIVES 27 JUN

[Text] Beijing, June 27 (XINHUA) -- A delegation from the Zambian United National Independence Party led by its General Secretary A.G. Zulu arrived here by air today for a visit to China at the invitation of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee.

The visitors were greeted at the airport by Jiang Guanghua, deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee, and diplomatic envoys of some African countries and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in China.

Talks With Tian Jiyun

[Text] Beijing, June 28 (XINHUA) -- Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party (CPC) Central Committee and vice premier, and A.G. Zulu, general secretary of the Zambian United National Independence Party (ZUNIP), held talks here this afternoon. They expressed satisfaction with the smooth development of friendship and cooperation between the two countries and the two governments thanks to their joint efforts. Both sides agreed to sign a protocol on further cooperation between the two parties. The two leaders briefed each other on the economic development of their respective countries.

Tian praised Zambia's reform and readjutment measures effective in overcoming economic difficulties resulting from unreasonable international economic order. He added that China is willing to strengthen economic cooperation with Zambia.

Zulu thanked China for supporting Zambia in its efforts to consolidate national independence, oppose outside aggression and develop economy. Zulu said the situation in Namibia and South Africa is very upsetting. He condemned the South African authorities for attacking neighbors, attempting to split Angola and suppressing the South African people. He said what had happened in South Africa constitutes threat to world peace, adding that economic sactions should be imposed on South Africa.

Tian Jiyun reiterated China's condemnation of the South African authorities for pursuing the policy of apartheid, attacking neighbors and illegally occupying Namibia. He stressed that China firmly supports South African countries and peoples in their struggle for safeguarding national independence and state sovereignty.

The Zambian guests were honored at a banquet given by Tian Jiyun here this evening.

ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS BENIN FOREIGN MINISTER AFFO

[Text] Beijing, June 27 (XINHUA) -- China is willing to seek new cooperation with Benin in such fields as management and technology, while continuing their cooperation in existing ways. This was stated by Premier Zhao Ziyang at a meeting with Frederic Affo, minister of foreign affairs and cooperation of Benin.

Zhao expressed the belief that there exists a promising future for the two countries to cooperate in new fields. He said the development of friendship between the two peoples is China's set policy.

Affo said Beninese people are satisfied with their cooperation with China and will make further efforts to develop the cooperation which is suitable for practical conditions in Benin. Affo said Benin is willing to expand the fields of bilateral cooperation to mining industry and fishery. He hoped that China would provide continuous aid in management and technology for already-completed cooperative projects in his country.

During the meeting Affo conveyed greetings from Beninese President Kerekou to Chinese leaders, saying the president attaches great importance to the development of cooperative relations between the two countries. Zhao Ziyang asked Affo to convey best regards from President Li Xiannian and himself to the Beninese president.

The delegation will leave here for a visit to Shanghai and Yantai in east China's Shandong Province tomorrow.

SOUTH AFRICA'S NEWS BLACKOUT POLICY RAPPED

["International Jottings" by Ru Sheng: "It Is Impossible To Block the Passage of Information"]

[Text] Botha, the chieftain of the South African authorities, imposed strict news censorship in his country when he slammed downed a state of emergency, prohibiting reporters and cameramen from approaching areas inhibited by black people or areas where "riots" might happen. In addition, all reports about the actions of the army and the police for "maintaining public order" are censored by his regime. The South African rulers thought that by taking these measures, they would be able to conceal from the whole world their atrocities in suppressing the black people. But what will this really result in?

A person's hand can never hide the sky from view. Facts show that the South African authorities can never block the reports about their bloody atrocities. These reports are all the more rapidly and widely spread around the world. Since the South African authorities imposed the state of emergency, more than 40 people have been killed and more than 3,000 people have been arrested. The police force broke in mosques and shot at Muslim women and children at memorial ceremonies with rubber bullets and tear gas; the army also forced its way into the churches of white people to smash the wreaths that people laid for the martyrs in Soweto. How can these events and other numerous scandals be concealed from the public eye? They have aroused the righteous indignation of the people throughout the world and have been strongly condemned by the international community.

In fact, such tricks as news blackouts were used by other fascists like Hitler in the past, but none of them succeeded in really blocking the spread of news reports; on the contrary, the evils would just more quickly be exposed to the light of day and thus aroused millions and millions of people to rise to oppose fascism and to finally bury these criminals. This is an inevitable fate that no reactionary rulers can evade. The racist authorities of South Africa will certainly come to no good end.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTS ON MIDDLE EAST CONFLICT

["Short" commentary: "Do Not Sadden the People and Gladden the Enemy"]

[Text] Large-scale armed clashes between forces defending the Palestinian refugee camps in West Beirut and the southern suburbs, and the "al-Amal" militia of the Lebanese Shiite Muslims have been going on for more than a month. Fierce fighting has resulted in several hundred casualties. The three Palestinian refugee camps in Sabra, Chatila, and (Brajenaibul) [bu la jie nai bau 1580 2139 2638 1143 1027] have been seriously damaged and the situation in West Beirut has deteriorated again. Chairman Yasir Arafat has, on many occasions, called urgently for a stop to the massacre in the refugee camps. The international community and the relevant quarters have also mediated in many ways. However, tensions in the refugee camps have not eased. This situation cannot but attract the concern of many Arab states. The Chinese government and people also show great concern over these events.

For a long time the Israeli policy of aggression and expansion has subjected the Palestinian people, and the Arab people, to repeated disasters.

In the struggle to resist the Israeli aggression and occupation, the Palestinian and Lebanese people have fought bloody battles and made major sacrifices. At present, Israel has not only hampered the peaceful reunification of Lebanon by continuously entrenching itself in southern Lebanon, but also refused to change its stubborn stand opposing the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Arab states, and wantonly tramped underfoot the national rights of the Palestinian people for independence, self-determination, and the establishment of their own country. Faced with a formidable foe, the fraternal Arab people can only unite in order to save themselves. Internal dispute can only sadden the people and gladden the enemy. We hope that all parties to the clashes will set store by the Palestinian and Arab national interest and cease the bloody clashes as soon as possible.

Due to complicated historical reasons, disputes and differences of opinion still exist among the Arab people. However, recovering lost territories and restoring the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people have always been common objectives for which the Arab nations have been fighting. At present, the situation in the Middle East is in turmoil. The great cause of the Arab nation has not been achieved. Resorting to force among brothers can only deepen the feud and hinder unity. This is detrimental to the overall interests of the Arab nation. The Chinese people have consistently supported the Palestinian, Lebanese and Arab people in their just struggle. We sincerely hope that all parties to the clashes will answer the calls and mediations of the international community, solve their disputes through peaceful consultation, become reconciled, and join forces to oppose the enemy.

LEBANESE PRESIDENT'S GULF STATES TOUR ANALYZED

["News analysis: Success and Failure of Lebanon President's Tour of Five Gulf States (by Xing Lizhu)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beirut, June 25 (XINHUA) -- Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil's five-Gulf-nation tour is generally believed to have reached his principal aim of boosting his image as a head of state in the Arab world. The Lebanese president has returned to Beirut after winding up his Gulf tour which took him to the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Oman, Kuwait and Qatar.

Al-Jumayyil, who once complained of being the "least envied president in the world", was boycotted by his country's Muslim leaders since he refused to ratify the Syrian-sponsored tripartite peace agreement signed by leaders of three main Christian and muslim militia groups last December. Against the mounting pressure and isolation, Al-Jumayyil went abroad to seek international help. But his Gulf tour was described as "more important than his previous visits to France, Tunisia, Morocco and Romania. During his talks with leaders of the five Arab states, President al-Jumayyil was reportedly assured of "full support" for his efforts to maintain his country's independence, sovereignty and territorial intergeiry. He also reportedly won their support for his political and reconstruction plan to enable the war-weary Lebanese people to come out of their present national crisis. It is disclosed here that Al-Jumayyil's political and reconstruction plan includes reconsidering the tripartite accord before it is handed over to the parliament for amendment and discussion.

President al-Jumayyil, who is a Christian Maronite, explained to the Muslim Arab leaders why he rejected the tripartite accord. He listed the following reasons.

-- A president cannot ratify and support any pact without being consulted by the constitutional organs;

-- A national peace solution must involve all parties concerned, not militia leaders only;

-- A basic accord should be reached between Syrian President Hafiz al-Asad and himself; and

-- The tripartite accord cannot be taken as a sound basis for ending the Lebanese crisis and, therefore, must be amended.

He asked the Gulf leaders to mediate between Assad and himself to restore their dialogue as soon as possible.

Al-Jumayyil reportedly intends to continue his visit to Saudi Arabia and Jordan later this month and may also go to the United States to seek further support for his peace plan. Despite his success in winning political and moral support, Al-Jumayyil is reported to have failed in persuading these oil-rich nations to resume their economic assistance to Lebanon in accordance with the 1976 Baghdad summit resolution.

The Gulf states have halted the aid since Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982 and have promised to restore their donations whenever the Lebanon's civil war stops and the government resumes its full function. Lebanon's 11-year-old civil war is plunging the country into a serious crisis and the economic and social situation is worsening. The once hard currency "Lebanese pound" has plummeted to a record low against the U.S. dollar. It devaluated by 150 percent within half a year to the current 46 pounds for one dollar.

Observers here believe that it remains very difficult for Al-Jumayyil to rescue his country out of the present political and economic crisis.

IRANIAN ENVOY TO PRC ON ECONOMIC RELATIONS

LD242129 Tehran IRNA in English 1752 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 24, IRNA -- Irano-Chinese joint economic session will be held here soon according to Iran's outgoing ambassador to the Chinese capital 'Ali Khorram on Tuesday.

Khorram said also in a meeting with China's Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, Mr. Chung, that Iran-China bilateral relations have expanded in the past four years. "Although commercial cooperation between the two countries is not what it can be, however, it remains at a good level", said Khorram.

Khorram said Iran's Deputy Prime Minister Mr. Mirzadeh is to visit Beijing in a near future at the invitation of a top advisor of the Chinese Government. The Iranian ambassador also called on the Chinese minister to fully execute bilateral oil agreements concluded between the two countries. He also expressed hope that China would step-up its import of Iranian non-oil commodities.

In response the Chinese minister expressed satisfaction over the growth of bilateral relations including trade cooperation during the past few years. He furthermore assured the Iranian ambassador that he would do his best to ensure that the joint economic session ends a success.

SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY MEETING STRESSES FREEDOM

RENMIN RIBAO Editorial

[Text] Beijing, June 28 (XINHUA) -- An editorial in the PEOPLE's DAILY today called for creating "a democratic and harmonious academic environment" to enable scientists and technicians to fully display their abilities.

"This makes it necessary to carry out to the letter the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend, which is the only correct guideline for developing science," said the editorial marking the closing of the Third National Congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology here Friday.

"In the academic field, people should be free to air any point of view, criticise any point of view and reply to criticism," it said, noting that people are protected by China's Constitution in doing so.

The editorial told all Communist Party and government leaders not to intervene at will in academic disputes, still less support one academic point of view by administrative means while opposing another.

It said: "As channels for the party and government to contact and unite people with technical expertise, the Association for Science and Technology is duty-bound to help leaders at all levels implement the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend."

It urged leaders to solicit different views from scientists and technicians when making decisions on major research topics, economic construction and social development.

The editorial described spreading technical expertise among government employees and the public as a "historical task" for promoting the country's reforms, material civilization and socialist ethics.

This task falls first on the shoulders of millions of ordinary Chinese scientists and technicians, as well as members of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology.

A commentary in the GUANGMING DAILY, which is read widely by intellectuals, today called on scientists and technicians to be models in promoting socialist culture and morality, while improving their professional proficiency.

CHINA DAILY Comments

HK270148 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 27 Jun 86 p 4

[By CHINA DAILY commentator]

[Text] The Chinese Association for Science and Technology is scheduled to close its national meeting today, and the nation salutes its scientists.

This parade of the nation's inventive power has been congratulated by the central leadership of the Communist Party and all other major citizens' organizations. Press interviews of leading scientists are being highlighted in the media.

Creative men and women are highly regarded in China today. They may have been ignored or even wronged during the "Cultural Revolution" of the late 1960s and early 70s. But their condition began to improve after December 1978 when the party re-oriented its major policies.

Now China, recovered from the devastation of the "Cultural Revolution" when science and technology made little progress, is leading a modernizaton drive aimed at providing the country with a face-lift. Though still eager for development, it can take pride in its own advance in pure science and in the fields of industry, agriculture, space and medicine.

The current meeting was convened as the nation embarks on its Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90), as called for by the National People's Congress session last spring. Thus, the association as a popular organization and an important tie for uniting scientists with the Party and government, has made clear its determination to join in translating the development programme into reality.

It should be noted that the key to the success of scientists; endeavours lies in reforming the existing system of scientific and technological research, to connect it effectively with agricultural and industrial production as well as education. In the coming years, they are expected to help add to the economic power the nation is still short of, especially in the energy industry, transport and communication sectors, and production of materials.

Their 'sparking programme" initiated to buttress rural enterprises should prove able to stimulate further growth of market-oriented production. And help to the poor regions in particular should bring about tangible results.

Scientists also need exchanges among themselves and with colleagues abroad. This will not only help the flow of information, spread new theories, and speed up technological progress, but also facilitate the ultimate reform of the scientific and technogical research setup in China. Undoubtedly, the Chinese Association for Science and Technology can play an active role in all these fields. Shouldering responsibility for spearheading the nation's future development, scientists themselves deserve more understanding, encouragement and support from the rest of society. That of the leadership is certainly the most important.

Scientists must enjoy the freedom to express their views and be guaranteed access to participate in the decision-making process on affairs related to their specific fields. This is a prerequisite for the healthy development of the nation's science and technology and a successful modernization drive as well.

Freedom of Ideas Stressed

[Text] Two thousand leading scientists put their weight yesterday behind the policy of allowing more freedom of ideas in the academic world.

The third National Congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, which ended yesterday, approved a resolution which called for the adoption of the policy of "letting 100 schools of thought contend" into the association's constitution.

The resolution also stressed the principle: "Economic development depends on the advancement of science and technology, and science and technology must serve economic development."

The association has agreed to report the views and demands of scientists and technicians to the Communist Party and government, and to defend their legitimate rights. A work report by outgoing association president Zhou Peiyuan was also approved at the meeting.

Newly-elected President Qian Xuesen said: "This meeting has developed democracy and strengthened unity among scientists and technicians."

Qian said Chinese scientific and technical workers were now mobilized to take part in the nationwide reforms, and to make great contributions to the country.

Government and party leaders attending the closing session included Hu Qili, Fang Yi, Li Peng, Hu Qiaomu, Zhang Jingfu and Song Jian. Party and State leaders Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang, Peng Zhen, Deng Yingchao and Ulanhu met and had a picture taken yesterday afternoon with all deputies attending the congress.

[Text] Beijing, June 27 (XINHUA) -- Qian Xuesen, a scientist who helped develop China's atomic bomb, was elected president of the country's 6.5-million-member Association for Science and Technology today.

Qian, 74, who has also been a key figure in China's missile and satellite programs, told XINHUA he wanted to "unite the association to help wipe out backwardness, superstition and ignorance."

He said it is in the national interest for the "policy of 'let a hundred schools of thought contend' to persist in scientific discussions."

At an association meeting here this morning, Fang Yi, a member of the State Council, China's highest governing body, praised Qian for his "profound knowledge, patriotic enthusiasm and contributions to the country's sciences and technology."

Qian Xuesen Addresses Meeting

[Excerpts] Beijing, 27 Jun (XINHUA) -- After successfully fulfilling its various tasks, the Third National Congress of the China Association for Science and Technology closed today in Beijing.

Attending the closing ceremony were Hu Qili, Fang Yi, Li Peng, Hu Qiaomu, Yan Jici, Zhang Jingfu, Song Jian, Zhou Peiyuan, Wang Guangying, Mao Yisheng, and Qian Xuesen.

The meeting adopted a resolution to endorse the "Report on the Work of the China Association for Science and Technology" by Zhou Peiyuan, and the "Regulations of the China Association for Science and Technology."

The congress issued certificates to the honorary chairman and vice chairmen of the Science and Technology Association, and announced the namelist of the chairman, vice chairmen and standing committee members of the Third National Committee of the China Association for Science and Technology.

Qian Xuesen, newly-elected chairman of the Science and Technology Association, delivered a closing speech. He said: At the opening ceremony of the congress, Comrade Hu Qili made an important speech on behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council. Today, Deng Xiaoping and other leading comrades at the central level have cordially met with all the deputies to the congress. We are determined to live up to the expectation of the party and the people. In carrying out our work in the future, we must concentrate our efforts on reforming the system for the development of science and technology, unswervingly cater to the needs of economic construction, and serve the four modernizations program. At the same time, we must bring into full play the role of science and technology in promoting spiritual civilization, and struggle against those who are ignorant, superstitious, and backward. In promoting exchanges with scholars at home and abroad, we must continue to adhere to the principle of letting a hundred schools of thought contend, and promote scientific development and technical progress.

Qian Xuesen hoped that, after going back to their respective units, the deputies would earnestly study the speeches by the central leading comrades, relay the guidelines laid down by the congress, strive to overcome the difficulties that they may possibly encounter on their road of advance, implement the various tasks put forward by the congress, persistently carry out reform, give full play to democracy, seek no false reputation, perform more actual deeds and work harder than ever before to build the "home for scientists and technicians."

Song Jian on Promoting Science

[Text] Beijing, 25 Jun (XINHUA) -- At the Third National Congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, Song Jian, state councillor and chairman of the State Science and Technological Commission, delivered a speech. In it, he said that the Association for Science and Technology is a bridge by which science and technology can be applied to economic construction and popularized among the people. This bridge will play an even more significant role in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

He said: The 138 national societies and other organizations, with a membership of 1.8 million, are affiliated with the Science and Technology Association. Through the various local associations and the various local academic societies, its 1.8 million members are in contact with another 6-7 million scientists and technicians. This is a tremendous force. Therefore, the Science and Technology Association is an extremely important link in promoting Chinese science and technology. The various government organs that are working in the field of science and technology should give the necessary financial support and help to the association and its affiliated economic societies.

Song Jian pointed out: Since the Second National Congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, the association's various branches and affiliated societies have organized scientists and technicians in various fields to go into mountainous and rural areas and into industrial and mining districts in order to carry out mass activities promoting science and technology. They have done a great deal of work on invigorating the local economy, helping to make policy decisions, and rendering technical services. The consultations and services in the field of science and technology provided by the association have won widespread acclaim and praise from all sectors of the party, government and society. He hoped that the Science and Technology will continue to make contributions to implementing the party's policy on the development of science and technology.

He said: In order to develop the world economy and make breakthroughs in science and technology, scientists and technicians must fight on two fronts. There is no doubt that the main scientific and technological forces must be deployed on the main battlefield, which is to serve the task of quadrupling the total agricultural and industrial output by the turn of the century. At the same time, we must also organize a contingent of competent and outstanding scientists and technicians to work hard in the field of new high technology and in basic scientific research. We must try to keep track of the latest new developments in science and technology, make new breakthroughs whenever possible, and approach and catch up with the world's achievements in science and technology. He said: The various academic societies affiliated with the Science and Technology Association are in contact with nearly all the outstanding scientists in China. They become a large treasure house of competent and qualified scientists and technicians. We hope that the science and technology association and its affiliated academic societies will play an even more significant role in following the new trends of world developments in science and technology and in promoting new, high technology.

On the issue of building the Science and Technology Association into a "Home for scientists and technicians." Song Jian said: the various academic societies affiliated with the science and technology association should take it as a strategic task to admit more young scientific and technical workers. More young scientific and technical workers should participate in the various activities of this community. Only by doing so will it be possible for the various academic societies affiliated with the Science and Technology Association to flourish, face the future, and meet the needs of the world.

He said: The Science and Technology Association should also become a great community where scientific researchers can freely carry out discussions, learn from each other, and closely cooperate with each other so that scientific and technical circles as a whole are marked by unity, friendship and cooperation. The spirit of democracy, freedom, and creativeness must be brought into full play in the field of science and technology.

Song Jian also pointed out: We should strengthen the alliance between workers in the field of natural sciences and those in the field of social sciences, and integrate science and technology with the economy and society. He hoped that the Science and Technology Association will not only become the home of workers in the field of natural sciences, but also provide more opportunities and better conditions to integrate social sciences with natural sciences.

Fang Yi Speaks

[Text] Beijing, 27 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Third National Committee of the China Association for Science and Technology held its first meeting this morning to elect its chairman, vice chairmen and standing committee members, forming the new leadership of the association. On behalf of the party Central Commitee and the State Council, Fang Yi, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and state councillor, attended the meeting to extend his warm greetings and deliver a speech. He said: The "Third National Congress" of the China Association for Science and Technology will definitely become a starting point for creating a new situation in doing the work of the association, and turn a new page in the association's annals.

Currently, extensive reform is being carried out in the course of implementing the "Seventh 5-Year Plan." This has given the Science and Technology Association an arduous and glorious task, and opened up a boundless vista for its invigoration. From now on, the Science and Technology Association should keep pace with reform, persistently carry it out, promote it, and play an even greater role in its implementation. Particular efforts must be made to admit more outstanding middle-aged and young scientists and technicians into the association and help China build a large contingent of scientists and technicians, who are more competent than those of the previous generation. This is the key to developing the cause of science and technology in China.

He emphatically pointed out: The science and technology association acts as a link between the party and government on one hand and scientists and technicians on the other. It is the assistant to the party and government in developing the cause of science and technology.

Naturally, the Science and Technology Association must take the initiative in playing its role in this regard. However, party committees and governments at all levels must also attach great importance to, and support, the association in its work. We should realize that the greater role science and technology play in promoting economic construction and the better socialist democracy and the legal system become, the greater our need to bring into full play the role of the science and technology association. This is an important embodiment of the party's mass line in the new historical period.

Later, Qian Xuesen, newly-elected chairman of the Science and Technology Association, spoke. He pointed out: From now on, the China Association for Science and Technology must continue to give full play ot its predominance as a mass organization, and make new contributions to accelerating the pace of realizing China's four modernizations program.

Hu Qili Speech

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jun (XINHUA) -- Speech at the Third National Congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, 23 June 1986: by Hu Qili:

Delegates, comrades, and friends:

At this ceremonial opening of the Third National Congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, on behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, I extend warm congratulations to the congress and cordial regards to all the delegates and, through you, to the scientists and scientific-technological workers on all fronts throughout the country!

In the spring of 1980, the Chinese Association for Science and Technology held its second national congress. It has now been more than 6 years since that time. During this period, our reform has spread from the countryside to the cities and expanded from the economic to the educational, scientific, and technological areas. At the same time, an intensive change has appeared in our country's outlook, and universally acknowledged achievements have been made in our socialist modernization program. Meanwhile, the front of scientific-technological work, which is an important aspect of our socialist cause, is in a quite gratifying state.

The reform of the science and technology management system is developing in a healthy way, and the strategic policies that economic construction must rely on the advance in science and technology and the guidelines that scientific and technological work must be geared to economic construction are being implemented in depth. A new situation has come into being in integrating science and technology with economic construction. The technology market has expanded quickly. The state of affairs marked by a lack of coordination between the work of scientific research, design, and education and the work of production, and the existence of barriers between military and civilian work and between departments and regions has been somewhat changed.

The initiative and creativity of scientific-technological workers have been brought into fuller play. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, fruitful results were achieved in over 30,000 major scientific research projects carried out on various fronts, some of them holding a leading position in the world or having attained the advanced world level. Experts in science and technology are playing an increasing role in making social and economic policy decisions for our country. Activities of studying and applying science and technology are being carried out on a wide scale among the masses of workers and peasants. "Respecting knowledge and competent persons" is becoming a common social practice.

In recent years, the Chinese Association for Science and Technology has, on its own initiative, adhered to the correct orientation of combining science and technology closely with economic construction. It has organized the broad masses of scientists and technicians to conduct extensive academic exchanges and establish lateral ties at home and abroad, and gone all out to popularize the knowledge of science and technology. It has made energetic efforts to offer consultation services and facilitate contacts between scientific-technological workers and the party and government. It has thus played a significant role in building the socialist material and spiritual civilizations.

The unprecedentedly vigorous work done in rural areas to spread the knowledge of science and technology has contributed positively to developing the rural economy and helping peasants to extricate themselves from poverty, become better off, and build new modern rural areas. Science and technology, closely with economic construction, has made it possible to translate science and technology quickly into a productive force.

This has not only stimualted exploratory research to a great extent, but also brought about the development of basic theoretical study and high-technology research. Now the situation on the whole scientific-technological work front is the best since the founding of the People's Republic. Our country has made rapid progress in economic construction over the past few years. This is partly due to the work of the science and technology circles; it is lined with the enthusiasm and painstaking efforts of vast numbers of scientists and technicians. The intellectuals of our country have the fine quality of working with all their hearts and with all their strength for the nation and people. Exerting their utmost efforts and absorbed in their hard work, quite a number of our scientific-technological workers have engaged in long painstaking but creative labor and have dedicated their entire being to the people and society. This kind of precious spirit displayed by them has been praised by the people throughout the country.

Today I wish to take this opportunity to pay high respects and extend heartfelt thanks to the scientists and scientific-technological workers nationwide on behalf of the party Central Committee and the State Council!

As you comrades all know, we are now in an important historical period. The overall objective of our country's economic construction work up to the end of this century is to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production, using the 1980 record as a base figure, and to bring our people's living standards to a comparatively well-off level.

On this basis, we need to work hard for approximately another half century so that our economy will approach the level of developed countries in the world and China will become a strong socialist modern country with a high level of civilization and democracy.

Attainment of such a grand goal depends on the party's correct line and policies, the united and indomitable work of the people of all nationalities in our country and, at the same time, the great might of modern science and technology. In the present world, science and technology are propelling the progress of human society on an unprecendented scale and at an unprecedented speed. Competition among ccountries in the world is, to a great extent, competition in real economic strength, while competition in real economic strength is, to a great extent, competition in science and technology. With the development of technology, new changes are occurring with each passing day, and the interval between the required technological adjustments has been greatly shortened.

This represents a serious challenge for us. We are carrying out socialist revolution and contruction in a country that was in a semi-feudal and semi-colonial status very recently in modern history and whose social economy and cultural are still quite backward. Modern science and technology are certainly crucial to our program of the four modernizations, whether we view the question from this foundation of science and technology of our country, from the needs of building a socialist modern country, or from the challenge of the new technological revolution in the world we are facing. To a considerable extend, modern science and technology will affect and determine our progress in fulfilling the modernization goals of our country.

Confronted with such new circumstances and demands, we hope that comrades on the scientific-technological front the associations for science and technology at all levels throughout the country will work hard in three areas:

1. GO ALL OUT TO REFORM THE MANAGEMENT SYSTEM OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY, UNSWERVINGLY GEAR THE WORK TO ECONOMIC CONSTRUCTION, AND TAKE IT AS A PRIMARY TASK OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY TO HELP ACHIEVE THE GOAL OF QUADRUPLING THE GROSS ANNUAL VALUE OF INDUSTRIAL AND AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION BY THE END OF THIS CENTURY.

Developing of the economy and achievement of the four modernizations are the ultimate goal of all work of the whole party and people throughout the country. Scientific and technological work must be closely linked with this goal and serve its needs. One of our basic viewpoints with regard to reforming the science and technology management system is the need to overcome the mistaken lack of coordination among science and technology, education, and production and to closely integrate work in these three fields. Modern science and technology are the most vigorous and decisive factors for a new social productive force. They are mighty motive forces to increase the vitality of enterprises, develop commodity production, and raise economic benefits and labor productivity. All accomplishments in science and technology must be quickly put to widespread use in promoting economic and social development. This is the only way to realize the value of such accomplishments.

To gear the work of science and technology toward economic construction, it is necessary, first of all, to apply new scientific research results to various sectors of the national economy, especially to those trades and economic sectors that have a great bearing on our economic construction and social development. These sectors include energy production, transportation, telecommunications, and raw and semifinished materials industries.

Meanwhile, great attention must be paid to gearing the work to the needs of rural areas. Agriculture is the foundation of our national economy. When agriculture is developed, our life will be better. If agriculture has setbacks, our modernization program will be adversely affected. The in-depth development of the economic structural reform and the change in the production structure in rural areas have placed new demands on science and technology circles. The "sparkling plan," being carried out in the rural areas of our country, is a good way and a good measure for science and technology to serve the needs of the rural economy. Associations for science and technology at all levels should give great support to and take an active part in this plan to as to introduce science and technology to peasants.

In gearing science and technology to economic construction, consideration should be given not only to big and medium-sized enterprises, but also to small enterprises. Small enterprises, including village and town enterprises, have greater flexibility and adaptability. Once modern science and technology and modern scientific management methods are introduced to these small enterprises, they will show their great vitality and become vigorous reinforcements in the program of the four modernizations.

While serving the goal of quadrupling the value of industrial and agricultural output by the end of this century, we must also attach great importance to the study of basic sciences and keep up with the development of advanced sciences. From a long-range point of view, China's economic rejuvenation and modernization must rely on advanced technology. Whether or not China can attain the level of the economically developed countries during the next century will largely be determined by the state of the nation's scientific development and technological reserves. As such, in the course of our scientific and technological development, we must correctly handle the relationship between immediate and long-range needs, between our goals and our present reserves, and between the study of applied sciences and the study of basic sciences. In short, while striving to achieve the quadrupling goal by the end of this century, we must sustain the needed reserve strength for economic construction during the next century by being scientifically and technologically prepared for economic development at that time.

2. GIVE FULL SCOPE TO THE ROLE OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY IN SPIRITUAL CONSTRUCTION, AND FIGHT AGAINST IGNORANCE, SUPERSTITION, AND BACKWARDNESS.

The basic objective of our country's socialist spiritual construction is to improve the people's thinking and ethical conduct, and upgrade their scientific and educational level. It is impossible for us to achieve socialist modernization without revolutionary ideals and a sense of morality and discipline, or without the popularization and constant development of modern science and culture. Therefore, an important aspect of our spiritual construction is to constantly upgrade the people's scientific-technological level by energetically popularizing scientific and technological knowledge among them.

Marxism maintains that science is a driving, revolutionary force in history. The scientific-technological development today, which has triggered a new industrial revolution, is a great force that is changing people's outmoded and traditional concepts and improving their cognitive ability.

China has long and fine traditions and culture, but the residue of outmoded, ignorant, and backward ideas, which are incompatible with socialist spiritual construction, still fetters people's minds and obstructs the process of reform and modernization in various sectors. Therefore, we must replace ignorance and backwardness with scientific spirit and scientific knowledge, and achieve all our goals on the basis of mankind's scientific achievements.

To ensure normal progress of reform and expedite modernization, we must do away with poverty and ignorance. Fighting against feudalism, superstition, ignorance, and backwardness is a glorious historical mission shouldered by the vast number of scientists and technicians. It is also an arduous and serious task throughout the course of our spiritual construction. Science and technology associations at all levels should gear their operation to the needs of society, especially the rural areas. They should intensify the training of personnel for popularizing sciences, broadly carry out scientific education, and advance our material and spiritual construction.

3. FOSTER DEMOCRACY, ENHANCE UNITY, UPHOLD THE PRINCIPLE OF LETTING A HUNDRED SCHOOLS OF THOUGHT CONTEND, AND BROADLY PROMOTE ACADEMIC EXCHANGE.

China's modernization and economic reform are facing two most crucial issues, namely the issue of competent personnel, and the issue of science and technology. The training of large numbers of competent personnel and scientific-technological development both depend on the fostering of democratic spirit and on having a sound democratic system. The party's principle of letting a hundred schools of thought contend is an embodiment of socialist democracy in the scientific sphere. Upholding this principle is essentially an issue concerning whether or not socialist democracy should be fostered and improved.

To promote scientific and technological work and bring about a situation where numerous competent personnel will come to the fore and all can give full scope to their talents, we must firmly uphold the principle of letting a hundred schools of thought contend and create a fine environment in which people can research and discuss academic issues boldly and freely. In the course of scientific research and academic discussion, not only should we encourage people with different opinions to discuss freely and encourage outstanding personnel to show their talents, we should also encourage scientists and technicians to express their opinions on major issues concerning economic construction, technical policies, and social development. We should encourage scientists and technicians to take part in studying and assessing these issues and making final decisions, and give full consideration to their opinions.

Even when final decisions have been made on the relevant issues, we should continue to heed and seriously study different opinions and new proposals, and adopt whatever is correct and useful. When some people's opinions are completely wrong, we should assist them with good will and warmth, and reason with them. By no means should we repeat the previous mistakes of suppressing different academic ideas and opinions, or even affixing all types of political labels to them.

Science and technology embodies the crystal of wisdom humankind has acquired for transforming society and nature. Broadly-based academic exchanges are an objective need for scientific-technological development.

First of all, we must promote interregional, interdepartmental, and interdisciplinary cooperation and exchanges; we must promote ties between scientific, technological, educational, and production departments so that scientific research, education, and production will be integrated and will assist each other to achieve common development. At the same time, we must broaden our vision, strive to learn foreign countries' advanced scientific and technological knowledge, and promote scientific and technological exchanges with foreign countries. We must remove the barriers between higher and lower levels and between departments and regions, oppose sectarianism, and promote unity and cooperation in tackling key issues.

As the sphere of science keeps on broadening and as research continues to deepen, the various branches of learning have become more meticulously divided and increasingly numerous. Furthermore, many subjects are interrelated. This has given rise to many peripheral subjects, causing more interrelated ties, fusion, and meshing among various disciplines of and between natural and social sciences. Because of this tendency in the development of modern science, we must make great efforts to promote lateral ties in scientific research. Since the Chinese Association for Science and Technology has maintained extensive ties with scientists and technicians of many disciplines in many areas, it is in an especially advantageous position where it can play a much more important role than other organizations. In this respect, the association has already accomplished a great deal of work with remarkable successes. In the future, it should continue to make good use of its advantageous role, provide good services, and make even more contributions.

To give fuller play to its role, the association should continue to give top priority to reform. While reforming itself, it should serve reform and the policy of opening to the outside world. It should seek no reputation, but do more work that can bring practical results. The association should operate democratically, warmly serve scientists and technicians, and reflect their opinions and requests to the party. It should firmly defend their legitimate rights and interests, and maintain the characteristics of being a mass organization, so that science and technology associations at all levels really become the homes of scientists and technicians. The Chinese Association for Science and Technology presently has 138 national societies, associations and research institutes, with 1.8 million members. The local branches of these societies, associations and institutes have 1.2 million members. These members, plus the 3.5 million members of associations for the popularization of science, are a mammoth contingent, whose ranks include prominent scientists, inventors, and engineers, as well as highly skilled technicians and craftsmen -- scientific and technical backbone workers on all fronts in the country. By doing practical work, the Chinese Association for Science and Technology should unite these people and bring their enthusiasm into play, so that each and every one of them will give full play to his expertise and contribute to socialist construction.

Speaking of unity, I want to point out emphatically that intellectuals, scientists, and technicians should also "respect knowledge and proficient personnel." Intellectuals, scientists, and technicians should learn from one another and support and respect one another. They all should create a good environment and good conditions for proficient people, so that their special capabilities and contributions will be acknowledged. Middle-aged and young scientists and technicians should respect their veteran counterparts, and learn from them humbly; the veteran scientists and technicians should support and train their younger counterparts and encourage them to be brave in bringing forth new ideas and in expressing their opinions in the academic field, and assist them to outdo themselves academically.

In other words, the masters should encourage their pupils to surpass themselves. Only when they can do so will there be continual scientific development and social progress.

The Chinese Association for Science and Technology is a mass organization of Chinese scientists and technicians themselves. It is a link by which the party and the government maintain close ties with scientists and technicians, and it serves as an assistant to the party and the government in promoting China's scientific and technological work. Party committees and governments at all levels should attach great importance to the association's role, give full scope to it, and support the association to operate independently, responsibly, and actively. They should strive to facilitate the association's operations so that it can continue to unite the vast number of scientific and technological development, rejuvenating the economy, developing intellectual resources, and improving the nation's scientific and cultural proficiency; and make even greater contributions to reform and socialist material and spiritual construction in all fields.

Comrades, let us work hard together to promote scientific and technological development, train more talented personnel, create a thriving economy, and rejuvenate China!

EXPERT NUCLEAR SAFETY COMMITTEE ANNOUNCED

[Text] Beijing, June 27 (XINHUA) -- China has formed an expert committee aimed at promoting safety in the country's nuclear power industry, Guo Shuyan, vice-minister of Science and Technology, announced here today. The new committee is comprised of 25 nuclear experts. Leading nuclear engineer Jiang Shengjie has been appointed chairman.

At a meeting today, Guo, on behalf of State Councillor Song Jian, who is minister of science and technology, presented committee members with their credentials.

He said safety was the key to the development of nuclear energy. China was determined to put safety and quality above all else in site selection, design, equipment manufacture, construction and operation management of nuclear power stations.

The nuclear safety committee will act as a consulting body to help the government in mapping out nuclear safety policies, regulations and standards, in assessing and supervising nuclear power stations and in conducting nuclear safety research.

China has so far drawn up five safety regulations which will soon be made public. At today's meeting, Deputy Director of the State Nuclear Safety Bureau Shi Guangchang said his bureau, as a representative of the government, would exercise strict supervision over civil nuclear facilities to ensure that power stations met international safety standards.

Since its founding in 1984, the State Nuclear Safety Bureau has given priority to preparing safety legislation. It has supervised the drafting of 70 regulations and rules, including the atomic energy law, and regulations covering radiation protection management, safety control of nuclear materials, transport of radioactive materials, research reactors and atomic accelerators.

Shi said his bureau was now concentrating on the construction of the Qinshan power station in Zhejiang Province and the Quangdong plant in southern China, as well as stepping up co-operation on nuclear safety with other countries.

WRITERS HOLD PRESS CONFERENCE IN BEIJING

Deng Youmei on Wang Meng

HK290549 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1514 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 27 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Deng Youmei, Xie Yongwang, Chen Rong, Yuan Ying, Shao Yanxiang, Zheng Wanlong, and other writers, poets, and critics met with some Chinese and foreign reporters here today. Deng Youmei, member of the Secretariat of the Chinese Writers' Association, answered questions raised by reporters.

Question: What impact will Wang Meng's appointment as minister of culture produce on China's literature?

Answer: It can be considered an experiment. Wang Meng believes that a person can be both a minister and a writer. If he can continue to produce works, he will be the first man in China's history to assume the post of minister as well as write novels. In my opinion, he can do it. Moreover, if a writer assumes the post of minister, he can convey the voice of writers directly to the government.

Question: Wasn't Mao Dun a minister as well as writer?

Answer: So far as I can remember, he stopped writing after assuming the post of minister.

Question: Does China have a guiding principle of literary creation?

Answer: Yes, it is serving the people and socialism. Nevertheless, this is only a general concept. Writers may also exercise their individual character and styles in literary creation.

Question: Is there no limit to writers' demands of "freedom of creation"?

Answer: I think that I have had enough freedom. Compared with the past, we never had so much freedom.

Other writers also answered some questions raised by reporters.

Xie Yongwang on 'Encouraging' Situation

[Text] Beijing, June 27 (XINHUA) -- Chinese literature and art has benefited since the policy of allowing "freedom to write and criticize" ws implemented 18 months ago, an official of the Chinese Writers' Association said today.

At a Beijing press conference, Xie Yongwang, editor-in-chief of the LITERARY AND ART GAZETTE, China's most influential newspaper in the field, said: "Facts have proved that the implementation of the principle has not caused ideological confusion.

"To the contrary, it has helped create an encouraging situation in literature."

He said that literary writing in the past 18 months had been characterized by its diversity both in theme and technique, which "more fully displays writers' individuality in writing and their talents.

"This has resulted from the fact that there has been less and less flagrant interferences with writers' literary creation in terms of what and how to write."

Social problems, especially those related to the country's reform drive, Xie said, were what most writers tried to reflect. In this aspect, Liu Xinwu's "Long Lens on May 19", Ke Yunlu's "New Star" and Shen Rong's "Subtract 10 Years" were representative works.

Works on other themes included Liu Suola's "You Have No Other Choice", which depicted the inner world of contemporary youth, Han Shanogong's "Father, Father, Father", which delved deep into ordinary people's traditional culture and thought, as well as novels about history, martial arts and love.

Compared with novel-writing, he said, literary critiques were even more dynamic, and literary discussions and debates had become more heated.

Xie, a leading literary critic, said today's critics were concentrating more on the nature, characteristics and laws of literature itself. They were paying more attention to studying and absorbing new literary fruits, and their criticism of a work was based on its literary merits rather than its political nature.

He noted that so far, the discussion of "A Man's Half Is a Woman," a controversial novel by Zhang Xianliang, which involves sexual description, had not gone beyond literary limits.

He said the Communist Party had recently stressed that a "comfortable, harmonious and friendly" environment should be maintained in the field of literature and art. He predicted that this would certainly lead to a better implementation of the party's policy of "letting 100 flowers blossom and 100 schools of thought contend".

The press conference was also attended by Deng Youmei, a member of the Secretariat of the Chinese Writers' Association, and several writers.

When asked what the impact on writers would be following the appointment of Wang Meng, a famous writer, as culture minister, Deng joked: "It is an 'experiment', which will show whether a writer can be a government minister at the same time. I myself believe that Wang will continue to produce literary works.

"The appointment has established a 'hot line' between writers and the government. From now on, the government can hear the writers' voice directly."

Further on Xie Remarks

[Report: "Xie Yongwang on New Trends in Literary Criticism" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 27 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- When meeting with foreign journalists today, Xie Yongwang, secretary of the China Writers Association and chief editor of WENYI BAO said: China's literary criticism community has now advanced more new ideas than in any previous year and debates among literary criticism circles are also livelier than at any previous time.

He enumerated some of the hot points currently under debate, such as the debate on the characteristics of literature triggered by the views of Liu Zaifu and Chen Yong; the controversy on the depiction of sex resulting from the different evaluations of Zhang Xueliang's novel "Half of Man is Woman"; and the discussion of the influence of the Western modernist school on China's contemporary literary creation -- discussion set off by young female writer Liu Suola's works.

Xie Yongwang said: WENYI BAO which is attached to the China Writers Association has stated its own views on the debate between Liu Zaifu and Chen Yong. It neither agreed with Chen Yong's views nor completely agreed with Liu Zaifu's. Although Chen Yong's article was published in the authoritative magazine HONGQI, he was only presenting his own views which can therefore be discussed and moreover, must be discussed.

He briefed the foreign journalists on the new characteristics of China's literary criticism. He said: First, it tends to discuss the nature and characteristics of literature itself. Liu Zaifu's contention that literary research should center on man and pay full attention to the complex nature of man shows this point of argument. Second, people in the literary world are more open-minded. They have enriched China's literary thought with the new achievements they absorbed from foreign countries. The discussion of literary root-seeking is apparently influenced by the trends of thought in literature prevailing in Latin American countries and based on absorbing the experience of the writer Marquez. Third, evaluation of literary works is centered on the success and failure of the works themselves rather than making political judgements on them. He said: The debate on Zhang Xueliang's "Half of Man is Woman" still going on.

ANHUI 'SECRETARY' LI GUIXIAN VISITS TRADE EXHIBIT

OW280820 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Text] The Anhui provincial negotiation conference on foreign economic relations and trade will open soon, to be held simultaneously with the provincial export commodities exhibition.

On the morning of 26 June, Li Guixian, secretary of the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee; Governor Wang Yuzhao; and other party and government leaders visited a preparatory exhibition.

A wider variety of products are exhibited this year than last year, a total of 3,200 kinds of commodities in 182 categories, 7,500 in all.

More than 2,000 kinds of commodities totaling 3,390 pieces, or 63.4 percent of the commodities on exhibition, are new products. This is a general review of the province's export commodities.

While visiting the exhibition, Comrade Li Guixian stressed: The key to achieving the Seventh 5-Year Plan lies in expanding exports and earning foreign exchange. We must persistently implement the policy of opening to the outside world and be bolder instead of being timid. Emancipating the mind is the precondition for enlivening the economy.

Comrade Li Guixian said: In addition to farm and sideline produce such as grain, edible oil, tea, and livestock products, we should vigorously promote the export of industrial and mineral products like [words indistinct]. State collectives as well as enterprises run by individuals should cooperate. Village and town enterprises should produce more export products. Anhui, with an abundant labor force, should develop labor-intensive industries.

Also visiting the preparatory exhibition were leading comrades including Ru Rongjing, Zhao Baoxing, Yuan Zhen, and Wang Guangyu as well as officials of departments concerned.

YANG DEZHI COMMENDS OUTSTANDING PLA PARTY MEMBERS

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jun (XINHUA) -- At a meeting today the PLA General Staff Headquarters commended 52 outstanding party members and 23 advanced party organizations who have distinguished themselves in rectifying party style.

After party rectification, particularly since the convocation of the rally of 8,000 people held by the party Central Committee, the various organs and PLA troops under the command of the PLA General Staff Headquarters have attained remarkable results in rectifying party style. The outstanding party members commended this time include leading cadres who seek to correct themselves before they correct others and who have become pacesetters in rectifying party style, as well as ordinary soldiers who make their lofty ideals come true at their ordinary posts. They include discipline inspection cadres who stick to principle and encourage healthy trends, as well as personnel in financial management who remain uncorrupted although tens of thousands of yen pass through their hands. They also include old comrades who maintain their revolutionary integrity in their late years and attain new achievements, as well as those middle-aged and young cadres who carry forward the party's fine traditions and forge ahead on their road of advance. Those advanced party organizations commended this time include party committees at the divisional and regimental level as well as the grass-roots party branches.

Yang Dezhi, chief of General Staff, made a speech at the meeting. He said: In order to carry forward the party's fine traditions and bring about a fundamental change for the better in party style, it is particularly essential to improve the qualities of party members and strengthen the militancy of the party organizations. As long as the party organizations and leading cadres at all levels truly play their exemplary role well, we will definitely be able to bring about a fundamental change for the better in party style.

AFP VIEWS MACHINE FACTORY WAGE BONUS PLAN

HK270606 Hong Kong AFP in English 0553 GMT 27 Jun 86

[By Bernard Degioanni]

[Text] Jinan, China, June 27 (AFP) -- Factory director Zhang Jingzao made it clear that most of his 6,000 workers earned higher wages than he did and he was not surprised because they benefitted from the bonus scheme.

"It is only natural," he said, "because after all it is thanks to them that we are making a substantial profit." Mr. Zhang is one of six directors of the Number 2 Machine Tool Factory, China's biggest, at Jinan, 300 kilometers (180 miles) south of Beijing whose output is vital for the country. In a year, the factory has managed to double its net profit from six million yuan (1.8 million dollars) in 1984 to 12 million yan (3.6 million dollars) in 1985.

Mr. Zhang took his time to explain this undoubted success. He emphasized that work schedules were not increased, and workers were still given a day off for 51 hours of work weekly, earning an average wage of 75 yuan (23 dollars) a month. But on this last point Mr. Zhang was not telling the whole truth -- he missed out added bonuses, responsible for increased production, which are often three times the basic wage. Mr. Zhang acknowledged that a "a worker can earn regularly up to an extra 180 yuan (56 dollars) monthly in bonuses."

The pay packet of Mr. Zhang, who is 51 and has worked for 34 years at the factory, adds up to 160 yuan (49 dollars).

He does not consider that he should be paid more as one of six directors running the huge plant, pointing out that the management merely applies the economic reforms launched in 1978. "We work on the theory that he who works best, earns more."

On the other hand, poor work performances and mistakes are penalized by having part of the wage docked. At "Number 20" factory, a worker can lose as much as 50 yuan (15 dollars) at a time. The 1978 reforms permit this system of work bonuses and penalties, but there is opposition, especially in the provinces, from old guard managers who are also often local Communist Party leaders. Young factory managers and officials, despite raising production with bonuses, are often forced to resign because of local hostility to their new ways.

Mr. Zhang denied such difficulties existed at Jinan, but admitted that management of the factory was still not sufficiently rationalized. "We are still trying to combat the Soviet management system we adopted in the fifties." He suggested the work slogan "More Autonomy Equals More Responsibility."

"A factory can only become really autonomous if the power of decision of its managers reaches down to all levels, and on condition that benefits are shared out fairly. That is China's form of socialist management."

Mr. Zhang admitted that his promotion as a director of the factory eight years ago was due to the new economic reforms. "I want to get rich, and I want everybody else to be rich as well."

The "Number 2" factory was formerly run by the machine-building industry but in February 1985 responsibility was transferred to Jinan City Council.

"Previously we had to refer to Beijing over the smallest decision. We had many visits from senior officials, but they never resulted in anything concrete." "Everything was planned by central authorities -- production as well as sales. Now, it is up to the factory to find a market for its goods."

"In those days the workers were not bothered about profit or losses as they always received the same wage regardless of their output. Production was naturally affected."

Factory "Number 2" remains under state ownership. But this does not disturb Mr. Zhang who explained: "Today, in China, individual profit is not incompatible with state profit. If workers are better paid, it is because they work better and the state, in changing its policy, enables them to earn more."

The factory sells 90 percent of its production on the Chinese market, and 55 percent of its profits go to the state. The balance goes into investing in its hospital, schools, sports facilities, cinema and shops.

The factory provides housing for its 6,000 workers and families at a nominal rent of a more three yuan (less than a dollar) for a two-roomed flat.

Mr. Zhang pointed out that "a worker and his family can spend their entire lives here on factory ground without ever having to go into town" which is only three kilometres (about two miles) away.

JINGJI RIBAO ON RURAL PRODUCTION READJUSTMENT

[Report: "China Has Taken an Important Step Forward in Readjusting the Rural Production Structure"]

[Text] The recent figures released by the rural social economic statistical section under the State Statistical Bureau indicated that during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, after readjustment of China's rural production structure, its unitary and self-supporting rural economic setup began to change, resulting in a new situation of overall development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, and fishery.

It also resulted in comprehensive operation of agriculture, industry, the building industry, transportation, and commerce. According to the calculations of comparable prices, China's total rural social output value for 1985 was 634 billion yuan, an increase of 90.9 percent over 1980 and an average annual growth ate of 13.8 percent.

Basic production was consolidated. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, remarkable changes took place in the farming structure. Farmland unsuitable for growing grain was either sown with economic crops, trees, or grass, so the farmland was used reasonably. This cut the country's grain-sown area by 126 million mu, yet per-mu yield increased by 10 kgs. The total grain output increased by 58.55 million tons, or 18.3 percent. The economic crop-sown area increased by 96.85 million mu, or 40.6 percent. Proportional changes infarming are as follows: The output value of grain has decreased from 72.6 percent to 62.4 percent, and the output value of economic crops has increased from 15.7 percent to 20.5 percent. The output value of farming crops increased by 36.2 percent in 5 years.

Forestry, animal husandry, sideline production, and fishery have also developed rapidly, their growth rates being 54.9, 54.5, 170, and 78.2 percent respectively. The percentage of the output value of forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, and fishery in the total agricultural output value has increased from 28.3 to 37.

The secondary and tertiary industries have developed rapidly and become the mainstay of the economy. Over the past 5 years, the percentage of those engaged in the secondary and tertiary industries in the total rural work force has increased from 10.8 to 18.1. Based on the calculation of comparable prices, the output value of industry, the building industry, transportation, and commerce in rural areas as increased by 190 percent, and their proportionin the total rural output value has increased from 31.1 to 42.9 percent. The tax submitted by township enterprises to the sate in 1985 amounted to some 10.86 billion yuan, an increase of 300 percent over 1980. Over the past 5 years, they submitted a total of 32.56 billion yuan in tax to the state and provided 6 billion yuan in funds for agricultural production.

Attention has been paid to unified readjustment of quality and quantity. The proportion of rice, wheat, and soybeans in total crops has increased from 63.3 to 69.9 percent. Urban residents now have flour and rice to eat the whole year. Of the grain consumed by peasants, 80 percent is flour and rice. There has also been an increase in the output of fine-quality food grains other than wheat and rice which are needed on the market.

In this regard to main ecnomic crops, the quantity of cotton, oil crops, and sugar has increased, and varieties have improved. The previous situation of importing a vast amount of cotton from other countries has been changed into the new situation of exporting cotton to other countries. The per capita oil crops allotment has increased from 3.9 kgs to 7.1 kgs. The output of sugarcane has increased by 130 percent.

In regard to livestock products, the output of beef and milk, which are of high nutritive value, has increased relatively fast, by 73.6 and 120 percent respectively.

The situation of supply falling short of demand for milk consumed by urban residents has greatly improved. There has been an increase in the output of dairy products.

In regard to aquatic products, the output of freshwater fish has increased greatly, by 140 percent in 5 years. The difficulty of urban and rural residents in many areas in getting fish to eat has been solved.

We must make readjustments and give play to one's advantages according to local conditions. After readjustment of the production structure, China's three economic zones, namely, the east, the middle, and the west, have gradually given play to their advantages and displayed their own economic features.

The east zone (Beijing, Tianjin, Shanghai, Jiangsu, Zhejiang, Shandong, Liaoning, Hebei, Fujian, Guangdong, and Guangxi) is relatively developed economically. the total rural output value of the zone in 1985 accounted for 54.1 percent of the country's total. The proportion of the output value of industry, the building industry, transportation, and commerce in the zone accounted for 52.1 percent of its total rural output value, exceeding that of the prime industry. The output value of industry, the building industry, transportation, and commerce on outskirts of Beijing, Tianjin, and Shanghai cities accounted for 70 percent of the total rural output value. What is prominent is that the proportion of the output value of rural industry, the building industry, transportation, and commerce of Jiangsu's Suzhow, Wuxi, and Changzhou in the total rural output value has reached 80 percent. The development on non-agricultural production has laid a good foundation for economic take-off in the east zone. The per capita social output value of rural work force in the east zone for 1985 reached some 2,193,41 yuan, and the per capita net annual income of persants was 462.7 yuan, both topping the three economic zones.

Most areas of the middle zone (nine provinces and autonomous regions including Heilongjiang, Jilin, Shanxi, Henan, Hubei, and Hunan) are China's commodity grain base areas and the average annual growth rate of farming for the zone over the past 5 years was 7.1 percent. The zone submitted and sold a total of 200 million tons of grain to the state in the 5 years, accounting for 45.6 percent of the grain purchased by the state. The output value of forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, and fishery of the zone in 1985 increased by 69.4 percent over 1980. The proportion of the output value of rural industry, the building industry, transportation, and commerce in the total rural social output value has increased from 25.7 to 34 percent.

In the west zone (nine provinces and autonomous regions including Sichuan, Yunnan, Gansu, and Nignxia), animal husbandry and forestry developed fairly fast, while rural industry, the building industry, transportation, and commerce in the zone have just started. Over the past 5 years, the forestry output value of the zone increased by 100 percent, the output value of animal husbandry increased by 57.9 percent, and the proportion of the output value of the rural industry, the building industry, transportation, and commerce in the zone's total rural output value increased from 19.7 to 28.4 percent. The reasonable readjustment of the production structure in the west zone has promoted the development of commodity economy and basically solved the problem of the food and clothing for peasants in most areas.

RENMIN RIBAO ON PROPER USE OF EXTRABUDGETARY FUNDS

[Text] In the past few years, China has seen a rapid growth in extrabudgetary funds. The figure reached 143 billion yuan in 1985, equivalent to around 80 percent of the state's budgetary financial revenue. This is one of the indexes reflecting a real increase in the state's financial resources.

Controlling large amounts of extra-budgetary funds well and using them properly is an important task. Some enterprises and nonproductive service units have allocated their limited extrabudgetary funds for upgrading equipment and technological transformation projects as well as for social welfare, thus speeding up the development of education, science, public health, and other undertakings, improving urban public facilities, and preparing conditions for the future development of production and social services. Their example is worth emulating.

Now, a case that merits attention is that some localities have used extrabudgetary funds inappropriately and let enterprises or government departments start new projects blindly. In consequence, older enterprises did not get the resources necessary to upgrade equipment and undertake technological transformation; and on the other hand, newly started projects failed to be completed as scheduled, or could not operate normally but lay idle due to shortages of material resources, raw materials, and electric power. Some administrative and nonproductive service units, while complaining of shortage of funds, have issued unwarranted allowances in cash and kind from extrabudgetary funds in violation of state regulations. This shows that proper and improper control over extrabudgetary funds may give rise to a great difference. Therefore, it is necessary to provide correct guidance to guarantee the proper use of both extrabudgetary and budetary funds while allowing a reasonable degree of flexibility.

As compared with budgetary funds, extrabudgetary funds are to be used in a more flexible manner. That is to say, localities, departments, enterprises, and nonproductive service units are allowed to allocate extrabudgetary funds in a flexible manner in light of their local conditions. However, the funds also have something in common, namely, in both cases the use of funds must be in conformity with the requirements of the state's macroeconomic control. Although extrabudgetary funds are not included in the state's unified budget, they are, in the final analysis, state money. Therefore, the use of these funds must follow two principles: First, the principle of acting according to one's capability; and second, the prevention of extravagance and waste. It is wrong to argue that the state should not interfere in the use of extrabudgetary funds since they are reserved for disposal by localities, departments, and other units.

In order to achieve a comprehensive balance of the national economy, it is necessary to place particularly rigid restrictions on the use of extrabudgetary funds in capital construction and strictly prohibit issuance of unwarranted allowances in cash and kind in view of the temporary imbalance between the aggregate supply and demand. Now the state has already brought the growth in budgetary investment in capital construction under control and banks have also cut down loans for capital construction. However, the scale of capital construction in the whole society is still too large. One of the important reasons for this is that the scale of extrabudgetary investments has not been reduced but is likely to expand further. Some enterprises are using the available limited funds to launch extrabudgetary capital construction projects while complaining of the shortage of circulating funds. It seems that the shortage of circulating funds and raw materials that the enterprises are currently facing cannot possibly be significantly eased if we fail to make up our minds to cut back on many extrabudgetary construction projects.

NONGMIN RIBAO ON PROBLEMS OF SPECIALIZED HOUSEHOLDS

[Article by Shi Weimu, Gong Hui, and Shi Yanmin, of the Agriculture and Industry Department of the Haimen County CPC Committee, Jiangsu: "Why Have They Come to a Halt? -- Investigation on Six Rural Specialized Households"]

[Text] We recently conducted an investigation of six typical rural specialized households for our whole county. These households are engaged in four undertakings including cultivation, animal breeding, processing industry, and transportation. Their total assets are worth 475,000 yuan, averaging 79,000 yuan per household, ranging from 20,000 to 150,000 yuan. The duration of time of operation was 4 years for two of them, 3 years for three of them, and 2 years for one of them. From the point of view of their methods of operation, half of them undertake contracted responsibility for their operation and half operate independently. From the point of view of their economic results, four of them have been developing normally, one has had negative growth, and one has gone bankrupt. In spite of their differences in duration of operation, undertakings engaged, operational methods, operational economic results, and the factors that have determined their success and failure, the findings of the investigation show an identical phenomenon -- they all came to a halt when their operation was developing smoothly, and even wanted to voluntarily wind up their enterprises.

What factors have restricted their development? It turns out that the major reason is their fear of "changes," which has filled them with worries. This was mainly shown in the following:

First, the growth of their income has been slowing down. According to our initial statistics, the total net profit of these six households for the 1st year was 61,500 yuan, 10,250 yuan per household, ranging from 3,000 yuan to 43,000 yuan. That for the 2d year was 112,700 yuan, an increase of 183 percent over the 1st year and 18,400 per household, ranging from 6,000 to 87,000 yuan per household.

That for the 3d year was 19,300 yuan, 17 percent of that for the preceding year and 3,200 yuan per household, ranging from 700 to 11,000 yuan per household. We can see from this that the 1st year was mediocre, the 2d year was good, and the 3d year was bad.

Second, their production scale has been restricting their development. Their main practice was to make experiments in the 1st year, go all out in the 2d, and transfer to other production, wind up, or reduce their production scale in the 3d. From the investigation, we have learned that even when their products were marketable, when there were ensured sources of supply of raw materials, and when they had the necessary production capacity, they generally adopted restrictive measures and did not want to increase their investment in fixed assets. Huang Dehui, the specialized household engaged in smelting tin and aluminium, invested 9,000 yuan and earned a net profit of 11,000 yuan the 1st year, but wound up his enterprise in the 3d despite that there is a shortage of supply for his products. From the point of view of their work force, at the beginning, they generally employed long-term workers, but later, they gradually switched to employing short-term workers.

Third, their thoughts have made progress amid hesitation. 1) They have the desire and demand to follow the path of becoming rich together. Through making comparison in the past few years, they deeply find that one is happy when one becomes rich through labor and that one has ease of mind when one takes along other people in becoming rich by means of developing production. Four of them have done 13 things to benefit the public, helped 61 poor households with money, and provided free technological aid on 8 occasions. 2) They all planned to "live on interest." They all disclosed that they have the following idea: They planned to work hard for a few years or 10 years to enhance their economic strength and then live on interest. Some specialized households said: "There are a thousand factors affecting production, but policy and information are most important." They worried that they would be called to pay in two ways: 1) They feared being criticized politically, and that "once being branded with a label, generations of their descendants would suffer." 2) They worried that they would be called to pay economically and "be so heavily taxed as to borrow money to pay taxes."

We believe that in the light of the muddled ideas in the minds of our specialized households, we should intensify our work to educate and guide them, publicize the party's policies among them, and remove their worries, thus enabling them to forge ahead without worries.

'Short Commentary'

HK270557 Beijing NONGMIN RIBAO in Chinese 4 Jun 86 p 3

["Short Commentary": "Why Do They Fear Change?"]

[Text] In our rural areas, our peasants have always acted prudently and have always had a kind of contradictory mentality toward the party's current rural policies. They are both convinced in the policies and fear change in them. Therefore, they want to do something in their actions, but do not want to go all out in doing it. We say that they are convinced because they have indeed seen the tremendous changes that the implementations of these policies has brought to the rural areas.

This proves that the party's existing policies are very popular and that the peasants earnestly do not want a change in them.

As for their fear about changes, they do have such fear. All their many kinds of fear can be summed up as follows: 1) They fear that their property will be taken from them and their land, farm tools, and farm animals will again be put in the hands of collectives. 2) They fear that they will be deprived of decision-making power over their undertaking. 3) They fear the return to the old practice of "eating out of the same big pot" and to common poverty. 4) They fear that those who take the lead in becoming rich now will suffer political persecution and economic losses in the future when the policies change. In short, what they fear is precisely any change in the contracted responsibility system geared to households.

In fact, the policies of the central authorities are very clear and there is also no problem of "changes" in our real life. The CPC Central Committee's 1985 document No 1 clearly and correctly stipulates: "The contract responsibility system with remuneration linked to output and the practice of peasants carrying out their undertakings on a family basis will not change for a long time." It instructs that we "should continue to perfect our methods to assign land by contracts and the responsibility systems geared to forestry, animal husbandry, fish farming, and town and township enterprises." The CPC Central Committee's 1986 document No 1 reiterates: "The household contract responsibility system is our party's long-term policy and should never been changed at will against the demand of the masses of people."

Why then do they fear "changes?" Perhaps, for the following reasons: First, some of the party's policies have not yet been directly made public among the masses of people; therefore, they do not know the actual contents of these policies. Second, some cadres work methods are too simple or have given a one-sided explanation of the central authorities' policies. This has caused peasants to have doubt and worries. Third, they have heard and believed some rumors.

As long as we find the reasons for some peasants' "fear of change," we will have also found the key to overcome this fear. This mentality will then gradually disappear.

PEASANTS INCOME GROWS, HOUSING CONDITIONS IMPROVE

HK191107 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 5 Jun 86 p 2

[Article by the State Statistical Bureau: "Sustained Growth in the Peasants's Income During the 'Sixth 5-Year Plan' period; and Marked Improvement in the Peasants' Housing Conditions in China"]

[Text] According to a sample survey of rural households throughout the country, during the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" period, as the income of the peasants constantly grew and their living conditions improved, the investment in housing made by rural households increased rapidly and an upsurge in building houses occurred in many localities. With the number of the newly built houses increasing year by year and their quality improving, the living conditions of the peasants have improved markedly.

1. More Than a Half of The Peasants Have Built New Houses and the Investment in Housing Made by the Peasants Has Increased by 190 Percent

During the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" period, with the improvement of the economic conditions of the rural households, the betterment of their living conditions has become their priority in making a housing investment. According to the survey, in 1984, on average, every rural household with newly built houses spent 2,128.7 yuan on housing, an increase of 1,331.7 yuan or 170 percent over 1980. For the country as a whole, in 1985, on average every household spent 202 yuan on housing, an increase of 190 percent over 1980 or an increase of 860 percent over 1978. In 1985, on average, the investment made by each household in housing increased by 131.1 yuan over 1980, at an annual progressive increase rate of 23.3 percent. Of all the growth rates of various living expenses, such as food, clothing, utensils, fuel, and so on, the increase rate of the investment in housing was the biggest and jumped from the 4th in the structural order of living consumption to 2d, only after the food consumption expense.

During this period, over half of the rural households in the whole country built new houses. Measured by years, the proportions of the households with newly built houses in all the surveyed households are as follows: 11.6 percent in 1981; 8.9 percent in 1982; 11.2 percent in 1983; 9.1 percent in 1984; and 9.5 percent in 1985. To improve living conditions is a popular wish of the vast numbers of peasants. With the gradual improvement in the income level of the rural households, the "rush for building houses" will continue to stay for a period of time.

2. The Newly Built Houses Have Larger Floor Space and Better Quality

During the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" period, the average number of newly-built houses of every rural household markedly exceeded the previous period, and the number of the newly-built houses in 1985 increased by 34.8 percent over 1980. Meanwhile, the per capita newly built floor space also markedly expanded, from 0.56 square meters in 1980 to 0.91 square meters in 1985, an increase of 62.5 percent. In these 5 years, the newly-built floor space in the whole country totalled 3.2 billion square meters.

During the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" period, the quality of the newly-built houses also constantly improved.

1. The number of the houses made of brick and wood and reinforced concrete went up relatively fast. During the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" period, the proportion of houses newly built by peasants with brick and wood and reinforced concrete in the total newly built floor space were as follows: 57.1 percent in 1981; 62.8 percent in 1982; 68 percent in 1983; 72 percent in 1984; and 73.1 percent in 1985.

2. Of the newly built houses, the proportions of multi-storied buildings increased year after year. The proportion of the floor space of the newly built multi-storied buildings was 11 percent in 1983, 14.6 percent in 1984, and 16.7 percent in 1985. The proportion of floor space of the newly-built multi-storied buildings in the more economically developed areas is much higher. For example, in 1985, the proportion of floor space of the newly-built multi-storied building in Shanghai was 79.6 percent and 66.1 percent in Zhejiang Province.

3. The Peasants' Floor Space Is Expanding Year by Year

With the increase of the newly-built houses, the peasants' floor space is expanding year by year. During the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" period, the average number of rooms used by each household by the end of each year were respectively 4.28, 4.56, 4.81, 5.07, and 5.11. The per capita year-end floor space was 10.16 square meters in 1981; 10.73 square meters in 1982; 11.63 square meters in 1983; 13.64 square meters in 1984; and 14.7 in 1985. The annual growth rates of these years are respectively 8.1 percent, 5.6 percent, 8.4 percent, 17.3 percent and 7.8 percent.

4. The Existing Problems

First, in different localities, the degrees of improvement in the living conditions of the peasants are different. During the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" period, although the living conditions of the peasants were considerably improved, relatively big differences still exist in different localities. By the end of 1985, the per capita floor space was 16.63 square meters in the eastern part of the country, 14.05 square meters in the central part of the country and 12.05 square meters in the western part of the country. The proportion of the houses of brick and wood and reinforced structures in the total floor space was 77.4 percent in the eastern part of the country, 48 percent in the central part of the country, and 19.5 percent in the western part of the country.

Second, some peasants build houses on farmland or woodland and without permission. According to a survey conducted among 3,100 rural households in 31 counties in Anhui Province, 13.13 percent of the rural households built new houses in 1985, with each household occupying an average of 0.14 mu of farmland. Reckoned in this proportion, the houses newly-built by rural households in the whole province in 1985 would have occupied 187,000 mu of farmland, accounting for 2.8 percent of the farmland in the whole province. According to a survey conducted in Fengjie County in Sichuan, 187 households in Wansheng township built new houses in 1985. Of these households, 68 households build new houses without permission, accounting for 36.4 percent of the total number of the households with newly-built houses.

Third, building materials are in short supply; and the prices are going up too rapidly. It is known that of the building materials needed by the peasants for building houses at present, only 37.8 percent are self-made, and the rest have to be purchased from markets. However, it is very difficult to purchase building materials like steel, wood, cement, and so on. According to the data obtained in a survey, if the price of each building material purchased by the rural households from markets in 1983 was in 1985 the price for every kilogram of cement would become 1.2, the price for every cubic meter of wood would be 1.98, the price for every ton of steel would be 1.97; and the price for every square meter of glass would be 1.2.

TECHNOLOGY EXPERT ON PLANS FOR SATELLITES

[Text] Beijing, June 24 (XINHUA) -- China plans to launch large capacity communication, meteorological, and earth resources satellites in the next few years, a leading satellite expert said here today.

Min Guirong, president of the Chinese Academy of Space Technology, told XINHUA today, "We have been engaged in the research and development of large-capacity, multi-functional, long-life satellites. To meet the needs of the economic and scientific communities in China, work on some of these satellites has entered the final stage".

The large-capacity communication satellite now under development in China has more than ten transponders, which is equivalent to some international communication satellites now in use, Min revealed.

Min, 53, attending a national conference of science and technology which opened yesterday, is an expert in satellite heat control. He made important contributions to the development of China's first man-made earth satellite, scientific experimental satellites, and recoverable satellites.

China has been developing middle-orbit sun-synchronous and geostationary satellites to meet meteorological purposes.

The earth resources satellite under development in China is a multi-band, long life satellite equipped with transmission capabilities and remote sensors.

These new types of satellites can be widely used in agriculture, forestry, water conservation, meteorology, telecommunications, broadcasting, geology, exploitation of mines and seas, education, and culture, Min told XINHUA in an interview.

Min stressed that the development of China's satellites should not rely on foreign countries, but on domestic forces. The successful launching of 18 satellites has proved China's capability, he said.

Efforts will be focused on improving the quality, reliability, and service life of satellites. Development time will also be shortened with improved technology, Min said.

Since the 1950's, China has successfully developed a series of rockets including the "Long-March 1", "Long-March 2", and "Long-March 3", and launched 18 scientific experimental satellites, including seven recoverable ones. Of the launched satellites, two are still in orbit. One was launched on April 8, 1984, and the other on February 1, 1986.

REGULATIONS ON SINO-FOREIGN COOPERATIVE DESIGN

[Text] Beijing, June 5 (XINHUA) -- All the designs of projects with Chinese, Sino-Foreign or entirely foreign investments should embody Chinese design norms even if they are entrusted to foreign designers.

This is contained in the provisional regulations on Sino-foreign cooperative design promulgated here today.

The designs of projects with Chinese investment, which can be done by Chinese design institutions, should not be entrusted to foreigners, but may ask for relevant techniques or technological advice from them, say the regulations, which are to be put into effect July 1.

In principle, it says, the designs of foreign-invested projects in China should be done by Chinese designers, or in a cooperative way by Chinese and foreign institutions if the concerned foreign investor would like to entrust the work to foreign designers.

The authorities should select a Chinese partner at the same time as a foreign designer is decided, the 16-article regulations add.

A Sino-foreign cooperative design might cover all the procedures from prospecting through to the end or just a phase of the design.

It should be top priority for a cooperative design to first use Chinese materials and equipment if they are able to meet the demanded standards, according to the regulations.

Basic data concerning topography, geology, hydrology, meteorology and environmental information needed by the foreign designer will be provided by the relevant Chinese departments for a fee. And the user is forbidden to make over these stuff to a third side.

And a foreign design institution cannot participate in a cooperative design until its qualifications have been approved by the Chinese authorities, the regulations say. The State Planning Commission is responsible for the regulations.

JINGJI RIBAO ON INDUSTRIAL PERFORMANCE 'UNDULATION'

HK080251 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0701 GMT 7 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 7 Jun (XINHUA) -- China's industrial output rose by 4.2 percent from January to April compared with the same period last year, the lowest rise recorded in recent years. However, this certainly does not mean that a "decline" has occurred in the country's industrial production; it is "only an undulation."

This view is put forward in a signed economic commentary carried in today's JINGJI RIBAO.

The commentary says that 4.2 percent was the growth rate recorded in the first 4 months of the year compared with the same period last year, when an "excessive growth rate" of 23.3 percent was recorded compared with the corresponding period of 1984; such is the basis for the comparison. It is evident from this that a further 4.2 percent increase on the basis of a 23.3 percent rise can obviously not be judged as "excessive cooling" of the economy, and even if it is compared with the growth rate of 18 percent for the whole of last year, this cannot be described as a "decline"; and still less can it be said to be a "decline," if we discount certain abnormal factors of excessive growth, in comparison with last year's 18 percent overall growth and the 8 percent growth planned for this year.

In the last quarter of 1984, China macroeconomically "lost control" in capital construction, credits, and so on. This directly caused the "excessive growth" in industry at the beginning of 1985 when the economy suddenly "heated up," resulting in proportional imbalance in various aspects. However, beginning in the second quarter of 1985, China adopted a series of measures for strengthening macroeconomic control, with the result that this "overheating of the economy" rapidly moderated.

The article says that although there have been "big rises" in China's industrial production in recent years, there have been no "big falls." The slowdown in growth rate has been a gradual, month by month affair since the second half of last year.

However, the article emphasizes that, after all, "small undulations" have appeared that exceed normal economic fluctuations; moreover, the figure of about 4 percent is only a national average, and in areas that have recorded growth rates below that, or even negative growth rates, these could all the more be described as "undulations" with worrying prospects.

The article says that the appearance of "undulations" in industrial production is objectively inevitable, and to a certain extent it is the normal reflection in economic construction of the complexity of China's urban reforms. People therefore need not fly into a panic when "undulations" occur; of course it is necessary to attach great importance to the series of new problems reflected by these "undulations."

NATIONAL DEFENSE STRATEGY SYMPOSIUM OPENS

TIAN JIYUN MEETS LECTURE GROUP AT ZHONGNANHAI

[By reporters Ren Zeli and Pu Liye]

[Text] Beijing, 24 Jun (XINHUA) -- Tian Jiyun, vice premier of the State Council, met with a lecture group consisting of advanced persons from state farms and land reclamation departments at Zhongnanhai this afternoon.

The group gave nine lectures in government offices, schools, and PLA units in the capital from 10 to 24 June. In the lectures, members of the group briefed those present on their deeds of working hard to develop agriculture and to carry out land reclamation and of being bold in doing pioneering work. Their lectures received strong responses from their audiences totaling nearly 10,000 people, especially from graduating college students. Many students expressed their determination to go to the countryside, border regions, or wherever the motherland needs them most to work for the country's four modernizations.

After hearing a briefing by the group, Tian Jiyun said: In your lectures, you have not only dealt with general principles but explained such principles by using your own experiences as an example and based such explanations on realities. This will give a big impetus to the building of a socialist spiritual civilization. He encouraged the members of the group to make persistent efforts to achieve new successes.

Present at today's meeting were Wang Zhen, vice chairman of the Advisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee; He Kang, minister of agriculture, animal husbandry, and fishery; and Luosang, member of the CYL Central Committee Secretariat.

WAN LI URGES EXPLOITING SEA TO IMPROVE DIET

[Text] Beijing, June 21 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Wan Li has called on officials from central and local departments to make greater efforts in the exploitation of sea resources to enrich the nation's diet.

He made the call in a speech at a symposium on marine study and exploration at Qingdao, which is carried in the latest issue of OUTLOOK WEEKLY magazine, to be published on Monday.

Wan said the most urgent task was to develop sea farming, adding: "We must add protein to people's diet by supplying more fish, prawn, scallops, crab and trepang.

"For a country with one billion people, we must turn to the sea for new food resources."

Local coastal authorities must make every possible effort to develop sea farming, and officials at all levels should attach major importance to the study, exploitation and protection of marine resources.

Research institutes must co-ordinate their efforts to achieve faster and better results. He suggested the import of advanced breeding equipment and co-operation with industry.

Certain policies must be adjusted to tap the potential of the fishing industry.

"From a long-term point of view, we must give priority to protecting sea resources," Wan said. "Excessive catching and water pollution must be prevented for the sake of later production." The vice-premier also urged the development of deep-sea fishing, which is now carried out by only a few big companies.

NEW TOWN TO COPE WITH CHANGING RURAL PRODUCTION

[Text] Beijing, June 19 (XINHUA) -- A well-equipped rural new town is being built to the east of Beijing to house thousands of peasant families who no longer work on the land as farming becomes more mechanised in recent years.

It is being built next to the old town of Zhangxizhuang, 25 kilometers from Beijing, a new development to cope with the changing rural production pattern, said Wang Desheng, deputy head of the Zhangxizhuang township government to XINHUA today.

Han Weicheng, manager of Beijing rural construction development company, said: "This is one of the 13 pilot towns selected to be modernized to suit the rural economic development." Beijing has 253 rural towns.

The new town will include 2,500 two- to three-storey maisonettes, local government offices, recreation center, cinema, kindergartens, primary and middle schools, a park and industrial and business centers.

In the past, 90 percent of the 3,000 peasant families there worked on land, but now 20 percent suffices, giving an all time high grain output. The surplus labour power, 80 percent, who live in 11 scattered villages around Zhangxizhuang, have taken jobs in 66 local factories or have started various businesses. Local factories produced output value of 32,830,000 yuan last year -- 80 percent of the town's total.

The rural industrial boom boosted peasants' income to 1,275 yuan per person on average last year, compared with less than 150 yuan in 1978. Most families have tv sets and washing machines and have built new houses or extended old ones.

Since building work began on the new town in 1984, roads and water and electricity supplies have been laid and 12 maisonettes built. These are already occupied.

Families will be offered a price by the local authorities for their old homes. If they accept, they can pay an average of 10,000 yuan for a spacious new maisonette, and the old houses are demolished to provide more much-needed agricultural land. Hundreds have already applied.

However, deputy head Wang noted, the town will only be completed by the end of the century.

DOMESTIC PRODUCTION OF COMPUTERS EMPHASIZED

[By correspondent Sun Minqiang and reporter Chen Zhiqiang]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 13 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Astronautics Industry has attached importance to domestic production of electronic computers. Its products are sold to 28 provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions, as well as 20 countries and regions in Asia, America, and Africa. It has found a Chinese way to develop and popularize the use of computers.

Following the principle of importing things from abroad, digesting them, developing our own products, and creating new ones the Ministry of Astronautics Industry has used Chinese-made electronic parts to design and manufacture some 700 computers from 38 models needed by China. Great progress has been made in the manufacture and application of computers used in rockets, satellites, and trucks. All special-purpose computers for military use are made by China. Some computers have reached the advanced level of the early 1980's. At present this ministry has developed a system that incorporates research, production, and application of integrated circuits, whole sets of computers, and peripheral equipment and software. It is now capable of annual producing 5,600 microcomputers, and small and medium-sized computers; as well as 5 million pieces of integrated circuits. It has established three bases for producing integrated circuits, and has put more than 2,000 computers into operation.

NEW PHARMACEUTICAL LAW RAISING STANDARDS

[Text] Beijing, June 17 (XINHUA) -- After only a year on the books, China's first pharmaceutical control law has succeeded in ensuring that "all the medicines on market will be up to standard this year," a Pharmaceutical Administration official said today.

Liu Yonggang, deputy director of the State Pharmaceutical Administration told a news briefing here today the law, which went into effect last July, guarantees the safety and effectiveness of medicine in China.

"Control of the quality of medicine will be our top priority for the rest of the decade," he said. Liu said in the latest round of inspections in March, 1,763 of China's 1,950 pharmaceutical factories were certified as being up to the law's standards, as were 19,059 out of 24,944 sales and distribution companies. Under the new law, uncertified factories must bring all products up to standard to continue production, and uncertified sales and distribution companies will be denied access to products from factories. All factories under construction must meet the law's standards to open.

EDUCATIONAL TV CHANNEL TO OPEN 1 JULY

[Excerpts] Beijing, 23 Jun (XINHUA) -- To train the large number of personnel urgently needed for the "four modernizations" program, the State Council has decided that an educational satellite TV channel will be opened on 1 July for a trial period. The official date for launching this channel will be 1 October.

According to the department concerned under the State Education Commission, China's satellite TV educational programs will be aimed mainly at training primary and secondary school teachers and developing higher education, secondary vocational and technical education, as well as continuing education for adults. It is hoped that the satellite TV educational programs, coupled with other forms of education, will enable the primary and secondary school teachers nationwide, now numbering several millions, to further their study so as to improve themselves and advance step by step to fulfill the requirements of our teacher-training project. At the same time, adult education will be further promoted through these programs.

The broadcasting times of the satellite TV educational programs are: From 0600 to 1700 [2100-0800 GMT] -- program for training primary and secondary school teachers; from 1700 to 2300 [0800-1400 GMT] -- TV university programs.

State Councillor Fang Yi and Minister of Metallurgical Industry Qu Yuanjing attended the opening ceremony.

An official from the Metallurgical Ministry told XINHUA that efforts were being made by Chinese factories to increase the quantity and variety and improve the quality of their products through expansion and technical modernization.

China's steel output totalled 46.7 million tons last year, and this year's target is 50 million tons. The official said the exhibition offered Chinese technicians a good opportunity to exchange experience with their foreign counterparts.

LIANG BUTING ADDRESSES SHANDONG COMMENCEMENT

SK280219 Jinan Shangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 27 Jun 86

At the commencement, Comrade Liang Buting delivered a long report on the situation. In his report, he reviewed the economic development achieved during the period since the fourth provincial party congress, particularly since 1985, and made an overall analysis and a profound exposition on the speed of economic development. He stressed that by no means should we attain excessively high or low speed in economic development and that we should maintain unity among speed, benefits, and reserve strength.

He stated: The situation in economic development in the first half of 1986 has been fine. We should make efforts to maintain the good trend in the latter half in order to win victory in the first year of implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

In his report, Comrade Liang Buting put forward ardent expectations to the graduates and urged them to bring their knowledge and theories learned in the party school into line with practice in order to promote the programs of conducting reforms, enforcing the policy opening to the outside, and of building the two civilizations. He urged them to carry forward the achievements scored in party rectification in the party school, to be vanguards in straightening out party style, to work hard, to enhance the building-up of will-power, and to improve their ability in order to make further contributions to developing the excellent situation in the province.

Also attending the commencement were (Gao Changli), Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee, and responsible comrades from the Organization and Propaganda Departments under the provincial CPC Committee.

GUANGDONG OFFICIAL ON STRENGTHENING VITALITY OF ENTERPRISES

Vice Governor Kuang Ji said: The powers vested in enterprises according to state stipulations must be respected and protected by the whole society. The governments and departments of all places are not allowed to make laws by themselves so as to enable them to indiscriminately apportion expenses among and collect charges from enterprises. At present, we must conduct an inspection of the situation in indiscriminately apportioning expenses among enterprises. The collection of charges contrary to regulations must be stopped. The charges which should be returned to enterprises must be returned. The governments of all places, including the discipline inspection and auditing departments, must take vigorous measures to curb indiscriminately apportioning expenses among and collecting charges from enterprises.

GUANGDONG: QIANSHAN WATERWAY TO REOPEN FOR NAVIGATION

[Report: "Qianshan Waterway Will Be Reopened for Navigation"]

[Text] Guangzhou, 20 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Guangdong's Qianshan waterway, which leads to Macao and which has been closed for 17 years, will be reopened. Construction of the waterway's major projects will be complete at the end of June.

The Qianshan waterway which leads from Zhongshan City in the west to Macao in the east, is a major inland waterway of the Zhu Jiang Delta. Its total length is 23 kilometers. In the past, passenger and cargo ships from Guangxi and the Zhu Jiang Delta took this waterway to Macao.

Two projects for reopening the Qianshan waterway are reconstruction of the Lianshiwan lock gate at the inlet section in Zhongshan City and construction of the Shijiaozhui lock date at the outlet of the Qianshan Waterway. The lock gates at these two places are of the same scale. The lock gate is 125 meters long and 14 meters wide. The gate itself is 12 meters wide and the depth at the gate is 3 meters. The gates and water supply valves are all operated by hydraulic machines. Passenger ships carrying more than 300 people and 500-ton barges can pass through the gates. Construction of the Shijiaozhui lock gate will be completed at the end of June. The Qianshan waterway to Macao will be reopened to navigation by then.

GUANGZHOU ADOPTS VARIOUS METHODS OF RAISING FUNDS

[Text] Guangzhou, 25 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Under present conditions whereby the money supply is tight, Guangzhou has employed various forms to raise funds.

The newest form is to openly issue bonds in the kind in society. The first unit to have done so is Zhujiang Cement Plant. Since 1 July, it has openly issued bonds in kind in society with a total face value of 30 million yuan, and a time limit of 3 years. After the expiration of the time limit, the bondholders may exchange their bonds for cement produced by the plant, or exchange the bond, with a face value of 120 yuan, for 156 yuan. The matter will be handled by the bank formerly in charge of the work.

There is another form of raising funds in Guangzhou recently -- staff members and workers of enterprises collectively become shareholders of their enterprises. Taking average monthly wages as a standard amount of capital stock, each and every staff member and worker in the collective enterprises buys stock in their enterprises. At present, there are 260 enterprises which have adopted this form of raising funds. Some state-operated enterprises are conducting experiments in turning themselves into joint-stock enterprises. They are Guangzhou silk and linen plant, Qiaoguang pharmaceutical factory, and Mingxing pharmaceutical factory.

The methods of issuing stocks or bonds in society or inside enterprises in order to raise funds have been employed since the first half of last year. Those units which raise funds are factories and enterprises. At present, there are more than 600 enterprises in Guangzhou which have issued stocks and bonds. They have raised funds totaling 120 million yuan.

The people concerned maintain that raising funds through various forms is beneficial to easing the tense situation of insufficient money supply. However, if we fail to carry out good management, some loopholes might occur. For example, some enterprises might issue bonuses arbitrarily in the guise of drawing extra dividends and paying interest. At present, Guangzhou has adopted measures to exercise control over the work of raising funds. It has been stipulated that decisions of enterprises to raise funds should, first of all, be approved by the People's Bank. The annual extra dividends drawn should not exceed 12 percent of the amount of capital stock.

LATERAL ECONOMIC ASSOCIATION HELPS SHENZHEN DEVELOPMENT

[Report: "Lateral Economic Association Accelerates the Development of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Shenzhen, 25 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- With the help of many bicycle accessory factories in the interior, Zhonghua Bicycle Company Limited, an enterprise in Shenzhen jointly owned by Chinese and foreign businessmen, has drastically increased the number of bicycles exported to foreign countries for this year. It is expected that its export volume will reach 200,000, which is equal to 40 percent of the total amount of bicycles exported to foreign countries from Mainland China in the last year.

This is one of the successful examples of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone's developing lateral economic association with the interior. Its characteristics are bringing into full play the strong points of both sides, namely, the fast feedback of information and the numerous channels for export in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone and the powerful technical strength and the ample supply of raw materials in the interior.

This kind of lateral economic association in Shenzhen has varied patterns and flexibility. At present, it has developed from the early association with counties and cities to the association with every industrial department as well as every province and municipality; from the unitary association within a trade to the association integrating production with science and technology, industry with trade, agriculture with trade and technology with trade; from the bilateral association of Shenzhen and the interior to the multilateral association of Shenzhen-the interior-foreign businessmen. Moreover, a number of enterprise clusters and groups have taken shape.

For example, the Shenzhen Electronics Group has over 100 subordinate enterprises and the backing of the scientific research institutes, institutes of higher learning and a number of factories in the interior. At present, it is planning to set up branches in the United States, Japan, Canada and other places.

So far, Shenzhen has jointly set up 2,395 various enterprises together with 27 departments of the central authorities and the 28 provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities in the whole country, involving a total agreed investment of 5.6 billion yuan and a real investment of over 1.3 billion yuan.

The lateral economic association has brought obvious advantages to the construction and production of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone. In a short period of only a few years, Shenzhen has completed the basic engineering construction in its new urban areas of 38 square kilometers, set up industrial factories, dwellings for staff and workers, commerical buildings and public facilities with a total floor space of over 9 million square meters, which is chiefly an achievement brought about by developing association between Shenzhen and the interior. Last yea-, the industrial output value of the enterprises jointly run by Shenzhen and the interior amounted to over 360 million yuan, accounting for 20 percent of the industrial output value in Shenzhen. Furthermore, it has more than 170 products which entered the international markets. In the last few years, the interior has sent over 12,000 various technical personnel to Shenzhen.

Recently, in the light of the development principle of the special economic zone, the Shenzhen City government has further studies issues like trends, patterns, preferential policies, business management, and so on concerning the lateral economic association and proceeded to work out a specific regulations, so as to secure better results from this kind of economic association.

HUNAN PRICE SUPERVISION, INSPECTION MEETING ENDS

[Excerpt] Our station reporter has learned from the provincial symposium on price supervision and inspection, which concluded in Hengyang on 17 June, that since 1984 Hunan has set up 193 price supervision stations and hired 1,800 voluntary price inspectors. A social price supervisory network has initially formed. Price violations totalling 33 million yuan have been unearthed and dealt with in the past 2 years. Of this amount, 5.3 million yuan have been returned to customers and individuals, and 28 million have been spent on buying state bonds.

Vice Governor Yang Huiquan pointed out at the meeting that it is essential to fully understand the position and role of price inspection work in the new situation and vigorously increase this work, to ensure basic stability of overall price levels and create an excellent social environment for reform.

BEIJING RIBAO CALLS FOR MORE LEASING BUSINESSES

[Text] Beijing, June 23 (XINHUA) -- More leasing businesses should be established in Beijing to meet the demands of economic construction, according to an article in today's BEIJING DAILY.

Leasing rather than purchasing equipment would not only save money for the country and for enterprises, but also make better use of idle equipment, the article said.

It pointed out that there are two ways to set up a leasing businesses. One way is to establish. The other way is to set up a leasing company and then jointly open businesses with other units. For China, the second way is preferable because of current shortages. More than ten enterprises in Beijing have started a computer leasing businesses.

Some 40 leasing companies throughout the country are operating, including 13 joint ventures using Chinese and foreign capital and 27 state-owned leasing enterprises. These 40 companies have signed 1,100 leasing agreements both in China and overseas worth 800 million U.S. dollars.

CONFERENCE CALLS FOR BETTER SERVICE IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, June 26 (XINHUA) -- The Central authorities have urged Beijing to improve its service trades and set a fine example for the whole country.

The call, from the Secretariat of the Communist Party Central Committee, was disclosed at a conference on service trades in Beijing which ended here Wednesday.

The leaders of the Secretariat were quoted as saying that Beijing's commerce was an important "window" on the commercial work of the whole country and its quality exerts a tremendous influence at home and abroad.

The urged the Beijing authorities to take effective measures to improve the quality of services and the attitude of service workers.

Following complaints about Beijing's poor services made at the National People's Congress last May, the Beijing authorities held a special conference to discuss the matter from June 23 to 25. More than 1,000 officials, including Minister of Commerce Liu Yi, attended.

Li Ximing, secretary of the municipal Communist Party Committee, said at the meeting that the municipal party committee and government should be the first to be responsible for the poor services.

Reforms such as more management autonomy should be carried out in commercial and other service trades, which means more freedom for managers to negotiate with suppliers and sales outlets. And it also means "workers should not share equally in bonuses," said Li. "They should be paid according to the quality of their work" "What we want, after all, is to serve the people wholeheartedly," he said. "We must provide good service even when goods are short."

Li told the meeting the government will cut taxes and subsidize loans for enterprises that produce or distribute such indispensable commodities as needles and buttons that are not particularly profitable to make or sell. He said the government would cut red tape that discouraged collectively- and privately-owned stores from engaging in service trades that can improve the quality of city life. Rather than try to control the economy directly, he said, the government should regulate it through price and tax policies.

XING CHONGZHI AT HEBEI FORUM OF ENTERPRISES DIRECTORS

During discussions, the plant directors boldly put forward some tentative ideas for reform and some methods for vitalizing enterprises in line with the existing problems in their production such as those in funds, raw materials, sales, development of lateral economic cooperation, and personnel system.

During discussions, Comrade Xing Chongzhi said: At present, enterprises still have to resolve the issue of further vitalizing themselves, and to decentralize power to the lower levels as soon as possible. The higher-level departments should strengthen guidance and attend to coordination and service work in all fields. This year, in order to vitalize large and medium-sized enterprises and to intensify their vitality, we should develop lateral economic cooperation, the earlier the better. If we fail to develop lateral economic cooperation, it will be difficult for enterprises to have vitality. Meanwhile, enterprises should reform their internal organization setups, the product structure, and the personnel system. At present, the prominent problem of enterprises is the shortage of funds. In order to instill vitality into enterprises, we should exert efforts to sole this problem, and to invigorate the circulation of funds through various channels and methods. While touching on unhealthy trends and the limits of normal business, Comrade Xing Chongzhi said: We should not handle things that are not malpractices as malpractices. This demarcation line must be clearly drawn. The improper handling of things at the previous stage must be corrected. All in all, we should further solve this problem and continue to persist in reform.

Jia Ran, secretary of the Shijiazhuang City CPC Committee, and Mayor Wang Baohua, also joined the discussion meeting.

NEI MONGGOL ARTICLE ON EDUCATING PARTY MEMBERS

SK270141 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] The seventh issue of the city edition of DANGDI JIAOYU [THE PARTY's EDUCATION] carries an article by Zhou Rongchang, Standing committee member of the regional CPC Committee and director of its organizational department. The title of the article is "Strengthen the Education on the Party's Basic Knowledge, and Improve the Political and Ideological Quality of Party Members."

The article states: The number of party members throughout the region has developed from 27,000 in 1949 to 710,000 at present.

These party members have satisfactorily played their vanguard and exemplary role at all historical stages. In particular, since the 3d plenary session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, a large number of outstanding party members who have strong party spirit and good work style, who are bold in making innovations, and who render service to the masses, have emerged on all fronts.

The article states: We must notice that the wounds inflicted by the Great Cultural revolution on the party building have not yet been healed completely, and a fundamental turn for the better in party style has not yet been effected. Viewing the organizational situation, the quality of party members [words indistinct]; the majority of party members have lacked party spirit and their quality has been poor. Some veteran party members have slackened their efforts in study and ideological transformation, and have gradually forgotten the party's knowledge and regulations. This situation tells us that we must regard the strengthening of education among party members as a major content of strengthening the party building and straightening out party style. At present, we should emphatically grasp the education among those party members who have joined the party since the Cultural Revolution, and among the party-member leading comrades in particular, in order to enable them to understand the party's basic knowledge and to conscientiously observe the party discipline.

The article states: In light of the political and ideological situation of the party members' rank of our region, we should conduct the education on the party's basic knowledge in the following three aspects: First, we should strengthen the education on the party's purpose. Second, we should strengthen the education on the principle of democratic centralism. Third, we should strengthen the education on observing discipline and laws.

The article states: To achieve success in the above-mentioned three aspects of education, we must attend to the work in the following five fields: 1) all party members at higher and lower levels should participate in party activities; 2) party-member leading cadres should set examples in studying and pursuing the party knowledge; 3) we should make full use of the weapon of criticism and self-criticism, ad actively conduct a serious ideological struggle; 4) we should supervise the party strictly; and 5) we should adhere to the standards for party members and improve the quality of newly-developed party members.

[Text] The conference of directors of the offices in charge of party rectification under the prefectural, city, and county party committees throughout the province concluded on 20 June. The conference pointed out that a good job should be done in carrying out the party rectification drive with high standard and quality among the neighborhoods in urban areas and among the enterprises and establishments at the grass-roots level and in realistically conducting the party rectification work at the county level and in rural areas in order to consolidate or develop the results scored in the drive.

The conference contended that the party organizations among the neighborhoods in urban areas and among the enterprises and establishments at the grass-roots level, as well as the majority of party members in them, are good or better. However, some of the organizations have slackness and lack of unity in both work and discipline. They have a larger number of backward party members and prominent problems in the economy. Therefore, we should clearly discern the necessity and urgency of carrying out the party rectification drive among the neighborhoods in urban areas and among the enterprises and establishments at the grass-roots level. In conducting the party rectification work, we should concentrate on successfully conducting education on party spirit among party members in order to further upgrade the quality of party members, and on successfully dealing with the serious problems committed by party members with regard to violating the law and discipline and seeking personal gain by taking advantage of power in order to fulfill, in an overall way the four tasks set forth by the party rectification decision made by the CPC Central Committee and to further enhance the fighting role of the party organizations among these neighborhoods, enterprises, and establishments in building the socialist modernization, as well as to further promote the building of the material and spiritual civilizations.

The conference emphatically pointed out: In carrying out the party rectification drive among the neighborhoods in urban areas and among the enterprises and establishments at the grass-roots level, we should base our work on the principle of strictly running the party and uphold the guideline of setting a high standard and strict demands. Efforts should be made to make a breakthrough in the drive to deal with the problems causing strong complaints from the masses and full of universal significance in order to rapidly open up new prospects in the drive. We should organically integrate the party rectification work at the grass-roots level with the work of consolidating or developing the results scored in the party rectification drive by the leading organs and the enterprises and establishments at or above the county level. Those important or serious problems committed by the leading cadres at or above the county level that have been exposed by the party rectification drive at the grass-roots level should be earnestly investigated and dealt with.

The conference held discussions on revising the work arrangements for the party rectification drive among the neighborhoods in urban areas and among the enterprises and establishments at the grass-roots level and heard the reports given by the units, including the Jianhua District in Qiqihar City, with regard to their experience gained in the drive.

Comrade Liu Chengguo, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, attended the conference and delivered a speech.

JILIN PARTY RECTIFICATION WORK CONFERENCE ENDS

SK201128 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] The 6-day provincial party rectification work conference ended in Changchun today.

At the conference, the participants further clarified the guidelines for rural party rectification, deeply understood the major points and the principles which must be adhered to in the course of party rectification, the preparatory work prior to carrying out party rectification, and the methods and measures for the village-level party rectification, and strengthened confidence in carrying out grass-roots party rectification in the rural areas.

The conference pointed out that the current provincewide rural party rectification work is in an overlapping stage where township and town party rectification work is drawing to an end and the village-level party rectification is about to begin. During this period, we should not only guarantee the quality of the township and town party rectification from start to finish but should also make good preparations for the village-level party rectification. Therefore, all localities should give simultaneous consideration to township and village-level party rectification and make overall arrangements. Meanwhile, we should not slacken for a moment our efforts to strengthen leadership over the party rectification work of enterprises below the county level. We should pay attention to summing up experiences, study the specific lines of demarcation in applying a policy while dealing with problems, and give careful guidance.

The conference emphatically pointed out: The key to making village-level party rectification successful lies in making good preparations prior to party rectification. The preparatory work, whether good or bad, has a direct bearing on the quality of party rectification. The county CPC committees should strictly examine the preparatory work for village-level party rectification and prevent a situation of starting the work hurriedly.

The conference analyzed the situation in carrying out rural party rectification work throughout the province and held that the key to making village-level party rectification successful lies in correctly understanding and grasping the principle of not creating chaos while solving problems. Solving problems is a premise; therefore, we should focus our work on solving problems. While carrying out village-level party rectification, we should firmly grasp the major points of party rectification, deeply conduct education on party spirit among the broad masses of party members, and establish good party branches. On the premise of solving problems, we should pay attention to policies and methods for solving problems so that the solutions will conform to the actual situation and can withstand the test of history and that no leftover problems will remain. By so doing, we can ensure that no chaotic situation will emerge.

Most of the grass-roots cadres in the rural areas throughout the province are good or comparatively good. Those who abuse power and position to seek personal gains and violate laws and discipline account for only a small number. In the course of party rectification we should boost the enthusiasm of the broad masses of rural grass-roots cadres and encourage them to participate in party rectification on their own initiative.

The conference put forward demands on further consolidating and developing the achievements in party rectification: At present we should continue to deeply check malpractices, particularly the malpractices of abusing the privileges of various trades to seek personal gains, and attend to this work resolutely and persistently; should hold discussions on leaders serving the people among the leading organs, and prominently solve their problems of bureaucratism, shifting responsibility onto others, disputing over trifles, and neglecting duties; and should further improve the system of holding activities on democratic life, continue to investigate and handle major and appalling cases and the work of investigating and verifying the three types of persons, strengthen the building of CPC committees of organizations, and fully display their functional role.

At the conference, Wang Xianjin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a report on behalf of the provincial CPC Committee. Du Qinglin, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee and chairman of the Party Rectification Office of the provincial CPC Committee, gave a summing-up speech.

JILIN PLA HOLDS POLITICAL WORK FORUM FOR RESERVE FORCES

SK252332 Changchun JILIN RIBAO in Chinese 15 Jun 86 p 1

[Text] To cope with the new problems arising in the building of reserve forces after transferring the People's Armed Forces departments to the local authorities, the provincial military district held a forum on the political work of reserve forces from 10 to 12 June. The Mass Work Department of the Shenyang Military Region, and the Organization and Propaganda Departments of the provincial CPC Committee sent delegates to attend the forum.

In view of the actual conditions of the building of reserve forces, the forum emphasized four tasks: First, it is necessary to do a good job in propaganda and education, and to enhance understanding of the nature, tasks, position and role of reserve forces. A combination of a compact and efficient standing army with powerful reserve forces is the only way to modernize national defense. Streamlining the active military units and strengthening the building of reserve forces enables us to maintain a small army in peacetime, and dispatch a large army during wartime. This is conducive to both national defense and economic construction. Second, it is necessary to bring into better balance the relations between the People's Armed Forces departments and the reserve army regiments, and make concerted efforts to do a good job in the building of reserve strength. The reserve army regiments and the People's Armed Forces departments belong to the military and the local organizational systems, respectively, but shoulder common tasks. Therefore, they should take into consideration the overall situation in building reserve strength and exert concerted efforts to make it successful. Third, it is necessary to strengthen the cadre contingents of the reserve forces and give full play to their role. Fourth, it is necessary to establish division and regiment party committees to strengthen leadership over the reserve forces, ensure the implementation of the party's line, principles and policies, and the instructions of higher authorities. Reserve army divisions and regiments should ask for instructions from and report their work to local party committees and governments, and voluntarily subject themselves to the leadership of local party committees and government.

FUJIAN'S HU PING INTERVIEWED ON TRADE WITH TAIWAN, HONG KONG

HK261319 Hong Kong KUANG CHIAO CHING in Chinese No 165, 16 Jun 86 pp 28-31

[Article by Li Kuo-chiang: "Hu Ping: Fujian Plans To Expand Its Trade With Taiwan -- Exclusive Interview With Fujian Governor Hu Ping" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Fujian Has Made Preparations for Expanding Trade With Taiwan

"ON EXPANDING TRADE WITH TAIWAN, THE FUJIAN SIDE HAS MADE PREPARATIONS. THE KEY LIES ON THE TAIWAN SIDE."

"THERE IS STILL A 'FUJIAN PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT' IN THE KMT. MY COUNTERPART IS MR TAI CHUNG-YU, CHAIRMAN OF THE KMT FUJIAN PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT, WHO HANDLES OFFICIAL BUSINESS ON JINMEN ISLAND. A NATIVE OF WESTERN FUJIAN, HE IS OVER 70 NOW. (NOTE: TAI CHUNG-YU DIED OF ILLNESS ON 21 MAY. THE STANDING COMMITTEE OF THE TAIWAN KMT CENTRAL COMMITTEE HAS APPOINTED 50-YEAR-OLD WU CHIN-TSAN "CHAIRMAN OF THE FUJIAN PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT." WU IS A NATIVE OF JINMEN COUNTY, FUJIAN PROVINCE.) HE AND I HAVE AT LEAST TWO IDENTICAL VIEWS: FIRST, WE SAY THAT JINMEN AND MAZU BELONG TO FUJIAN PROVINCE; SECOND, WE MAINTAIN THAT THE PROVINCIAL CAPITAL IS FUZHOU. OF COURSE, THERE ARE DIFFERENCES OF OPINION, BUT WE HAVE SO MANY THINGS IN COMMON THAT THE DIFFERENCES CAN EASILY BE SOLVED THROUGH MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING AND ACCOMODATION. THE SUCCESSFUL SOLUTION OF THE 'CHINA AIRLINES' INCIDENT PRECISELY SHOWS THAT TAIWAN HAS SLIGHTLY CHANGED ITS ATTITUDE TOWARD THE 'THREE NO'S' POLICY. IT SHOWS THE ASPIRATIONS OF THE CHINESE THROUGHOUT THE WORLD FOR PEACEFUL REUNIFICATION, THE PROSPECTS FOR REUNIFICATION, AND THE POSSIBILITY TO REALIZE DENG XIAOPING'S CONCEPT OF 'ONE COUNTRY, TWO SYSTEMS.'"

Fujian Governor Hu Ping made the above remarks in an exclusive interview with KUANG CHIAO CHING monthly on the morning of 23 May.

It was said long ago that the present Fujian governor is a steady and astute person. This writer longed to have an opportunity to exclusively interview the important official of a province facing Taiwan across the Strait. Subsequently, I obtained his permission. The interview took place in Xihu Guesthouse, where I was staying. We talked for 2 hours, exceeding the schedule.

For the First Time, Hu Ping Disclosed His Life Story to the Outside World

Governor Hu Ping disclosed his life story for the first time to this magazine and to the outside world.

Hu Ping is not a native of Fujian Province but of Jiaxing, Zhejiang Province. But he has spent most of his time in Fujian. His wife is a native of Xiamen. For this reason, Chen Guangyi, the newly appointed secretary of the Fujian Provincial CPC Committee, said with a smile to this writer: Hu Ping is a son-in-law of Fujian.

The bespectacled Hu Ping has an amiable disposition and speaks in a methodical manner. Next month, the scholarly, important civilian official will be 56. He was born in July 1930 at Jianxing's Nanhu, which is the site of the First CPC National Congress and can be regarded as the birthplace of the CPC. In his childhood, Hu Ping learned a lot about the deeds of Chinese communists. This played an important role in determining his later aspirations.

At 14, poverty forced him to leave his native place and work as an apprentice in Changzhou, Jingsu Province. Hu Ping said that he worked as an apprentice for a year at a gauze shop in Changzhou and also studied at Changzhou Middle School. Later, after an examination he was admitted to Suzhou Industrial Training School set up by the provincial government. The well-known school has a history spanning 7-8 decades. It has trained many outstanding personnel in industry, science, and technology. Liu Jingji of Shanghai and many industrialists in Hong Kong and overseas once studied here.

Hu Ping said: "I was admitted to Suzhou Industrial Training School in 1946. Later, because I was engaged in the student movement, 'opposing starvation and the civil war,' I was watched so closely that I could not go on studying there. In 1948 I went to the northern Jiangsu liberated area. At that time, the Chang Jiang was blockaded by KMT troops. Therefore, I had to cross the river stealthily to enter northern Jiangsu."

He was only 18 at that time. Many of the CPC leaders at the central and local levels began life by engaging in the student movements and Hu Ping was obviously one of them.

In 1948-49, earthshaking changes took place in China. In April 1949, the CPC launched a campaign to cross the Chang Jiang. On 23 April, the 3d Field Army captured Nanjing, and on 27 May occupied Shanghai. Young Hu Ping also followed the PLA to the south. He worked in southern Jiangsu, but returned later to Changzhou to engage in CYL work. Crossing over mountain after mountain in the wake of the PLA, Hu Ping arrived in Fujian at the end of 1949. Since then, this civilian cadre has not left Fujian for 36 years.

Hu Ping told this writer that when he engaged in the student movement in Suzhou, he was not an underground party member yet. It was after liberation, namely, in 1950, that he joined the CPC. But he was one of China's first generation of the New Democratic Youth League members, joining the league in northern Jiangsu in 1949.

He Makes a Good Account of Himself in Production and Work

From 1949 to 1955, Hu Ping worked in Xiamen. In 1954 he was deputy director of the foreign affairs office in the city. In 1955 he was transferred to Fuzhou, working as deputy chief of the industrial department, an organ of the provincial CPC Committee. In 1965, on the eve of the "Cultural Revolution," he was promoted to deputy director of the general office of the Fujian provincial government.

When the "Great Cultural Revolution" started in 1966, Hu Ping still stuck to his post even in the most difficult and chaotic of times. At that time, Fujian was placed under military control. As deputy director of the comprehensive office of the production command post of the military control commission, he was in charge of production. Later, he was transferred to Longhai County, where he did farm work such as harvesting rice. His residence card was also transferred to the rural areas. He said: "At that time, my daughter was only 4 years old."

In September 1971, Lin Biao was killed in Outer Mongolia. "We returned after that," said Hu Ping.

After his return to Fujian, he was promoted to vice chairman of the Fujian Provincial Planning Commission.

In 1981 he was vice governor of Fujian, and later was elected acting governor and governor. Last autumn he was elected a member of the CPC Central Committee.

Hu Ping modestly said to this writer: Like my name, my personal experience is very ordinary. I was born in Zhejiang, grew up in Jiangsu, have become mature in Fujian, and will spend the rest of my life in Fujian!"

People often say that a successful person always has a virtuous wife. Mrs Hu is 2 years older than Hu Ping. Formerly a worker in Xiamen, she has retired, enjoying family life and helping Hu Ping with some services in the background. Hu Ping said: "Before retiring, she worked as an assistant manager in charge of steel products at a materials company."

His son, born in 1950, works at a computer center; his daughter, a student at Minjiang University in Fuzhou, will graduate this summer. He also has a 2-year-old grandson.

Hu Ping said: "My family is as simple as this."

The Trends of Reform and Opening Up in Fujian Are Irreversible

When this writer arrived in Fujian, the Fujian Provincial People's Congress had just concluded its meeting and the Seventh 5-Year Plan had just been put into effect.

Hu Ping said: "Fujian's way out lies in reforms. The Seventh 5-Year Plan period is crucial for the rejuvenation of Fujian." He emphatically said to this writer: "In the future we shall make further efforts to conduct reforms and to open up to the outside world. The trends of opening up are irreversible. We have a lot of work to do. The fundamental problem is to conduct reforms and to invigorate the domestic economy. In opening up to the outside world, we should run joint ventures well in order to achieve greater developments in the future."

He Attaches Great Importance to Hong Kong and Is Ready To Develop Greater Cooperation With Hong Kong

Hu Ping said: In the future, Fujian will provide a more favorable environment and offer more preferential terms in order to encourage Overseas Chinese to invest in enterprises in Fujian. In the meantime, Fujian also attaches very great importance to cooperation and other exchanges with Hong Kong. He said: "In Hong Kong there are some 700,000 people whose native place is Fujian. Two-thirds of Fujian's foreign trade is conducted through Hong Kong. Hong Kong's investment in Fujian accounts for some 80 percent of the direct investment amount. The enterprises using Hong Kong capital also account for some 80 percent of the enterprises set up with foreign capital, Overseas Chinese capital, and Hong Kong or Macao capital. The joint ventures using Chinese and Hong Kong or Macao capital also account for more than 80 percent of the 699 joint enterprises. This shows that Hong Kong is closely linked to Fujian's economy. It is hoped that we will develop more cooperation in economics, trade, shipping, and investment in the future.

"There is now a gratifying phenomenon. Many people of the Hong Kong industrial and commercial circles come to Fujian to study or make on-the-spot investigations. Their general impression is good. We also hope to utilize Hong Kong's advantages or specialities in banking, marketing, communications, and information to spread the cooperation to other countries. We have also found out that quite a few foreigners do business with Fujian through Hong Kong and Macao. Therefore, we hope our friends in Hong Kong and Macao will bring us more development opportunities so that we can open up to the world through Hong Kong and Macao. There will be bright prospects for both of us. We are ready to further develop and cooperate with Hong Kong."

Work on Overseas Chinese Affairs Should Be Combined With Economic Work

With regard to Overseas Chinese, Hu Ping said that it is necessary to combine work on Overseas Chinese affairs with economic work. He said: "In Fujian there are over 5 million relatives of Chinese nationals living abroad; abroad there are over 7 million Overseas Chinese whose native place in Fujian. They are particularly concerned about construction in their native place. The number of Overseas Chinese who visit the motherland has increased considerably. Some have returned for the first time in 3-4 decades and some have returned with their children who were born abroad. We are touched by this and they are also very pleased. Some of them are high-ranking officials in foreign countries. They have made special trips to China with the aim of seeing their birthplaces. Some have gone abroad since childhood and some were born abroad. They were quite unfamiliar with the outlook of their native place. After visiting the motherland, they were greatly touched and said that people in their native place were very cordial to them. This shows that since the implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world, the relationship between Fujian and Overseas Chinese has become closer. Similarly, we are warmly welcomed by many Overseas Chinese when we go abroad."

Hu Ping disclosed: In recent years, Overseas Chinese have invested over 200 million yuan in schools and hospitals so that Fujian has taken on an entirely new look. As a sign of encouragement, Fujian Province makes a point of presenting a gold medal to each Overseas Chinese who invests 500,000 yuan or more in schools in Fujian. They cherish the medals and are very pleased. Hu Ping said: "We still owe them a few gold medals!"

"We have contact with old, middle-aged, and young Overseas Chinese and we have discovered that they sincerely hope that the motherland will prosper and that they are quite willing to invest. The problem if whether or not we are good at using the investment. We should understand the situation and their desire and use the capital and strength of Overseas Chinese according to their desires. This involves both the economy and the concept of 'one country, two systems.'"

How To Use the Capital and Strength of Overseas Chinese

This writer asked Hu Ping the specific methods of using the capital and strength of Overseas Chinese. HU PING SAID: "FIRST, WE SHALL ADOPT PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT TOWARD OVERSEAS CHINESE CAPITAL BY COLLECTING FEWER CHARGES FOR THE USE OF LAND FROM OVERSEAS CHINESE THAN FROM FOREIGN BUSINESSMEN. SECOND, WE SHALL EXTEND THE TAX EXEMPTION PERIOD BY SEVERAL YEARS. THIRD, WE SHALL EXTENSIVELY MAKE FRIENDS WITH OVERSEAS CHINESE AND HELP THEM RUN THE EXISTING ENTERPRISES WELL USING OVERSEAS CHINESE CAPITAL. As a matter of fact, Overseas Chinese have played a great role in the development of Fujian. Of Fujian's foreign exchange revenue, amounting to more than $800 million, over 70 percent comes from Overseas Chinese capital. It comes from all corners of the world. Through Overseas Chinese, we have come in touch with many foreigners. Therefore, they have really played the pivotal role of a bridge."

LATER, THIS WRITER LEARNED THAT FUJIAN IS CONSIDERING OFFERING OVERSEAS CHINESE AND FOREIGN BUSINESSMEN SOME PROJECTS WITH THE BEST ECONOMIC RETURNS SO THAT THEY CAN MAKE PROFITS. IN THIS WAY, FUJIAN CAN ATTRACT MORE PEOPLE TO INVEST. THE PARTIES CONCERNED SAID THAT WORK ON OVERSEAS CHINESE AFFAIRS WILL BE EMPTY TALK IF IT IS NOT COORDINATED WITH ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES. WE SHOULD ENCOURAGE OVERSEAS CHINESE BY SAYING: "THE FACT THAT YOU CAN MAKE PROFITS IN THE NATIVE PLACE SHOWS THAT YOU HAVE MADE A GREAT CONTRIBUTION TO THE NATIVE PLACE!" DO NOT ENTERTAIN THE MISGIVINGS THAT "IT IS NOT RESPECTABLE TO MAKE PROFITS IN THE NATIVE PLACE." FUJIAN SHOULD ALSO CREATE A FAVORABLE CONDITION FOR OTHER PEOPLE TO MAKE PROFITS. A RELATED SOURCE SAID: OVERSEAS CHINESE INVEST IN FUJIAN WITH THE AIM OF DOING BUSINESS. IN THIS SENSE, WE CAN ADVOCATE "PROFIT-MAKING FIRST, LOVE FOR THE NATIVE PLACE SECOND." WE SHOULD ENCOURAGE OVERSEAS CHINESE TO LOVE THE COUNTRY, BUT WE SHOULD ALSO CREATE CONDITIONS FOR THEM TO LOVE THE COUNTRY. IN CAPITALIST COUNTRIES, A PERSON CANNOT SURVIVE IF HE CANNOT MAKE A PROFIT. FUJIAN HAS REPEATEDLY STRESSED THAT IT PLANS TO ATTRACT FOREIGN CAPITAL BY GIVING THEM THE MOST PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT AND TO OFFER FOREIGN BUSINESSMEN SOME PROJECTS FROM WHICH THEY CAN MAKE MAXIMUM PROFITS. WE SHALL LET THEM DRAW BENEFITS FROM IT.

AS THEY PUT IT: "THE EARLY BIRD CATCHES THE WORM." THIS IS A VERY FAVORABLE OPPORTUNITY TO INVEST IN FUJIAN!

Some 10,000 People Came From Taiwan to Fujian Last Year To See Relatives or Friends

Reportedly, 80 percent of the people in Taiwan come from Fujian. We can communicate with each other in the same language and have a close, blood relationship. Have there been any new trends on the part of China since the "China Airlines" incident? This reporter naturally will not let the good opportunity to gather news slip.

Hu Ping said: On the mainland, Fujian is closest to Taiwan. In the past, we shelled each other every other day. Since 1983 we have stopped shelling each other. Since 1985 we have not only stopped shelling but also stopped sending propaganda materials by air or by sea. It is relatively quiet in the Strait. The vessels of both sides follow their own normal routes. The fishermen go fishing together, offering each other cigarettes. Every year there are many Taiwan fishermen entering Fujian waters to take shelter or to see relatives or friends. Last year, some 10,000 people from Taiwan came to Fujian by various means to visit relatives or friends. Most family members on both sides have gotten in touch with one another. Some people from Taiwan have invested in enterprises in Fujian. (A high-ranking official told this writer, on the sly, that there is an enterprise using Taiwan capital near Xihu Guesthouse.)

There Are Also Changes in the U.S. Attitude

Hu Ping disclosed that "we have followed with interest" personnel changes in the Standing Committee of the KMT Central Committee, the dialogue between the KMT authorities and the non-party personages, and even Chiang Ching-kuo's latest speech. Hu Ping expressed his pleasure at the solution of the "China Airlines" incident, alleging that the event developed very rapidly. This shows that many problems among brothers can be settled entirely through consultation, provided there is sincerity. In the future, more problems will probably be solved through consultation between both parties.

Hu Ping also claims that there have in fact been some changes in the U.S. attitude, which can be noticed from their remarks. (This writer has noticed that CANKAO XIAOXI [REFERENCE NEWS] and other publications have carried extracts of relevant remarks from the U.S. side.) However, as a public official, he was not in a position to say more.

On another occasion, in a conversation with this writer on the talks between the Civil Aviation Administration of China and China Airlines, Mr Chen Guangyi, secretary of the Fujian Provincial CPC Committee, said: "This is a good thing." With regard to the establishment of transport, trade, and postal relations, he said: "I am sure there will be new developments in the future. When we talk about the establishment of transport, trade, and postal relations, we base ourselves on the compatriots on both sides of the Strait. We speak earnestly and sincerely and we mean what we say. I just cannot believe that Mr Chiang Ching-kuo does not want to go to his native place and have a look. It may be hard for him to say so, but he still entertains such an idea in his mind. This is normal and natural in human relationships."

Chen said: In the past we have not carried out our work toward Taiwan satisfactorily. In the future, we should do it better. In line with the concept of "one country, two systems," we can increase nongovernmental exchanges between us. Taiwan still sends us propaganda materials by balloons or seaborne containers. I think there is no need for this. There is nothing better than conducting exchanges and sending people here. Is there anything wrong in coming here to have a look?"

Fujian Has Begun Adopting a Set of Measures To Conduct Trade With Taiwan

On trade with Taiwan, Hu Ping said: In the beginning, the volume of sea trade was small. From 1981 to the first half of 1984, however, small trade went on uninterrupted via fishing boats. Movies and videotapes from the mainland were also taken to Taiwan. From the second half of 1984 to the first half of 1985, we lost control over trade with Taiwan. At that time, neither side had experience. Now we have adopted a set of management measures, including approved customers, designated ports, customs house supervision and management, and the collection of regulatory taxes, in order to develop trade in a planned way.

Hu Ping stressed: Good management is beneficial to both parties. What is significant is that both parties have taken some actions without prior consultation. For example, Taiwan stipulates the volume of small trade at 100,000 new Taiwan dollars and China stipulates it at 6,000 yuan, which are similar amounts.

Taiwan Tacitly Consents to the Establishment of Transport, Trade, and Postal Relations

"To all appearances, Taiwan says that it will not engage in the establishment of transport, trade, and postal relations, but actually it has tacitly consented," added Hu Ping. "It cannot possibly oppose what is economically beneficial."

When looking forward to the future, Hu Ping spoke in an assured tone. He said: "What lies in future developments? We are ready on our side but the key lies on the Taiwan side! In my view, if we truly are guided by the interests of the people on both sides of the Strait, we should support them, manage them well, and coordinate our activities satisfactorily."

Setting Up Nine Centers for Conducting Trade With Taiwan

On another occasion, Mr Lin Jiang, deputy director of the general office of the Fujian provincial government, said to me: The number of centers for receiving people from Taiwan and for conducting trade with Taiwan has been increased from four to nine.

We will build support facilities to provide these centers with better accomodations. The nine new centers for conducting trade with Taiwan are: Sansha in Xiapu County, Dongao in Pintgan County, Dongjia, Chongwu in Huian County, Tongling in Dongshan County, Mawei Port in Fuzhou City, Dongdu Port in Xiamen City, Linghai (Qianbu) in Quanzhou City, Xiuyu Port in Putian County, Xiazhai in Zhangpu County, and Xiaocheng in Lianjiang County.

In these place we have set up centers to conduct trade with the Taiwan ships docking there. In coastal cities, however, we have set up investment and trade companies, centers for receiving people from Taiwan, and commodity centers for conducting trade with Taiwan. We give preferential treatment to those people from Taiwan who conduct direct trade by exempting their goods from taxation. We shall only collect regulatory taxes (which are lower than the customs duty). However, these goods should be subjected to customs house inspection and should be inspected for their quality. We shall implement an all-round license system on them.

Lin Jiang disclosed to me that, of those people who have come to Fujian to visit relatives or friends or to do business in the past few years, no one has ever met with an accident on the mainland. We ensure their freedom to come and go and their safety. In order to avoid trouble, we neither carry the news in the newspapers nor take photographs. The Taiwan side has arrested Chen Kuo-hsun, Nien Chao-nan, Chen Chien-hsiung, and Lin Wen-chieh on the ground's of "conducting trade with bandits." Lin Jiang said that it should not have done so. He also disclosed that some of them have not necessarily been to Fujian!

The Trend of Fujian Issuing Bonds and Shares

Finally, this reporter asked Governor Hu Ping about the trend of Fujian issuing bonds.

Hu Ping said: Fujian has issued bonds abroad twice and it plans to continue issuing bonds in the future. There are two principal purposes in issuing bonds: First, the Fujian government borrows and repays the money in a unified way, and it will mainly be used in large projects such as wharves and telephone facilities. Second, the money will be invested in a certain enterprise for its development, principally in capital construction and expanded production. We plan to issue 50 million [currency not specified] a year, but this should be approved by the central government. Moreover, Fujian also wants to issue shares, principally for Overseas Chinese. Some intellectuals abroad neither know nor want to go into business but they are willing to invest in the motherland. They do not mind investing in a particular factory or trade, but we should ensure their interests. We will adopt the method of issuing shares to raise more funds.

The Holy Tomb of the Two Disciplines of Muhammad in Quanzhou Is Another Place for Pilgrimage Besides Mecca, But It Is a Pity That It Has Not Been Renovated

Hu Ping said to this writer: Fujian has a tradition of opening up to the outside world since ancient times. When Islam spread to China in ancient times, it first came to Quanzhou. According to Seypidin, it spread to Quanzhou 100 years earlier than Xinjiang. This can be proved through archaeological studies. Vice Governor Chen Binfan said to me: In the suburbs of Quanzhou there is a "tomb of two holy men." It is the tomb of Muhammad's two disciplines. They came to China to do missionary work and died in Quanzhou. They were buried there. The Arabs nowadays cannot read some of the Arab words inscribed in front of the tomb.

After visiting the tomb some time ago, some Arabs said that if the holy tomb should prove to be true through archeological studies, those who have been to Mecca will also make a pilgrimage to this place. On the right hand side in front of the holy tomb there is a "windblown stone" which, according to some superstitious people, has come into being according to the will of the founder of Islam....

I was so interested in their remarks that when I went south to Xiamen, I made a special trip to Lingshan in the suburbs of Quanzhou to pay a visit to the "Tomb of Two Holy Men." At a mosque in Quanzhou, I happened to meet the president of the Fujian Provincial Islamic Association (I have forgotten his name). According to this gentleman of Arab descent, when a certain UTG [not further identified] group from Jordan visited the Mosque at the end of last year, it offered to contribute $1.5 million to renovate the mosque and the Tomb of the Two Holy Men. It has now remitted $250,000 and deposited the rest in an Oman bank. When the renovation starts, it will send the rest of the money. Around the "holy tomb" I saw deserted tombs and broken tomb stones lying about and the setting sun shining on withered grass. Some village women were letting cattle graze there. With cow dung lying here and there, the place was quite desolate. The road signs leading to the "holy tomb" were not clear, so that when I went there by car, the driver lost his way. Obviously, it is time for the area around the holy tomb to be repaired.

LAW DRAFTING COMMITTEE DISCARDS SECRECY RULE

[From Stanley Leung in Shenzhen]

[Excerpt] All members of the political structure sub-group under the Basic Law Drafting Committee decided unanimously last night to lift the much-criticised rule of secrecy. The decision was announced by the co-convenors of the sub-group, Mr Louis Cha and Mr Xiao Weiyun, following an hour-long preparatory meeting attended by 16 members in Shenzhen.

According to the latest decision, both the time and venue of future meetings will no longer be secret. And after each session, the two co-convenors will brief reporters on progress of the discussions. Mr Cha however stressed that some discissions which it was felt could cause possible embarrassment to the British Government, such as criticisms of the existing political system, might still have to be kept secret pending the sub-group's decisions.

Despite relaxation of the rule, Mr Cha said members still had to observe the guideline of the drafting committee whiich states that no member may disclose others' suggestions made at meetings without their permission.

Almost all the seven local members spoke against the rule at the meeting and their objections were shared by the mainland members. Both Mr Martin Lee and Mr Szeto Wah said after the meeting that they were satisfied with the outcome.

The sub-group is due to begin its three-day meeting today.

ZHAO ZIYANG LEAVES ON EUROPE-AFRICA TOUR

OW010602 Beijing XINHUA in English 0554 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang left here by special plane this morning for an official goodwill visit to Romania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Spain, Turkey and Tunisia. Seeing him off at the airport were Vice-Premier Wan Li and State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian.

Qian Qichen, vice-foreign minister who accompanies the premier on the visit, said at the airport that starting from this visit, the Chinese Government has decided to cut short lines of officials seeing off a Chinese leader when he goes abroad.

Other members of the premier's official delegation are Minister in Charge of the State Economic Commission Lu Dong, Vice-Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Wang Pinqing and Vice-Minister of State Commission for Restructuring Economic System Bao Tong.

Diplomatic envoys of the six countries were also present at the airport to see Zhao Ziyang off.

Qian Qichen Comments on Tour

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang will meet with chairman of the executive committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization Yasir 'Arafat during his visit to Tunisia. Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Qian Qichen said this at the airport today before he left with the premier on a tour of Romania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Spain, Turkey and Tunisia.

When asked whether Chinese and Soviet foreign ministers will exchange visits in the latter part of this year, Qian said there was no agreement on the exchange of visits for the first half of this year. As to when it will take place, he added, it has not yet been decided. As the Chinese representative, he said, he expected to meet the Soviet delegation at the ninth round of consultations in October in Beijing. As the Chinese representative, he said, he expected to meet the Soviet delegaton at the ninth round of consultations in October in Beijing.

He said Premier Zhao's tour is a return visit to the visits by heads of governments of the above-mentioned six countries. The purpose of Zhao's visit is to deepen mutual understanding, enhance friendship, promote cooperation of mutual benefit and safeguard world peace. He said that the six countries are different in social systems and degree of economic development, and some are aligned while other are not. But they all maintain close, friendly relations with China and their economic relations and trade with China are growing smoothly.

USSR PROPOSES SPECIAL MEETING ON SALT II TREATY

[Text] Washington, June 30 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union has proposed a special session on the Standing Consultative Commission of Soviet and American Government experts in Geneva next month to discuss the U.S. decision to scrap the SALT II Treaty by the end of this year, THE NEW YORK TIMES reported today, citing government officials.

The commission was set up under the 1972 U.S.-Soviet Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty to consider disputes about adherence to strategic arms treaties and to deal with other technical arms control matters.

This was the first time the Soviet Union sought a special meeting of the commission, which normally meets twice a year and is not due to meet until late September.

President Reagan announced on May 27 that the United States would no longer abide by the SALT II Treaty because it was "fatally flawed" and has expired as a matter of fact. But he also made it clear that when he makes the final decision by the end of the year, he would take into account changes in Soviet arms control policy.

Recently President Reagan praised the new Soviet proposals in the Geneva arms control talks as the beginning of "serious effort" on the part of the Soviets in reducing nuclear weapons. But he did not make it known whether those proposals would influence future American decisions on exceeding nuclear weapons limits set by the SALT II Treaty.

According to today's issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES, the Reagan administration has not yet decided how to respond to the Soviet proposal for special talks on SALT II. The paper said some officials held a skeptical view that the Soviet move was primarily intended to draw more attention to the U.S. SALT II decision and to press President Reagan to reverse that decision.

ULANHU ADDRESSES MEETING ON RELIGION, PEACE

[Text] Beijing, June 28 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-President Ulanhu said here this evening that the Chinese people appreciate the unremitting efforts made by the World Conference on Religion and Peace (WCRP) to safeguard world peace. The Chinese leader made this remark at his meeting with the 100 religious believers attending the WCRP International Council meeting here.

Ulanhu said that over the past years, WCRP has made contributions to opposing arms expansion and war preparations, striving for nuclear arms reduction, opposing racial discrimination, and helping African victims of natural adversities. The current WCRP International Council meeting held in China is an important act of the religious body in striving for world peace and it will promote the friendly exchanges between the religious believers of China and other countries, Ulanhu added.

China has possessed a limited number of nuclear weapons for the sake of its own security, Ulanhu said. But, he pointed out, China has consistently stood for a complete prohibition and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons since it conducted its first nuclear test, and stated that China will never be the first to use nuclear weapons at any time or under any situation.

Ulanhu expressed the belief that a world war may be checked and world peace be safeguarded through the joint efforts of the world people.

He reiterated China's policy on the freedom of religious belief, saying that all the Chinese citizens, regardless of religious believers and non-believers, are politically equal and enjoy equal rights and duties.

Ulanhu supported Chinese religious organizations to strengthen friendly exchanges with foreign religious circles, saying this will promote the friendship between the Chinese people and the people of the rest of the world and promote the development of world peace movement.

Nikkyo Niwano, honorary president of the WCRP, said the meeting was held here in China because the country is a force that can not be neglected in any activity involved in world peace.

Also present on the occasion were Vice-Chairmen of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference National Committee Qian Changzhao, Zhou Peiyuan and Zhao Puchu.

After the meeting, the Religious Affairs Bureau of the State Council gave a banquet for the participants.

Banquet Marks Success

[Text] Beijing, June 29 (XINHUA) -- Nikkyo Niwano, honorary president of the World Conference on Religion and Peace (WCRP), gave a banquet here this evening to mark the success of its meeting in Beijing, attended by more than 120 representatives of 11 religions from 30 countries and regions. In a toast, he thanked the Chinese side for the support to the meeting. He said: "We pledge in China -- the great country with the Great Wall -- that we will also build a great wall leading to happiness and peace for all mankind."

Zhao Puchu, president of the Buddhist Association of China, said the successful meeting would surely produce an inestimable positive impact on the peace movement as a whole, and the Chinese believers were encouraged by this.

Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, honorary president of the Buddhist Association of China, and Vice-Chairman of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference National Committee Yang Jingren, Qian Changzhao and Zhou Peiyuan attended the banquet.

WU XUEQIAN MEETS UNITED NATIONS OFFICIALS

[Text] Beijing, June 28 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian today met a delegation from the ad hoc committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea led by Massamba Sarre, chairman of the ad hoc committee and permanent representative of Senegal to the United Nations. Vice-Foreign Minister Qian Qichen had talks with the guests yesterday morning and exchanged views with them on the Kampuchea issue.

The guests arrived here June 26th after attending the ASEAN (the Association of Southeast Asian National) ministerial conference in Manila. Members of the delegation include Miss Edmonde Dever, vice-chairman of the ad hoc committee and permanent representative of Belgium to the U.N., and Kadir Deen, rapporteur of the ad hoc committee and charge d'affaires of the permanent mission of Malaysia to the U.N.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS CPC INTERNATIONAL LIAISON WORK

[Text] Beijing, 29 Jun (XINHUA) -- Today's RENMIN RIBAO carries an article signed by Lian Yan, which states that the CPC's international liaison work has now entered a lively new period. The CPC has now established various forms of links with about 200 communist parties and other progressive and friendly parties.

The article, entitled "A Discussion on the Readjustment and Development of the CPC's International Liaison Work," says that from the day of its founding the CPC started to establish and develop ties and exchanges with foreign communist parties. After the birth of the new China, as the country's ruling party, the CPC further expanded and developed ties and friendship with various communist parties and peoples. By the end of the 1950's, the CPC had established or was maintaining friendly ties with the great majority of the world's communist parties. However, polemics broke out in the international communist movement in the early 1960's, and China then carried out the Great Cultural Revolution; the ties between the CPC and the majority of communist parties were broken.

After the end of the Cultural Revolution in 1976, the CPC changed this abnormal state of affairs and gradually readjusted its guidelines for international liaison work. At the same time, many communist parties expressed their wish to restore ties and contacts with the CPC.

Discussing the CPC's basic principles and policies on handling relations with other communist parties, the article says that the CPC perseveres in developing relations with communist parties and other working-class parties on the basis of Marxism and in accordance the principle of acting independently and retaining the initiative in its own hands, complete equality, mutual respect, and mutual non-interference in internal affairs.

The article stresses that going all out for socialist modernization is China's central task in the new historical period. All the CPC's work, including its international liaison work, must be subordinate to and serve this general goal and task. This represents the Chinese people's fundamental interests and demand, and is also the primary and most important aspect in demand, and is also the primary and most important aspect in undertaking our international obligations. The article goes on to say that preserving world peace and promoting economic cooperation are also important tasks and goals of the CPC's international liaison work.

STATE OF U.S.-SOVIET ARMS TALKS ANALYZED

["News Analysis: U.S.-U.S.S.R. Arms Talks FAce Test (by Ren Zhengde)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Geneva, June 27 (XINHUA) -- The fifth round of U.S.-U.S.S.R. arms negotiations, which ended here Thursday, has shown some signs of a change in the attitudes of the two sides, but remains as to whether the prolonged arms negotiations will achieve any substantial progress. In the current round of talks, which started on May 8, Moscow put forward several proposals on strategic, intermediate and space weapons control. All these Soviet suggestions except one have been dismissed by Washington as "means of propaganda" and "old offers in new wraps."

However, commenting on the Soviet June 11 proposal, U.S. President Ronald Reagan said for the first time that the Soviet side has begun to make "serious efforts" in arms talks and that it could be a "turning point" in the U.S.-U.S.S.R. relations. The Soviet arms control proposal is a broad-ranged package which, among other things, calls for a 30 percent reduction of strategic weapons by both sides, continuation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty for at least 15 years and the limiting of space weapons development to laboratory testing.

What attracts President Reagan to the package is, first of all, that the Soviet Union has re-defined the concept of the strategic nuclear weapons that should be reduced. Previous Soviet proposals defined strategic weapons as those which "can reach the territory of the other side," thus including all U.S. intermediate nuclear weapons deployed in Europe but excluding the Soviet intermediate launchers. In the latest proposal, however, the U.S. intermediate missiles are not included.

Secondly, the Soviet side no longer insists that the United States stop doing research in and testing its Strategic Defense Initiative, nicknamed "star wars" program, but allows the weapons to be developed within laboratories. A Soviet deputy foreign minister said on Tuesday that the U.S. space weapons testing so far has just "reached the threshold," a remark widely interpreted as Soviet acknowledgement that such testing has not gone beyond "laboratory testing."

Thirdly, in previous proposals, the Soviet Union called for a cut of strategic missiles of all types, either ground, submarine or air-based, by at least 40 percent, which would apparently diminish the superiority of U.S. submarine-based missiles. But the 30 percent cut in the new proposal will permit both sides to keep the cream of their nuclear arsenals.

Besides, Moscow now shows more flexilibity on the verification of nuclear development, on which the American side has kept pressing it. It now agrees to "on-the-spot" verification and even permits international verification or U.S. surveillance over the Soviet strategic weapons assembly lines.

However, the flexibility showed by Moscow is still far from what the Americans hope for. Therefore, while praising the Soviet proposal, Reagan maintained that Washington cannot accept the proposal "without making any changes." Max Kampelman, U.S. chief delegate to the Geneva arms talks, also said that both sides still have "great and substantial difference."

Observers believed that the endless row between the two superpowers on arms control has focused on the U.S. star wars program. The Soviet proposals, flexible as they are, have been designed to stop or delay the U.S. space weapon development. This purpose is also revealed in the Soviet June 11 proposal calling on both sides to abide by the 1972 ABM treaty which prohibits the deployment of outer space-based weapons.

The United States has, for its part, not given any concession over the star wars issue. Reagan claimed on May 27 that the United States will no longer abide by the U.S.-Soviet second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT-II). He was aiming both to clear the way for developing space weapons and to abolish the ABM Treaty in the future.

History has proved that the two superpowers, for their own interests, would make overtures to each other but no concession on vital issues. Therefore, the U.S.-Soviet arms talks have repeatedly got bogged down and yielded no result. This time, observers cautioned, whether the two sides will avoid the old path and turn vocal disarmament into action remains in question.

U.S. 'ANXIETY' OVER CENTRAL AMERICA VIEWED

["Newlettter From America" by Zhang Yunwen: "Central America Peace Talks and U.S. Anxiety"]

[Text] Washington, 18 Jun -- Since the beginning of June, Reagan and White House officials have launched an intensive propaganda offensive on support for the Nicaraguan contras.

President Reagan has demanded on many occasions that the Democrat-controlled House of Representatives speedily pass a bill providing $100 million in aid for the contras, and has warned that if the passage of this bill is blocked, the House will have to take the responsibility for the ensuing "national security disaster."

The U.S. Administration's bill on providing the Nicaraguan contras with $100 million was voted down by the House of Representatives on 20 March, but the House will take a second vote on the bill a little later this month. According to the media, the administration's recent words and deeds have been aimed at gaining the support of public opinion to force Congress to pass the bill. However, diplomatic analysts say that this propaganda offensive is obviously closely linked to the administration's "anxiety" over the present situation in Central America.

In the past 2 months, under vigorous stimulation by the Contadora Group, some new progress has been made in the peace process in Central America. The leaders of five Central America countries achieved a smooth meeting and expressed their intention to sign a Central American peace treaty. The foreign ministers of 13 Latin American countries met on 6 June. In order to coordinate the stand of various parties, the Contadora Group put forward new amendment proposals for the peace treaty at this meeting. The Nicaraguan Government expressed satisfaction with the results of the meeting.

This trend has aroused the attention of the United States. In Central America, the United States has consistently tried to use the Nicaraguan contras to keep up the military pressure on that country and force its government to submit. Hence, although the United States has expressed verbal support for the Contadora Group, it has in fact repeatedly blocked the group's goal of signing a Central American peace treaty. While releasing a report on 20 May entitled "Prospects for Containing the Communist Government in Nicaragua," the Pentagon announced that if the United States supported this treaty, that would be equivalent to giving Nicaragua "a license to cheat." The situation would become irreversible in less than 3 years, and the United States would therefore have no choice but to spend $9 billion a year in beefing up the military strength of its Central American allies, and so on. The U.S. Administration originally estimated that prospects for signing a Central American peace treaty were dim and that the Nicaraguan government would not agree to sign it. However, the signs now are that things may have changed; in these circumstances, congressional resistance to approving the aid bill may be still greater. The moment the five countries sign a peace treaty, the United States will be forced to cut off its aid to the contras and withdraw its military advisers from Central America, thus losing its military influence in the region. This is precisely the reason why certain people in the U.S. Administration are full of anxiety and have stepped up their efforts to drum up support.

Diplomatic observers hold that the United States is facing three possibilities in Central America: 1) Supporting the contras in fighting a protracted and inconclusive war; 2) Directly sending in its troops, thus becoming embroiled in a "Vietnam-style war"; 3) Accepting the Contadora Group scheme and engaging in peace talks. Public opinion says that the third would be "the wisest choice."

However, judging by the Reagan administration's recent words and deeds, U.S. policy on Central America still shows no sign of changing.

COMMENTARY ON U.S. CONGRESSIONAL AID DECISION

[Commentary: Central American Peace Process Suffers From U.S. Congressional Decision (by Tang Tianri) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, June 28 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. House's approval of the Reagan administration's 100 million U.S. dollar aid to Nicaraguan rebels has dealt a hard blow at the Contadora Group which is striving to bring peace to Central America.

For the past two years, the Contadora Group, consisting of Mexico, Panama, Colombia and Venezuela, has made some progress in its peace efforts, but the results are far from what is expected and a peace treaty sponsored by the group still cannot be signed.

There are many reasons. But the main one is that the U.S. Government has insisted on a hostile policy against the Nicaraguan Government and given a large amount of military aid to Nicaraguan anti-government forces.

President Ronald Reagan wrote to the Congress in February, seeking approval of an extra 100 million dollars of aid to Nicaraguan rebels, of which 70 million would be spent on military equipment and the rest on logistic support. Secretary of State George Shultz warned that unless the bill was approved, the possibility of sending U.S. troops into Nicaragua could not be ruled out.

However, the U.S. Government's undisguised interference in Nicaragua's internal affairs met strong opposition from both home and abroad. As a result, the bill was passed in the Senate by a slim majority of six votes but rejected in the House by 222 to 210 in March. The approval by 221 to 209 Wednesday, following three-month hard lobbying, has reversed the initial defeat of the U.S. Government over the aid bill.

Reagan's new aid has worsened the already strained relations between the United States and Nicaragua, which launched a strong protest against Washington immediately after the approval of the aid bill.

Complaints by some Latin American countries show that the approval of the bill has discouraged the Contadora Group which has worked on the peace treaty for three years with some progress being made towards its goal.

In aiding the Nicaraguan rebels, Washington has placed itself on the opposite side of peace and therefore is responsible for the deterioration of the situation in Central America.

LIAOWANG ON PROTECTIONISM, WORLD ECONOMY

HK270739 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 25, 23 Jun 86 p 6

[Article by Wei Yanshen: "Oppose Protectionism, Invigorate the World Economy"]

[Text] The current protectionist measures adopted by industrialized countries in the West have seriously undermined the development of the world economy. This has attracted close attention from the people of the world of various circles. Since the seventies, the capitalist world's protectionism has become more and more serious. Trade wars have broken out one after another among the developed countries. Also, the developing countries' exports goods to the developed countries have been restricted and discriminated against.

The capitalist world's trade protectionism has a long history. As early as the 18th and 19th centuries, the United States, France, and Germany adopted measures to protect their national industries. But what they protected then were the rising national industries, and they had grounds for adopting such traditional protectionsim. By the twenties and thirties, all powers in the West, including the United States, had adopted the super-protectionism through which they vied with each other for overseas markets while monopolizing their domestic ones. This seriously affected the expansion of international markets and the development of international trade.

In 1947, 23 major capitalist countries signed in Geneva the multilateral trade agreement -- the GATT. In a certain sense, the agreement was reached for the sake of resisting protectionism. Since it was put into effect in 1948, the members have held talks on seven occasions on cutting tariffs. It has therefore made some contribution to promoting the development of world trade. From the late seventies, the capitalist world's economy entered the stage of stagnation. In particular, by the end of the seventies and in the early eighties, the capitalist world once again faced a serious crisis. The world market was shrinking and demand fell. Protectionism thus became more rampant and was obviously marked by conservativeness and stubborness. People generally call it the new protectionism. Its characteristics are:

-- What are being protected by the new protectionism are the declining industries rather than the budding ones.

-- The new protectionism not only builds high trade barriers and puts restrictions on imports, but also sets strict limitations on the export of advanced technological commodities.

-- The major targets of the new protectionism are the newly industrialized countries and all developing countries.

-- The main form taken by the new protectionism is trade barriers rather than tariffs.

Materials provided by the GATT show that countries in the West currently adopt over 900 kinds of measures other than tariff barriers. The proportion of nontariff barriers in the world's trade in manufactured goods increased from 13 percent in 1974 to 40 percent in 1984. This has therefore brought serious consequences to world trade, as well as to the world economy. Outstanding among these are: On the one hand, through bilateral or trade agreements, these countries assign import quotas to sensitive commodities, or share the market by adopting the so-called "conscious export restriction" method; and on the other, through the provision of export subsidies, export credits, as well as rental and tax exemption or reduction, these countries strengthen the competitiveness of their export commodities and, at the same time, adopt such methods as imposing anti-goods-dumping taxes on import commodities so as to prevent others from entering their domestic markets. Furthermore, the nontariff barriers also include setting harsh technological and public health standards for import commodities, formulating complicated examination procedures, controlling the market through compensation trade, and so on.

The protectionism that has recently prevailed among countries in the West and the previously adopted free trade policy share the same and profound political, economic, and social causes. They are the foreign trade policies alternately adopted by capitalist countries in connection with their internal and external political and economic situations at different times. At the beginning of this century, the economic status of Britain in the capitalist world began to decline. Facing an enormous and increasing trade deficit, it could not but gradually lower its banner of "free trade," which had been held high for a century, and then switched to the practice of overall tariff protection. Today's United States is following in the footsteps of the then British Empire.

After World War II, the United States was the nation with the greatest economic strength. The adoption of "free trade" helped it break through other countries' tariff barriers and helped it continue to carry out a policy of expansion. On the other hand, its strength was sharply weakened in many areas, and it encountered competition and challenge from other developed countries and some new developing countries. It therefore depended on protectionist policies to protect its vested interests. In 1971 the United States faced its first trade deficit in 80-odd years. In the eighties, its foreign trade deficit snowballed and reached a record level. Between 1980 and 1985, the foreign trade deficit increased by about four times, from $36 billion to $150 billion. People generally held that this was an important sign representing a reduction in U.S. economic strength, as well as the significant background for causing protectionism to prevail.

At present, the protectionism adopted by the developed countries against the developing countries is most obvious in the area of textile trade. In 1973, the developed countries signed the multifiber agreement with over 40 developing countries (regions). Under certain circumstances, the developed countries are allowed to impose temporary quotas on textile imports. Later, the United States acted in accordance with the multifiber agreement and signed over 30 bilateral textile agreements with the developing countries. Most textiles and garments exported by the developing countries to the United States were under strict restrictions. But this did not satisfy the United States. Beginning from December 1983, it further announced the "new provisions for regulations on the place of origin" and levied the so-called "antisubsidies tax" on the developing countries' textile exports to the United States.

The United States announced at the beginning of this year that beginning from 9 March, all imported textiles and garments must have a "formal import" document. It also nullified the small-quantity textile import tariff exemption status of Hong Kong and 24 other countries and regions.

This year, the United States has worked out new protectionist measures and plans one after another, including:

Since the beginning of this year, the United States has informed Hong Kong, Taiwan, and South Korea about revising the bilateral agreements on exporting textiles to the United States. It froze the textile export quotas of these areas for future years at last year's levels. In addition, it included in the bilateral agreements silk fabrics and linen fabrics which were originally not within the framework of the multifiber agreement.

In early April, the United States announced that any country whose export goods accounted for more than half the U.S. import volume would no longer enjoy the generalized system of preferences.

In late May, the U.S. House of Representatives adopted a new bill on trade protectionism. It urged the U.S. Government to hold talks with its major trading partners who enjoy a favorable balance of trade with the United States. It also urged the U.S. Government to take retaliatory measures against countries and regions which do not observe U.S. trade regulations. The United States asked Japan, the FRG, and Taiwan to cut their favorable balance of trade by 10 percent per year. Otherwise, the United States would impose import quotas and set up tariff barriers against their products.

Over the years, the adoption of trade protectionism by the West has seriously affected the development of the world economy and trade. With the impact of protectionism, as well as slow and sluggish economic growth, the annual growth rate of the world export volume of manufactured goods dropped from 11 percent in 1960-73 to 4.5 percent in 1976-83. At present, trade in manufactured goods accounts for more than 50 percent of the world's trade volume and over 70 percent of it involves trade with the developed countries. This therefore causes world trade to remain sluggish, though the economy of the West is recovering.

In the current whirlpool of protectionism, the exports of developing countries, particularly the manufactured goods-exporting countries, have suffered most. During the period of economic crisis between 1973 and 1975, the economies of these countries declined. But it was a mild crisis and they soon recovered. This was because protectionism at that time was not very serious. In the early eighties, there occurred the worst economic crisis since World War II. Trade protectionism became rampant. Hit repeatedly by export problems and high interest rates, the economies of many developing countries as a whole faced negative economic growth in the export of manufactured goods, which had not been seen for years. They experienced zero economic growth in 1982 and 1983. Though the economy of the West began recovering in 1983, trade protectionism became more rampant. The developed countries have imposed stricter import restrictions on textiles, shoes, and steel.

At the same time, many developing countries (regions) in Asia began relying more in recent years on the U.S. economy. In some areas, over 50 percent of their exports are shipped to the United States. At present, two-thirds of the United States' textile imports come from Asia's new developing countries. Therefore, Asia's developing countries and regions are most affected. It is estimated that the "new provisions on the place of origin of textile imports," which were promulgated in September 1984, have reduced Hong Kong's textile exports to the United States by one-seventh. The annual loss totaled HKD 2.2 billion. This may also deprive over 60,000 textile workers of their jobs.

In 1985, the economy of the West was in the process of recovering. But since the U.S. economic growth rate was small and it reduced its import volume and actively engaged in protectionism, the exports of some Asian developing countries and regions were reduced, and their economies experienced sluggish or retrogressive development.

Since World War II the developed countries have relied more on the developing countries in economic terms. Being the developed countries' sources of raw materials, commodity sales markets and places of investment, the developing countries have strengthened their roles rather than weakening them. But now the developed countries are trying to shift their crisis on to the developing countries by adopting trade protectionism and so on, and to improve their economic situation at the expense of the Third World's interests.

This can only be an act of killing the goose that lays the golden eggs, and the developed countries will eventually stew in their own juice.

U.S. CLAIMS SANCTIONS RESTRAINING LIBYA

[Text] Washington, June 30 (XINHUA) -- The United States claimed today it has completed implementing economic sanctions against Libya that have put "great restraint" on Libyan leader Mu'Ammar al-Qadhdhafi. An executive order issued January 7 banned all trade by U.S. citizens with Libya because the government accused Libya of sponsoring terrorism. After its April 14 bombing raid on Libya, the United States again demanded all American companies should pull out from Libya by June 30.

U.S. Undersecretary of State Michael Armacost told reporters today: "The stated and clear objective was to prevent any -- even inadvertent -- American material support" to Libya.

Armacost said the United States "is determined to sustain maximum pressure on the Libyan Government" and will "continue to press others (U.S. allies) to take actions in a similar vein." The primary objective, he said, "will be to reduce as much as possible Libyan oil revenues." Armacost said with American companies terminating Libyan operations today, "We've made major strides toward achieving that objective." Henceforth, "There will be no participation in our contribution by such companies to the Libyan economy."

The undersecretary said the European community and the seven industrialized countries that met in May for the Tokyo summit have indicated a willingness to join the United States in taking measures against Libya. According to Armacost, U.S. allies are cutting back commercial and trade ties with Libya, and European nationals have been leaving Libya in large numbers. He said it is premature to claim that Al-Qadhdhafi has been dissuaded from pursuing his hard-line stance, but Armacost said the United States believes "the measures that we have taken have been felt."

One senior State Department official confirmed that all American companies have ceased operations in Libya as of June 30. He acknowledged there may be individual Americans still in Libya, "but they're there in violation of our law at this point." The official claimed that terrorist actions in the Middle East and the Mediterranean area have decreased, attributing it in part to the U.S. attack against Libya and in part to the impact of expulsions of Libyan people's bureau personnel from Europe.

Asked whether the United States is considering a naval blockade against Libya, the senior official said, "That isn't right on the top of our agenda at this point. But we keep our options open with respect to Mr. Al-Qadhdhafi."

ZHAO ZIYANG HOSTS DINNER FOR U.S. PROFESSORS

[Text] Beijing, June 30 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang hosted a dinner here this evening for four professors from the United States and their wives. The four professors are Gregory Chow of Princeton University, Anthony Koo of the University of Michigan, John Fei of Yale University, and Lawrence Lau of Stanford University.

PRC, PORTUGAL TALKS ON MACAO TURNOVER CONTINUE

Portugal Seeks Delay

HK300821 Hong Kong AFP in English 0712 GMT 30 Jun 86

[By Lawrence MacDonald]

[Excerpt] Beijing, June 30 (AFP) -- Portugal will seek to delay Macao's transition to Chinese administration as long as possible, an informed Portuguese source said here Monday as the two sides began talks on future of the 430-year-old enclave.

Portugal's emissaries hoped to persuade China it would be in the best interests of both sides if Lisbon continued to administer Macao for several years after 1977, the year neighbouring Hong Kong is set to revert to China, the source said. Lisbon would like to prolong its administration of Macao in a belated bid to use the territory as a base for expanding Portugal's investment, trade and cultural presence in east Asia, a Portuguese source said.

Chinese Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang told Portuguese President Ramalho Eanes during a May 1985 visit here that China sought to resume administration of the former trading outpost at the same time as Hong Kong. China considers rapid conclusion of the Macao talks a stepping stone on the road to national reunification, with Taiwan the largest and most difficult prize to obtain, analystse said.

A source close to the Portuguese negotiating team said it would adopt delaying tactics in an effort to prolong the talks up to one year, while China was expected to push for a smooth, quick conclusion.

Usually well-informed Chinese sources said the two sides were likely to meet once a month, finishing the talks in half a year.

China's top negotiator on the issue, Deputy Foreign Minister Zhou Nan, declined in a recent interview with a Portuguese journalist to comment on China's prefered date for resumption of administration, saying that such details would be discussed in the talks. The two-day round which began Monday morning was to include an evening followed by a second meeting Tuesday, Chinese officials said.

Lisbon's push for a late transition reflected Macao businessmen's hopes that a few years of Portuguese administration beyond 1997 would help them temporarily attract capital from Hong Kong investors anxious over the transition to Chinese rule, Portuguese sources said.

Despite being the first Western nation to send traders to Asia more than 400 years ago, Portugal lags far behind its European neighbours in trade and cultural links with China and other parts of Asia.

China has said that the "one country, two systems" formula which would allow Hong Kong to retain its capitalist way of life would be applied in Macao.

Portugal was also expected to request that talks be held alternately in Beijing and Lisbon as a reflection of the good relations between the two countries and the special nature of the Portuguese presence in Macao, a Portuguese source said.

Ji Pengfei Meets Portuguese

[Text] Beijing, June 30 (XINHUA) -- Ji Pengfei, state councillor and director of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office under the State Council, today told the Portuguese Government delegation that the Macao issue was left over from history, and the two sides should adopt a forward-looking approach to it.

During a 30-minute meeting at the Diaoyutai State Guesthouse late this afternoon, Ji welcomed the Portuguese Government delegation led by Rui Medina with Portuguese Ambassador to China Octavio N. Valerio as adviser, which arrived June 27 for the first round of Sino-Portuguese talks on the issue of Macao. Ji said it was of vital importance for China and Portugal to settle the Macao issue, adding that Medina was carrying out an important mission.

When Ji and Medina walked out of the room at the end of the meeting, a Hong Kong reporter asked Ke Zaishuo, a member of the Chinese Government delegation, how the talks fared. Ke replied: "the atmosphere was friendly and harmonious." Later, Ji gave a banquet for the Portuguese delegation. The Chinese Government delegation headed by Vice-Foreign Minister Zhou Nan was present.

Joint Communique Issued

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- China and Portugal will hold the second round of talks in September 1986 in Beijing and the two sides were satisfied with the results of the first round of talks which ended here today. This was disclosed in a press communique issued here this afternoon.

The full text of the communique reads as follows:

The government delegation of the People's Republic of China and the government delegation of the Republic of Portugal held the first round of talks on the settlement of the Macao question on 30 June and 1 July 1986. The talks proceeded in a friendly and cordial atmosphere. In addition to reaching agreement on the general agenda of the talks, the two sides had an exchange of views on some matters of substance. The two sides expressed satisfaction on the results of the first round of talks and decided to hold the second round of talks in September 1986 in Beijing.

EC COMMISSION PRESIDENT ARRIVES IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Jacques Delors, president of the Commission of the European Communities, flew into Beijing at noon time today for a five-day official visit at the invitation of the Chinese Government. This is his first visit to China since he became the commission president in January 1985.

Accompanying him are Mme. Delors and Emile Noel, secretary-general of the commission. Among those who welcomed them at the airport was Wu Xueqian, state councillor and foreign minister, who is expected to hold talks with Delors this afternoon. Acting Premier Wan Li will give a banquet in his honor in the evening.

GORBACHEV ADDRESSES POLISH PARTY CONGRESS

[Text] Warsaw, June 30 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev today accused the United States of obstructing repeated Soviet disarmament proposals and showered praises on Polish leader Wojciech Jaruzelski for defending the cause of socialism in Poland during the Solidarity turmoil.

Gorbachev, who was addressing the 10th Congress of Poland's ruling United Workers' Party, said that despite recent Soviet and Warsaw Pact calls for East-West troop cuts in Europe and for conventional and nuclear arms limitation, "The cause of disarmament did not budge by even a single millimeter because of the American Administration's open obstruction." He added that worse still, U.S. President Ronald Reagan's recent threat to go beyond the limits of the SALT-2 strategic arms accord has "removed the final brakes" upon the arms race.

Gorbachev warned, "We shall mostly resolutely repulse the adventuristic, destructive actions of the United States. American imperialism must not be permitted to shape the destiny of the world as it sees fit."

He also said that other NATO countries, which claimed to have distanced themselves from the dangerous extremes of the U.S. policy, have ultimately bowed to the pressure from across the Atlantic and therefore share the responsibility for the intensification of the arms race.

Gorbachev declared that he stands for dialogue, "but this should be a dialogue in which both sides wish to achieve real results." "One should not allow the talks to be turned into a smokescreen covering up the arms race," he added.

The Soviet leader used the Polish party forum to urge the West to give serious consideration to the Soviet proposals on liquidating medium-range nuclear missiles and reducing conventional armaments. Only then will the possibility of substantially easing the tension on the continent arise, he noted.

In his 40-minute speech, Gorbachev gave a strong endorsement of the policies of the Polish leadership during the turbulent Solidarity period in the early 1980s. He said that Poland owes a lot to its outstanding leader Wojciech Jaruzelski for his energy, political insight and ability to find solutions to very complex problems and uphold firmly the cause of socialism.

Gorbachev said close cooperation and alliance between Poland and the Soviet Union are indispensable for the successful development of the two countries and for peace and stability in Europe.

GDR EDUCATION MINISTER HONECKER MEETS PRC LEADERS

Zhao Ziyang

[Text] Beijing, June 2 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today that China and the Democratic Republic of Germany should and could develop their friendship and co-operation.

In a meeting with Mrs. Margot Honecker, minister of national education of the German Democratic Republic, Zhao said both countries are making efforts to safeguard world peace, conduct socialist construction and improve living standards. "These common points can bring us together," Zhao said. "The strengthening of friendly co-operation between the two countries is in the interest of our two peoples, and is conducive to world peace."

He said China attaches great importance to its relations with Democratic Germany, and is pleased with the development of these relations in recent years. "We have studied and agreed with the recent assessment of bilateral relations made by Erich Honecker, general secretary of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany," Zhao said. The two countries could make use of much of each other's experiences in socialist construction. Both sides could develop co-operation not only in education but also in politics, economic matters, culture, science and technology. Democratic German comrades are welcome to visit China.

Zhao spoke highly of the achievements of Democratic Germany's education system from which China could learn a lot. He said China had made deviations in education, and now the whole nation has realized that education is a fundamental part of the modernization program.

Lessons drawn from the past would ensure that educational reform and development proceeded smoothly.

Mrs. Honecker said China and Democratic Germany have many things in common in socialist construction, and need a peaceful international environment in which to build. She said she hoped to see an all-round strengthening of co-operation between the two countries, and that China would find benefits in educational reform.

Zhao asked her to convey his best regards as well as those of other Chinese leaders to Erich Honecker, and Mrs. Honecker also conveyed General Secretary Honecker's regards to Chinese leaders. Present at the meeting was Vice-Minister of the State Education Commission He Dongchang.

Hu Yaobang, Hu Qili

[Text] Beijing, June 30 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met here today Margot Honecker, minister of national education of the German Democratic Republic. Hu exchanged views with Honecker on relations between the two countries and the two parties, and on some international issues. He said that China attaches great importance to developing relations with all countries in Europe. Hu expressed satisfaction with the development of relations between China and the German Democratic Republic in recent years, adding that he wished to further the bilateral relations of cooperation in various fields. Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, was present at the meeting.

RENMIN RIBAO PUBLISHES HU YAOBANG SPEECH

["On The Question of Correctly Handling Two Different Types of Contradictions Within the Communist Party" -- speech by Hu Yaobang, 9 April 1986; capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] A correct handling of the two different types of contradictions within the party is, in my view, a vital subject in party building.

We must not forget that at the peak of his theoretical work to develop Marxism, Comrade Mao Zedong wrote a brilliant theoretical essay -- "On Contradiction" -- which expounded on the fundamental method for understanding the world. He said that contradictions characterize the process of the development of all things, which develop by the movement of their internal contradictions. Nothing exists without contradictions. Our party has developed and advanced by resolving contradictions. If there were no contradictions in the party and no ideological struggles to resolve them, party life would come to an end.

Some of our comrades, especially some young comrades, are not always able to apply in practice this basic theory for understanding and transforming the world. They often fear contradictions consciously or unconsciously and try to avoid them or cover them up. Therefore, they often put themselves in a passive position and are at a loss what to do.

Comrade Mao Zedong in another theoretical essay in the 1950s put contradictions in socialist society into two categories. This was also a brilliant concept. But, first, although he dealt with the successful historical experience in resolving contradictions within the party by using correct methods, he failed to expound further on the contradictions within the party in new historical conditions; secondly, although he pointed out in his essay "On Contradiction", that a contradictions within the party were either antagonistic or non-antagonistic and stressed this repeatedly from that time on, in his later years he himself badly confused the two types of contradications, especially those differing in nature within the party, and put many things upside down; this led to his launching of "Cultural Revolution" that brought catastrophe to the party and the state and which could otherwise have been avoided.

Contradictions in the party in general must be treated carefully. They deserve especially careful treatment now when we are carrying out a series of reforms.

In line with Comrade Mao Zedong's lines of thinking and current practice, I think we can classify the many contradictions common within the party into two categories according to their content and manifestations: contradictions among different opinions regarding understanding and work, and contradictions between individual interests and those of the party and the people.

NOW FOR THE FIRST TYPE -- DIFFERENCES RELATED TO UNDERSTANDING AND WORK.

Revolutionary work is extremely arduous. By and large, contradications among different ideas and opinions are common and errors in work can hardly be avoided during the long process of struggle.

Building socialism is even more arduous because there is no successful experience for reference. Therefore our party must adopt correct principles and policies by pooling the wisdom of the whole party while responding to the contradictions arising from differences in understanding and work.

Unfortunately, Comrade Mao Zedong was not good at dealing with such contradictions within the party in his later years. As a result, an atmosphere was created of rejecting different views, and correct opinions that differed somewhat with his or on the contrary were even regarded as "right deviation", "following the capitalist road" or "anti-party".

After drawing serious lessons from this mistake, our party adopted an entirely different approach toward the treatment of different views that inevitably often appear in understanding and work. One, every major policy decision is made after a repeated exchange of views. Two, party members are allowed to air their opinions freely and criticize anyone at party meetings and this right is protected even if the opinions and criticism are wrong. Three, those who make this or that mistake in work provided they have done their best, are allowed to correct. And four, those who do not favor the principles and policies adopted by the CPC Central Committee but strive to carry them out in their work instead of violating them are allowed to keep their reservations.

Differing views about work and understanding within the party, generally speaking, are not antagonistic contradictions. Is it possible for these to become antagonistic contradictions? Of course, the possibility exists. This is possible when one not only has ideological reservations but in work also resists the principles and policies adopted by the party Central Committee, or when one spreads outside party organizations ideas and policies antagonistic to those of the party Central Committee. In so doing a person is violating organizational principles and the party discipline. Only under such circumstances should the contradiction be described as of an antagonistic nature and should the person face disciplinary actions or even be expelled from the party.

WHAT ABOUT THE OTHER TYPE OF CONTRADICTIONS WITHIN THE PARTY -- THOSE BETWEEN INDIVIDUAL INTERESTS AND THOSE OF THE PARTY AND THE PEOPLE?

We require that every party member unconditionally subordinate his or her personal interests to those of the party and the people. This is the fundamental line of demarcation between party members and non-party persons. When we say Communist Party members are the vanguard of the proletariat we mean that they always put the interests of the party and the people above their own at all times in all circumstances and also that they conscientiously and willingly sacrifice their personal interests to protect and bring about the interests of the party and the people if necessary.

This does not mean that party organizations should not be concerned with the individual interests of party members.

Whenever it is possible, the party organizations should look after the individual interests of party members and properly combine their personal interests of party members and properly combine their personal interests with those of the party and the people.

However, it is common to see more than a few party members, especially some party members who are cadres, unable to stand up to the tests.

Some party members pay no attention to the interests of the party and the people and some are apathetic toward the interests of the party and the people and preoccupied with their own interests.

There are even a number of party members who are extremely individualistic and place their personal interests above those of the party and the people. They even go so far as to violate the law and party discipline and abuse their authority to seek personal gain. This manifests a vile behavior at complete variance with the basic stand of a party member.

This type of contradiction, of course, also needs concrete analysis. Numerous ordinary contradictions are not antagonistic in nature and we must not mistake minor errors for major ones and occasional mistakes as incurable. But it must be clear that contradictions are antagonistic in nature between the party and those party members who seriously violate the law and party discipline, abuse their authority to seek selfish gain or advance the small-group interests of their own units or departments at the expense of the interests of the party and the people. This is the line of demarcation. Bearing this in mind, we can distinguish antagonistic contradictions from those arising from different views and mistakes in understanding and work.

In my opinion, the main problem in our party toward the second type of contradictions is that we do not understand it well and lack a clear-cut stand and resolute solution to contradictions of an antagonistic nature, even those that are acute, rather than overdoing things. This is a problem of softness, as Comrade Deng Xiaoping has pointed out. We must strive to overcome this weakness.

Departments under the party Central Committee should take the lead in solving this problem by seriously improving the political life of party organizations at all levels, putting democratic centralism on a sound basis, and strictly enforcing party discipline. To put it bluntly, there is not a healthy political life in some of our party organizations, including a number of party committees at high levels. Personal connections are rampant and the political atmosphere is poor. In other words, vulgarity more than political principle reigns.

Such antagonistic contradictions within the party are radically incompatible with the party's aim, organisational principles and discipline. Such people cannot remain in the party without correction. Those who break the laws of the land must be punished according to law. But while these contradictions are antagonistic they are not necessarily equal to the contradictions between ourselves and the enemy, nor need these people be our enemies on that score. This should be made clear.

Comrade Mao Zedong once called for our state to have "a political situation in which we have both centralism and democracy, both discipline and freedom, both unity of will and personal ease of mind and liveliness." However, such a situation had not been achieved for a long period because of errors in the past.

The situation has been basically changed since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th Party Central Committee. But it is not easy to carry out fully, consolidate or develop. Overcoming the difficulties in the road ahead and bringing our great cause to victory is closely bound up with creating such a situation. We must strive to bring it into being.

The above is the second part [as published; no further indication given concerning "first part" or additional parts] of the main points of Comrade Hu Yaobang's speech at a work forum on rectification of party style.

RENMIN RIBAO EDITORIAL VIEWS PARTY ANNIVERSARY

OW302230 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 1 Jul 86 p 1

[Editorial: "Advance in the Course of Reform -- in Celebration of the 65h Founding Anniversary of the Communist Party of China"]

[Text] Today is the 65th founding anniversary of the Communist Party of China.

On this brilliant day, the more than 40 million party members, from the revolutionaries of the old generation who joined the party in the 1920's to the young comrades who took the oath under the party flag in the 1980's, all feel an upsurge of emotion in their hearts when reviewing the history of the party and looking into the future of the motherland. The 28 years of experience of blood and fire and 37 years of tests in storms and rains have irrefutably proven that the CPC deserves to be called a great Marxist revolutionary party and the core of leadership for the whole Chinese people.

In 1976 our leaders Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai, and Zhu De passed away one after another. The hundreds of millions of people burned with anxiety, while foreign observers made speculations of one kind or another with regard to the future of the CPC and China. Under these circumstances, the CPC was not bogged down in chaos and did not collapse after these setbacks but, on the contrary, smashed in one blow the "gang of four" -- a gang that wrecked our country and ruined our people -- and ended a decade of internal turmoil. Shortly afterward, the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee was convened, giving rise to a change of vital historical importance. The Chinese nation thus entered a new historical period of vigorous development.

Why has our situation continued to improve year after year since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee? There are many reasons, but the most fundamental one is that our party has resolutely shifted the focus of all its work from "taking class struggle as the key link" to economic construction and unswervingly led the reforms of the economic structure as well as in other fields. If it had only shifted the focus of work but failed to carry out reforms, done nothing to enliven the domestic economy and open to the outside world, and allowed all social and economic activities to remain on the old track of seclusion and ossification, could the situation of our country have developed so quickly and so well as it actually has done since the beginning of reforms? Obviously, the answer is negative. The tremendous achievements in rural reform have provided us with extremely valuable experience. The overall economic structural reform with emphasis on the urban economy will produce even more fruitful results, and these results will be a monument to China's reforms, which will draw worldwide attention.

At present, the situation of reform is very good. Last year the overall reform of the economic structure achieved initial success, bringing about the transition of our product economy to a socialist commodity economy. This year we have been doing the work of consolidation, assimilation, supplementation, and improvement with a view to putting the reforms we have previously made on a sound footing and laying the foundation and paving the way for our reform work in the future. Meanwhile, reforms in the fields of science and technology as well as education are being carried out in a down-to-earth way in line with the decisions of the central authorities. Reforms in the political and cultural fields have shown a new spectacular trend. With full confidence, our party is steering the boat of reform to brave the waves and sail toward the great goal of building socialism with Chinese characteristics.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "Reform is self-improvement of the socialist system. Within a certain scope, there are revolutionary changes in varying degrees." This is a scientific thesis. The on-going reform in all fields is not a revolution in which one class overthrows another. However, it is certainly not less profound, complex, or arduous than those in the past. Economically, in order to increase our productivity, we must continue to develop all types of ownership systems with the system of public ownership as the main one. We must further revitalize the enterprises and establish a market system while strengthening macrocontrol. Politically, we must not only reform resolutely parts of the leadership system and other political systems that are unsuited to the economic base but must also adhere to and improve the people's democratic dictatorship. Culturally, we must not only assimilate all the good points of foreign culture but must also resolutely resist corruption by decadent bourgeois ideas. In short, this is an extremely large and overall project involving all of society. Obviously, it is quite difficult to complete this project.

In order to do a still better job in shouldering the heavy tasks given us by history, we must further strengthen our party ideologically and organizationally and in work style.

Reform is not only a process of a new system replacing the old; it is often a confrontation between new and old ideas. Therefore, it is important to do away with outmoded concepts while fostering new concepts that are suited to the new situation. The decadent bourgeois ideoligies, the deep-rooted remnant feudalist ideas, and the concepts of small-scale production no longer play a leading role in our society. However, they still have their own market. Some people still have the habit of following the beaten path, and they are afraid of reform. All these should and can be overcome in the course of carrying out reform by implementing correct policies, broadening education, giving corect guidance, and conducting criticism and self-criticism. The CPC, which shoulders a tremendous responsibility in the new period, has demanded that all party members -- first of all cadres who are party members -- adhere to fostering lofty communist ideas and serving the people in the course of enthusiastically carrying out reform and construction; strive to transform their own subjective world while changing their objective world; resolutely combat all outmoded ideas and concepts that are not compatible with the requirements for carrying out reform; and boldly standing in the van of reform.

In order to healthily carry out reform, we must further rectify party style. Party style will determine whether the party will live or die, whether the nation will rise or fall, and whether the reform will succeed or fail.

While leading the people of the whole country in carrying out reform and developing the four modernizations program over the past few years, our party has conducted party rectification in stages and in groups; paid constant attention to party style; strengthened the development of spiritual civilization; and ensured that the nation forges ahead along a correct path in carrying out reforms and economic construction. After the convocation of the national party conference in September last year and the 8,000-strong rally held by the CPC Central Committee Secretariat in January this year, we have even more vigorously rectified our party style. A situation in which the whole party is paying attention to party style has already taken shape preliminarily. Several unhealthy trends have been basically reversed while major, important cases are under investigation. The leading organs and cadres at all levels have brought about remarkable changes in their thinking and work style. It is our firm belief that our fine party style, which has won ardent support from the people and greatly benefited reform and construction, will definitely be further developed if the whole party persistently and dauntlessly exerts itself.

In order to avoid detours in the course of reform and to triumphantly march forward, we must do a still better job in bringing inner-party democracy into full play and act according to the principle of democratic centralism. The fine situation in the party and in the country over the past few years is inseparable from the efforts made by our party in summing up its past lessons and strengthening democratic practices in the party and in society. In the course of reform, we are taking a path that no one has ever taken before. We are unable to find answers in a book; nor do we have any experience in this regard. In order to correctly understand this boundless realm of necessity step by step, we can only pool the wisdom of the masses. Actually, every important step that we have taken and every significant achievement that we have attained in reform constitute an embodiment of the wisdom and experience of all the party comrades and all the country's people. It can be said that currently, we must exert even greater efforts in giving full play to democracy inside and outside the party and implement the principle of democratic centralism as compared with the past. Our newspaper today has carried an important speech made by Comrade Hu Yaobang entitled "On the Issue of Correctly Handling the Two Different types of Contradictions Within the Party." This speech is of great significance in guiding us to further give full play to democracy, rectify party style, and strengthen party building. All party comrades, especially party cadres, should earnestly study this speech.

In recent years, our party has taken a broad and long-term view; actively and reliably reformed the cadre system; and further helped the leading bodies at all levels become more revolutionary, better educated, professionally more competent, and younger. Millions of cadres of the younger generation at all levels have closely cooperated and smoothly replaced cadres of the older generation. The structural changes of the leading bodies at all levels in age and educational background have created favorable conditions for ideologically and organizationally reforming our party leadership and eveloping the modernization program. The era of reform is one in which much can be accomplished. We hope that the broad masses of middle-aged and young cadres as well as the old cadres at various leading posts will even more closely unite as one and cooperate with each other; remain humble and prudent; guard against arrogance and rashness; always keep our revolutionary spirit young in promoting healthy trends, maintaining vigor and demonstrating the heroic mettle; and continuously make new contributions.

The country is carrying out reform which will benefit the people and their offspring. It is unrealistic to expect that we will carry out reform without encountering any resistance or experiencing any ups and downs. We naturally should concentrate our efforts and go all out in giving our guidance in order to avoid or make less detours. However, we must not recoil in fear because of this. It was not very easy for us to find the path that were taking today in building socialism in China. We have paid a tremendous price for it. No matter what kind of setbacks we meet, we must remain firm and unswerving. No matter what kind of difficulties we encounter, we can only forge ahead and not retreat. The history of our party in the past 65 years proves that victory forever belongs to those fighters who dauntlessly fight for the party's correct line.

This year is the first year of implementing the "Seventh 5-Year Plan." We have taken a new step forward in magnificently forging ahead to create a new situation in the development of the socialist modernization program in an overall manner. Let us even more closely unite as one under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee, persistently carry out and promote reform, and continuously add luster to our great CPC and our great socialist motherland by scoring new achievements.

VETERAN COMRADES GREET CPC FOUNDING ANNIVERSARY

OW301121 Beijing XINHUA Domestic in Chinese 1147 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Excerpt] Beijing, 28 Jun (XINHUA) -- On the eve of the 65th founding anniversary of the CPC, some veteran comrades sent messages to party organizations and members of organs directly under the CPC Central Committee, urging them to intensify party building and set a good example for the people throughout the country.

Comrade Deng Yingchao calls for "attaching great importance to and doing a good job in the work of party branches."

Comrade Wang Zhen urges "Communist Party members to play the exemplary vanguard role and party branches to become powerful fighting forces during the new historical period."

Comrade Song Renqiong calls on party branches and members to "set a good example for the people throughhout the country with noble mental outlook and fine work style."

Comrade Wang Shoudao hopes that 'in commemorating the party's birthday, all party branches and members will carry forward the party's traditions, rectify party work style, intensify party building, and enhance party unity in order to advance the party's cause."

Comrade Kang Keqing calls for "developing the party's fine tradition of seeking truth from facts."

WANG BINQIAN REPORTS ON 1985 FINAL ACCOUNT

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jun (XINHUA) -- Report on the 1985 state final account -- delivered by Wang Bingqian, state councillor and finance minister, at the 16th Session of the 6th NPC Standing Committee on 20 June

Committee members: At the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC in March this year, I presented a "Report on the Implementation of the State Budget for 1985 and on the Draft State Budget for 1986." Now, the state final account for 1985 has been officially completed and, on behalf of the State Council, I herewith submit for your examination a report on the state final account for 1985.

Nineteen eighty-five was a year in which we achieved tremendous progress in socialist construction. Thanks to the concerted efforts of the people of all nationalities, progress in socialist modernization was accelerated in that year and noticeable progress was achieved in production, constitution, and reform. Along with the steady, balanced growth of the national economy, the state financial situation further improved, and both revenues and expenditures increased by a rather big margin over the previous year and achieved a balance.

According to the officially compiled state final account, state revenues in 1985 totaled 186.64 billion yuan, or 121.6 percent of the budgeted figure; state expenditures amounted to 184.478 billion yuan, or 117.9 percent of the budgeted figure. The balance showed a surplus of 2,162 million yuan. Compared against the estimated figures cited in the report to the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, it shows an increase of 1,229 million yuan in total revenues, and increase of 1,884 million yuan in total expenditures, and a decrease of 655 million yuan in the balance. The overall situation was good. Some explanations are in order here. The bulk of the surplus came from local authorities, and will be left to their discretion in accordance with state financial control regulations.

Of the revenues for 1985, domestic revenues totaled 183,716 million yuan, or 122.5 percent of the budgeted figure; foreign loans totaled 2,924 million yuan, or 83.5 percent of the budgeted figure. The major revenues were as follows.

1. Tax receipts amounted to 204,079 million yuan, or 125.8 percent of the budgeted figure. The tax receipt quotas were overfulfilled because of increased industrial and agricultural production, expanded commodity circulation, and improved tax collection work. Meanwhile, a large amount of consumer products was imported last year, and revenues from tariffs, imported product tax, and value-added tax increased accordingly.

2. Revenues of enterprises totaled 4,375 million yuan, or 102.1 percent of the budgeted figure. These were revenues turned in by enterprises which had not adopted the system of replacing profit deliveries with tax payments and by a small number of enterprises which practiced a system of assuming responsibility for their own profits.

3. Receipts from state treasury bonds totaled 6,061 million yuan, or 101 percent of the budgeted figure.

4. Funds collected for construction and key energy and transport projects came to 14,679 million yuan, or 122.3 of the budgeted figure. The surplus in this type of income was due to an increase in extabudgetary funds, which totaled 140 billion yuan last year, an increase of 22 percent over the previous year. The various localities, departments, and units actively turned in their contributions in accordance with regulations to support key state projects.

5. Subsidies for loss suffered by enterprises and for price increase came to 50,702 million yuan, exceeding the budgeted figure. These subsidies were deducted from the total state revenues. Last year's subsidies increased mainly because the state gave proportional subsidies in purchasing grain earlier than in previous years on a per house hold basis, and at a quickened pace. In addition, because of increased prices of some raw and other materials and poor enterprises management, quite a few industrial and commercial enterprises continued to suffer deficits. As a result, subsidies for enterprise deficits also increased.

China's state revenues in 1985 were good. This was the comprehensive result of the great development of China's industrial and agricultural production and the continuous expansion of China's domestic and foreign trade. In 1985, compared with the previous year, total output value of China's industry and agriculture increased 16.4 percent; total volume of commodity retail sales rose 27.5 percent, total volume of import and export trade increased 30 percent. As a result, national income in 1985 increased by 37.01 billion yuan, or 25.2 percent, over the previous year. Allowing for the increase of consumer goods imports and the rise in tariffs following the rapid growth of production in the first half of 1985, the actual increase was 16 percent. Of course, development of production and expansion of circulation do not necessarily mean increased revenues. In 1985, under the leadership of governments at all levels, financial and tax departments firmly grasped the work of collecting revenues. They examined all taxation, financial, and pricing work across the country and achieved very great results. Thanks to efforts made in these few years, China's state revenues have recorded 3 years of steady growth, and its financial situation has further improved. All this once again proves that economy is the foundation and fountainhead of finance. Only if the economy is developed and financial sources are expanded, with the necessary management and supervision, can we reliably ensure increased revenues.

The favorable situation in state revenues in 1985 was also the result of implementing the CPC Central Committee's principle's of invigorating the domestic economy and opening the country to the outside world and of steadily reforming and perfecting the financial and tax systems. Following the completion of the two-stage reform of state enterprises paying taxes instead of delivering profits to the state, we made reforms by perfecting the financial and tax systems.

In 1985, to meet the needs of readjusting the industrial structure and regulating income, the state started to levy some new taxes, reduced the regulatory tax rate for some large and medium-sized state enterprises, increased the depreciation rate for fixed assets, and adopted some measures which helped open the country to the outside world and encouraged technological development and progress.

In addition, to suit the new situation following the tax reform of replacing profit deliveries with tax payments, the state reformed the financial management system and instructed provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities to "define diverse categories of taxes, and examine and approve revenues and expenditures, with the authorities at various levels each determining their respective responsibilities."

Practice shows that these reforms improved the distribution relationship between the state and enterprises and between the central authorities and local departments, developed the enthusiasm of all sides, and not only helped guarantee the steady increase of state revenues but also invigorated and spurred on enterprises and local departments. The effect was favorable. Take, for example, the profits retained by state enterprises after payment of taxes. Profits in 1985 were estimated at more than 46 billion yuan, an increase of over 10 billion yuan, or about 30 percent, over the previous year. The depreciation funds retained by enterprises in 1985 were estimated to reach 30 billion yuan, an increase of more than 5 billion yuan, or 23 percent, over the previous year.

Of the 1985 total state expenditures, disbursement of funds from domestic sources amounted to 181.554 billion yuan, equivalent to 118.7 percent of the budget. Appropriations for capital construction made from foreign loans totaled 2.924 billion yuan, or 83.5 percent of the budget. The essential breakdown of expenditures is as follows.

1. Appropriations for capital construction amounted to 58.38 billion yuan, or 120.7 percent of the budget. This expenditure exceeded the budget amount mainly because of a relatively big increase in the capital construction expenditure made from local contingency funds in various places. Another reason was that in implementing the budget, the state increased investments in energy, transport, and infrastructural projects to strengthen key construction work and meet the needs of opening to the outside world.

2. Funds expended to tape the potential of existing enterprises, finance their technological transformation, and subsidize the trial manufacture of new products totaled 10.342 billion yuan, or 196.6 percent of the budget. From 1983, basic depreciation funds for enterprises originally under the management of the central financial department have been transferred to the enterprises. Accordingly, the amount of funds appropriated by the Central Financial Department was reduced. In the actual implementation of the budget, however, all localities and departments increased expenditures to promote the enterprises' technological transformation and to enable them to make technological advance. This accounted for the rather large extrabudgetary expenditure.

3. Aid to rural production and various operating expenses for agriculture came to 10.104 billion, or 107.5 percent of the budget. One reason for this extrabudgetary expenditure was the increased spending for agriculture from contingency funds of the various localities. In addition, in implementing the budget, the Central Financial Department appropriated an additional operating expense for fighting disasters to those localities hit by heavy natural disasters last year.

4. Operating expenses for culture, education, science, and public health services totaled 31.67 billion yuan, or 108.1 percent of the budget. Compared with the preceding year, this represented an increase of 20.3 percent -- a rate which exceeded the growth of regular financial revenue and the growth of total financial expenditure. The large increase in these expenses was attributable mainly to the fact that, as a result of their increased revenue, all units from the central to the local level increased spending in these fields to accelerate the development of their cultural, educational, scientific, and public health services and adjust the wages of staffs and workers of these departments. Of course, our development of science, technology, and education is still insufficient to meet the needs of our country's modernization program. In the days to come, with the development of production and the growth of financial revenue, the state will continue to increase appropriations in these fields.

5. Expenditures for national defense accounted for 19.153 billion yuan, or 102.6 percent of the budgeted figure.

6. Administrative expenses amounted to 13.058 million yuan, or 109.7 percent of the budgeted figure and representing an increase of 4.3 percent over the previous year. Because of enhanced control and management, sharp increases in administrative expenses were brought under control. However, they still exceeded the budgeted figure by a rather large margin. In addition to increased expenditures for strengthening judicial and public security work, readjustment of workers' wages, increased living allowances for retired cadres, and addition of personnel, expenditures were due to lack of control over the size of administrative organs, inordinate increase of personnel, and expenses caused by irregularities.

Expenditures for 1985 were basically normal. In accordance with the needs of economic development and the increase of revenues, in that year, while strictly controlling nonproductive expenditures, we increased investment in energy and transport projects, wage and price systems reform funds, and operating expenses for culture, education, science, and public health services, thus ensuring the funds for key state projects, reform of the economic structure, and development of intellectual resources.

Total domestic expenditures in 1985 rose 30.395 million yuan, or 20.1 percent, over the previous year. Of this, allocations for domestic capital construction rose 10.044 million yuan over the previous year; and operating expenses for culture, education, science and public health services rose 5.353 million yuan. In addition, the state treasury also defrayed more than 7 billion yuan in subsidies for urban residents because of wage system reform of administrative and business units and readjustment of pork prices. These three categories were responsible for 22 billion yuan, or over 70 percent of the increase in expenditures.

Because of additional investments, the state's capital construction made new headway in 1985. A number of large coal mines, power stations, oil wells, construction material enterprises, and new railways were completed and put into operation, and many enterprises had their technology transformed. All this greatly helped strengthen weak links in our economy, and facilitate continuous production growth.

Cultural, educational, scientific, and public health projects also progressed rapidly in 1985. In that year, over 10,400 scientific and technological research projects in the country were commended by departments under the State Council, and by the people's governments of various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central government. In 1985, the nation's ordinary institutes of higher education enrolled 619,000 new students, or 30 percent more than in 1984. New developments were observed in the fields of culture, education, television, radio, journalism, and publishing.

As a result of the restructuring of the wage system, carried out on the basis of the development of production, and thanks to states subsidies for commodity prices, the income of people living in cities and rural areas continued to grow in 1985. The average per capita income of urban residents in that year reached 752 yuan, while net per capita income of rural families reached 397 yuan. After adjustments for the rise of commodity prices, the actual income was respectively 10.6 and 8.4 percent higher than the previous year.

While the execution of the 1985 state budget was satisfactory, we must also be aware of the many real problems. The main problems are:

Certain factors causing economic instability -- such as excessive investment in fixed assets and excessive growth of consumption funds -- have not been totally eliminated; many enterprises still fail to fundamentally correct their poor management, substandard technology, and poor economic performance. All these problems either directly or indirectly affect the financial situation and will affect our future financial stability and budget balance.

Meanwhile, our financial work has also been affected by many problems. Revenue loss -- including losses of resources through seepage, evaporation, dripping, and leaks -- and spending wastes are still quite serious; we must attach great importance to these problems and take measures to deal with them.

Another problems is: As our financial situation improves and our life becomes easier, everyone wants to accomplish more work sooner, and this causes contradictions between supply and demand of capital, and our financial planning becomes even more difficult. Thus, as the situation becomes better, we must do our work more earnestly; and as our revenue increases, we must adhere more firmly to the principle of doing what we are capable of.

We must continue to analyze the new situation, learn from new experiences, and improve economic forecasts and achieve overall balance so that we will not lose control in some areas but will achieve even greater successes in our work.

Committee members, more than 5 months of 1986 have elapsed, and here I would like to give you a brief account of how the budget of the first 5 months of 1986 was executed.

The nation's current economic situation is favorable, and all production and construction projects, including the economic system restructuring project, are progressing. Generally speaking, the execution of this year's economic and social development plan has been normal, and so has the execution of the state budget. According to statistics, domestic revenues during the January-May period reached 73 billion yuan, or 35 percent of the budget, and domestic expenditures reached 70.3 billion yuan, or 32.7 percent of the budget. The accounts show a positive balance of 2.7 billion yuan.

To implement this year's state budget, balance revenues and expenditures, and ensure normal progress in restructuring the economic system, on the basis of the needs of current economic development and the way this year's budget plan has been executed, the State Council has urged all regions and departments to take measures to ensure revenues and strictly control expenditures. Last year we were able to balance revenues and expenditures; in the same way, we must guard against any deficits this year. We must realize that the job of balancing revenues and expenditures will be quite difficult because, during the second half of the year, there will be many projects which require large expenditures and bring in less revenues.

For this reason, we must do the following:

1. We must properly oranize the various production and circulation projects, make every effort to achieve higher ecoomic returns, cut losses, increase profits, intensify the supervision of taxation and financial management, and properly organize the task of collecting revenues to guarantee a steady growth in revenues.

2. We must strictly control and economize expenditures. We must economize and guard against any waste by avoiding spending for whatever is not absolutely essential. Budgeted investments for capital construction must be strictly controlled so that there will be no overspending. The state has already set the norms for administrative expenses and for institutional purchases, and all regions and departments must control their expenses according to the norms.

3. Central and local authorities alike must strictly control any additional expenditures. All regions must exercise control over the spending of last year's surpluses. Even if some localities' revenues may exceed their targets this year, they should still curtail or eliminate certain expenses so that surpluses may be used next year.

4. A system of responsibility in implementing the budget plan should be instituted and strictly followed. After their budgets are approved, all regions and departments must ensure that those budgets are implemented, make every effort to exceed the revenue target, and spend less than the targeted expenditures. While drawing up specific policies and measures, all regions and departments must consider their capabilities and guard against any measures that can reduce income and increase expenditure. Measures, after having been examined by a financial department, should be referred to the State Council and the local government for approval. Macroeconomic measures should be adopted to control the distribution of financial resources, to guard against a new decentralization of capital. To facilitate control of this year's expenditures to all regions, we will distribute the norms for controlling their expenses during the second half of 1986.

5. General taxation and financial inspection should continue. This work, which will begin during the fourth quarter of this year, will end by the Spring Festival next year. According to the current financial and economic situation, and according to the current financial and economic situation, and according to the forecast of development during the next several months, we think that it is possible for us to accomplish the state budget plan and achieve another balance of revenues and expenditures this year, provided we do a good job during the next several months. This means that we should make every effort to increase our reveneus, tighten expenditures, and guard against any uncontrolled spending.

CHANGING POLICY ON ADVANTAGES OF OVERSEAS RELATIONS

[Article by Yang Zhengyan: "Overseas Relations Are a Good Thing"]

[Text] Not long ago, I had two interesting experiences.

The first was during the fourth session of the Sixth NPC, when I interviewed some returned Overseas Chinese deputies. One of them is a deputy who works with a research institute of a ministry in Shaanxi. He is a former Overseas Chinese returned from Britain, and is now a senior engineer and a party member. However, he did not dare admit that he is a returned Overseas Chinese. Last year, when his cousin returned to visit relatives, he did not dare to meet this cousin.

The second was in May this year. When I attended the Hebei Provincial Overseas Chinese Affairs Work Conference in Shijiazhuang. A comrade who is a functionary of a county People's Congress said in a group discussion that he felt reassured when he heard, for the first time, the remark that "personal overseas relations are a good thing."

These two events reflect two problems.

First, some people even now have misgivings about their personal "overseas relations," which were a terrible and disgusting thing in the past. People who had such "overseas relations" were bound to have bad luck.

Now, things have changed radically. People who have "overseas relations" can enjoy equal political treatment with other people and their livelihood is better ensured (certainly not in an illegal way). However, in real life, some people are still prejudiced against people who have "overseas relations" and consider such "overseas relations" to be a complicated thing. This prejudice is concretely reflected in the matter of redressing mishandled cases, and in placing political trust in intellectuals who are returned Overseas Chinese or relatives of Overseas Chinese, appointing them to responsible posts, and admitting them into the party. The residual influence of the "leftist" ideas causes some people, including some communist party members, to have misgivings about people's personal "overseas relations."

Second, we have not given sufficient publicity to the viewpoint that "overseas relations are a good thing." We seldom see newspapers and magazines carry articles advocating this viewpoint.

"Overseas relations" are in fact normal social connections of returned Overseas Chinese and relatives of Overseas Chinese, and the existence of such "overseas relations" is a natural phenomenon in social development. Along with the development of human society, people in various countries are bound to communicate with each other, and will never seclude themselves in a narrow corner of the world.

According to the accounts in our nation's chronicles, Chinese people began to emigrate to other countries as early as the Chin and Han Dynasties, and the number of emigrants increased gradually during and after the Tang Dynasty. More people emigrated after the Opium War. The reasons behind these emigrations were complicated. For example, under feudal rule, many peasants became impoverished and had no means of livelihood. So some of them had no choice but to leave their home villages and go abroad to seek a living. In other cases, some people were abducted and sold by colonialists to other countries as laborers. Some Overseas Chinese or their descendants were later naturalized and became citizens of the countries in which they lived.

According to rough statistics, there are now some 30 million Overseas Chinese and foreign citizens of Chinese origin in various countries of the world. Most of them are working people -- workers, peasants, small shopkeepers, and free lance professionals. Quite a few Overseas Chinese have become businessmen, bankers, industrialists or become professors, engineers, doctors, and lawyers. Some foreign citizens of Chinese origin have even become government officials.

The maintenance of extensive relations by the returned Overseas Chinese and relatives of Overseas Chinese with these people is certainly a good thing for our country rather than a bad thing. Comrade Deng Xiaoping once said: "Now we have too few rather than having too many overseas relations. Overseas relations are a good thing, which can help us expand relations in all fields." In the new historical period, "overseas relations" will function as an important channel for us to introduce funds, technologies, equipment, and talented manpower, and will also provide a favorable condition for us to solve the Taiwan issue and realize the reunification of the motherland.

Facts have also proved all this. Since the 3d Plenum of the 11th CPC Central Committee, under the guidance of the party's policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, a vast number of Overseas Chinese have actively supported the motherland's economic construction and the development of their home areas by means of making donations and investments. In particular, many home areas of Overseas Chinese have benefited from the assistance of their overseas kinfolks in the fields of funds, equipment, technology, information, and talented manpower, and have made marked changes and rapid economic development. People who have visited these Overseas Chinese home areas are all deeply impressed with the remarkable changes and development in those areas, and deeply feel that "overseas relations" are indeed an invaluable advantage.

From reports by foreign newspapers and journals, we know that the economies in the communities of Overseas Chinese or foreign citizens of Chinese origin have developed greatly since the end of World War II. At present, the assets owned by Overseas Chinese and foreign citizens of Chinese origin in all parts of the world total some $200 billion. Some Overseas Chinese capital has transcended national boundaries and become part of the world's international capital.

In the field of science and technology, many Overseas Chinese and foreign citizens of Chinese origin have become leading scientists and experts in all fields throughout the world. For example, one of the spacemen who worked on board the U.S. space shuttle "Challenger" is Dr Wang Ganjun, a Chinese American. Some foreign people have predicted that, just as in the 20th century, science and technology are dominated by Jewish people; so in the 21st century, science and technology will be the domain of Chinese people, or will be dominated by Chinese people. This shows that Chinese people are among the world's cleverest and most extraordinary people. This fact is a favorable factor for building our great socialist motherland. If we can make full use of this strength, we will become very powerful.

In addition, "overseas relations" have another major advantage. Many Overseas Chinese now have connections or relatives on both the mainland and Taiwan. If we make positive approaches to them, they will not only help us conduct economic construction, but will also help us properly solve the Taiwan issue and realize the reunification of the motherland. Facts show that as long as we adopt a correct policy and work in a correct way, "overseas relations" will help us build up relations in all fields and make breakthroughs in all aspects of our work.

Comrade Hu Yaobang once said: "The 30 million Overseas Chinese and foreign citizens of Chinese origin constitute a great force. If we approach these people correctly, they will become an important force for promoting our modernization process, realizing the reunification of the motherland, expanding the overseas influence of our country, and winning more foreign friends." Obviously, with so many relations living abroad and with such extensive "overseas relations," we indeed enjoy a great advantage. We are now undergoing a new historical period. We should have a strategic vision and foresight and should fully exploit this advantage in order to fulfill the party's three major tasks.

NATIONAL COAL CONFERENCE CONCLUDES 29 JUNE

[Text] Beijing, June 29 (XINHUA) -- China's coal exports for the first six months of the year are expected to reach five million tons, up 54 percent from the same 1985 period, according to government officials.

The officials said China plans to increase its coal exports by five million tons a year through 1990.

Overall exports for the 1986-1990 period should reach 100 million tons -- equal to all of the coal exported between 1949 and 1984, they told a coal conference that ended here Saturday. Those attending the conference agreed the China national coal import and export corporation will continue to control coal exports.

To keep coal exports expanding, the officials said, quality standards must be enforced through their responsibility system, which links workers' incomes to the quality and quantity of what they produce. To make sure export deliveries are prompt, the officials urged cooperation between mines and transportation and customs departments.

ZHAO ZIYANG STRESSES DEVELOPMENT OF COAL INDUSTRY

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jun (XINHUA) -- At a recent State Council meeting, Premier Zhao Ziyang expressed his views on the development of the coal industry. He said: It is necessary to link China's rich coal resources with its abundant human resources in order to open up a new path in accelerating the pace in developing the coal industry.

Recently Premier Zhao Ziyang made a special trip to three major coalfields in Shanxi's Pingshuo, Shaanxi's Shenmu, and Nei Monggol's Jungar while on an inspection tour. After returning to Beijing, he held a meeting with the relevant departments to study the guidelines and strategic plans for the development of the coal industry.

Premier Zhao said: China's richest natural resource is coal. This is a resource in which our nation is superior. The several coalfields that I inspected this time have a tremendous amount of high-quality coal reserves. Especially the coal of the Shenmu coalfield is of low sulfuric content and high calorific capacity. The coal beds are not very deep under the ground, and coal mining by peasants can be relatively easy. It is indeed a coalfield richly endowed by nature. There are abundant human resources in the rural areas where these major coalfields are located. By making full use of the local manpower to tap the rich natural resources there, we will be able to meet not only domestic needs in the coal industry, but also help expand coal exports and make our coal prices more competitive on the world market. We should adopt measures during the Seventh and Eighth 5-Year Plan periods to give full play to this superiority. This will help develop the overall situtlon in economic construction.

Zhao Ziyang said: The key to bringing into full play China's superiority and to quickening the pace in developing China's coal industry is to solve the issue of mining and transporting coal.

Dwelling on the issue of coal mining, Zhao Ziyang said: In the past few years, we have found a way, that is, by relying on peasants for mining coal. In this way, we will be able to integrate our richest coal resources with our most abundant human resources. One form of integration is to encourage peasants to open mines by themselves. For example, various localities have been running township collieries. This form is more suitable for working on coal deposits which are not so deep. Another form of integration is to have the state run coal mines while hiring peasants to work in these coal mines on a rotation basis.

In this way, there will always be a reasonable organizational structure of coal miners in the coal mine, while the state may be able to save a large amount of investment money. This will also help peasants in these areas eliminate poverty and become well-to-do.

On the issue of transportation, Zhao Ziyang pointed out: The development of coal industry is, in the past analysis, an issue of transportation. Unless the issue of coal transportation is given serious consideration, it will be impossible to bring into full play our superiority in coal mining. In working out long-range plans, we must plan to build trunk rail lines for transporting coal. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, we must concentrate our efforts on completing a trunk rail line linking Datong with Qinhuangdao and at the same time pay attention to developing relevant feeder railways. Later we plan to build railway feeder lines and repair highways near the trunk rail lines to form a rational transportation network radiating in all directions. Our experience of the past few years show that the guideline that suits China's conditions best is to have the state build trunk rail lines, local authorities and enterprises build and comanage feeder railways, and the masses carry out coal mining. Naturally, the state must also develop some key collieries as the backbone of the coal industry. In addition to transporting coal out of the coal-producting areas, we must also consider the issue of making use of the coal locally. In order to promote the rational distribution of industry, we must build thermal power generating stations and develop steel, aluminum, and building material industries as well as chemical industries in close connection with the local coal industry.

Zhao Ziyang said: We must develop a system and carry out the necessary reform in coal mining, coal transportation, and the local use of coal. All departments and units must join efforts in running power stations and feeder railways. It is not good for one department or one unit to run a power station or railway line all by itself. The power generation department must encourage the various districts and units to generate power and expand the entire power industry. This is also true in developing railway transportation. The trunk rail lines should be built and managed by the Ministry of Railways, while local authorities, departments, and enterprises must be encouraged to invest in building and managing feeder or specialized railway through joint efforts. From now on, investments made by the coal department should be mainly used for coal mining. However, some of the investments can also be used for repairing railways and procuring coal for use in other localities. In developing the Shenmu coalfield, we may use the method of selling shares; we must arouse the enthusiasm of the local authorities and departments and of the peasants, and work out plans to promote coal mining, popularize technology, carry out personnel training, and do a good job in procuring, transporting, and exporting coal. In short, we muste adopt new methods and use new measures in enliven all sectors of the coal industry and quicken our pace in developing this industry.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES CRIMINALS TO TURN THEMSELVES IN

[Commentator's article: "The Only Way Out for Criminals"]

[Text] Since the meeting held by central organs, which 8,000 people attended, a number of important cases have been handled according to law by central and local departments.

The struggle to crack down on serious economic crimes and other criminal offenses is being carried out in a practical and thorough manner. The solemn sentences, on one case after another, have increased the confidence of the masses of people in effecting a further turn for the better in party style and the general practice of society. They have also given a powerful shock to criminals in society who have not yet been caught.

There are two choices for criminals to make: They may turn themselves in and make a confession in order to receive lenient treatment, or they can put up a desperate struggle, thus becoming doubly guilty. They will then feel uneasy, day and night. No matter what they do, they will feel a sharp pain in their back. Many criminals and lawbreakers are seized with fear and suffer great pain.

China's "criminal law" stipulates: "Offenders who voluntarily surrender will be dealt with leniently. Those guilty of light offenses will be given light sentences or be exempted from punishment. Those guilty of more serious offense will also be given light sentences or exempted from punishment if they produce evidence of meritorious service." This has stated clearly how offenders who voluntarily surrender will be treated. However, some offenders still doubt if this provision is aplicable to them.

This paper carries a report today on Zhang Shixiong of the Guangzhou High Voltage Electrical Appliances Factory, whose embezzlement and bribery totalled more than 110,000 yuan, who voluntarily surrendered himself to the judicial department and produced evidence of meritorious service. Therefore, he was given a light sentence according to law of 3 years's imprisonment, with the sentence suspended for 5 years. The sum of Zhang Shixiong's embezzlement was particularly big and his case was particularly serious. If he had not voluntarily surrendered himself and if his crimes had been exposed by others, his fate would have been quite apparent.

Our laws are solemn and impartial and our judicial organs strictly enfore them. Severe or lenient treatment will be given according to law with meticulous care. That Zhang Shixiong has been given lenient punishment is clear. Of course, if anyone stubbornly takes the opposite path, he will not escape severe legal punishment.

At present, some criminals keenly regret their crimes but trust themselves to luck and remain undecided. We want to tell them: Regret alone is of no avail. Trying to get by under false pretences is a miscalculation. Justice has a long arm. The only way out is to act like Zhang Shixiong, surrender and confess, and strive to get lenient treatment. If they make things worse by repeated delays, it will be too late to repent when they are shown the handcuffs!

BO YIBO DISCUSSES PARTY RECTIFICATION, MEMBERSHIP

["The CPC Has a Membership of Over 42 Million" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 29 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- LIAOWANG issue No 26, which will be published tomorrow, carries the text of a speech by Bo Yibo, in which he says that the CPC now has a membership of over 42 million.

At the beginning of the Great Revolution (1924-1927), the CPC only had some 10,000 members. In the heyday of the Great Revolution, that is, when the Northern Expeditionary Army arrived in Wuhan, it only had a membership of 58,000. When the Great Revolution failed, its membership shrunk to only 10,000. In the initial period of the war of resistance against Japan, the CPC only had 40,000 members, and during the Yanan Rectification of 1942, it only had several hundred thousand members.

Bo Yibo, executive vice chairman of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification, held that the principal aspect of the contingent of party members is good but the quality of some party members is not good.

Bo Yibo said: Before the founding of the PRC, CPC members were few in number but highly competent. Under very difficult conditions they struggled in the war of resistance against Japan, for the revolution, and for the ideal of communism. With the exception of a handful of bad people and special agents who penetrated the party, most of the them were core members who survived the "sieve" of revolutionary wars. Now that conditions have changed and the CPC has changed its status and become the party in power, party members have power in their hands. It is precisely with the aim of obtaining this power to acquire personal gain that some people have penetrated into the party. Changes have also taken place in the ideas of some old party members so that they have also taken advantage of their positions to seek personal gain.

Bo Yibo held: The party rectification, which has been going on for over 2 years, has achieved some success. Notable progress has been made in reaching a common understanding, rectifying party work style, strengthening discipline, and purifying the party organization.

With regard to current party rectification, Bo Yibo stressed the need to boldly tackle difficult problems. He said: Under various difficult conditions and in various complex environments, Communist Party members should be bold in upholding principles and struggling for the truth. As far as we are concerned, we should be bold in tackling various "networks of relationships," factionalism, and those violators of law and discipline who hold varying degrees of power in their hands. If we dare not do so, we shall not be able to rectify the party and party work style. The present conditions are that it is relatively difficult to investigate and handle major cases. It is absolutely necessary to change this state of affairs. If we fail to do so, where is the party's sense of principle? How can we safeguard party discipline?

COMMENTARY ADVISES COMPANIES TO INITIATE REFORM

[Text] Beijing, 27 Jun (XINHUA) -- Commentator's article: Administrative Companies Should Take the Initiative To Change Practices

Those companies which manage enterprises by administrative means have encountered the following challenge brought about by the thriving development of lateral economic associations: Should they continue the old management practices within the orbit of the old system characterized by barriers between departments and regions, or should they consciously take the initiative to transform themselves in order to meet the needs of the new situation? Inevitably, each of these administrative companies has to make its own choice.

The moves made by the Chongging Furniture Company on this matter has been positive. In order to meet the needs of reform, it has duly changed from an administrative company into an enterprise entity engaged in production, management, and services. In other words, it has changed from being a "mother-in-law" of enterprises to being a "partner" serving them. Now the relationship between this company and its enterprises, which was established on the basis of economic benefit, has become an interdependent one. This relationship is so close that they are bound together and share weal and woe with each other. The path taken by the Chongging Furniture Company is very significant, for it provides a useful experience for some administrative companies to carry out further reform.

It is obvious that reform of some administrative organizations is inevitable in the course of the in-depth development of China's economic structural reform. It is understandable that some administrative companies have been ideologically unprepared for the impact brought about by the practice of lateral association. However, they should catch up with others by intensively studying and absorbing the good experiences of other areas. Otherwise, they will become more and more passive. As the saying "the old is always superseded by the new" goes, those personnel of administrative organizations who failed to meet the needs of the new system should make great efforts, in terms of both thinking and action, to conform to the trend of reform during the transition from an old economic system to a new one. Only in this way can they continually make new contributions to reform.

We are convinced that before long a great number of companies like the Chongging Furniture Company will emerge in all localities to meet the needs of the development of lateral enonomic associations.

WU LI, HU QILI ATTEND MODEL PARTY MEMBERS MEETING

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Yin Pinduan, JINGJI RIBAO reporter Wang Pei, and XINHUA reporter Zou Aiguo]

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jun (XINHUA) -- The party committee of the institutions under the CPC Central Committee and government convened a "1 July" report meeting on the deeds of model communist party members at Zhongnanhai on the morning of 28 June. Prior to the meeting, Comrades Wan Li, Hu Qili, Tian Jiyun, Wang Zhaoguo, and Bo Yibo received the 10 members of the report group. They encouraged them to struggle for communist ideals with one heart and one mind and dedicate themselves to rejuvenating the Chinese nation and to undertake great reform.

At the reception, Wan Li said: Our country is undergoing a great and profound reform. This is a revolution. The new historical period sets forth new demands for Communist Party members. Party member and cadres of government organs should adapt and serve the new situation of reform, opening to the outside world, and enlivening the economy; carry out the great plan; and take the lead in executing this revolution well. The purpose of our party and government is to serve the people. Party members and cadres of our government organs must play an exemplary role in abiding by the law and discipline, in performing their official duties honestly, and in being devoted to their duty. They must dare to confront the tough with strength; have the courage to overcome bureaucracy; work hard to improve work efficiency; constantly improve their political, educational and scientific and technical levels; become new persons with high ideals, moral integrity, general education, and a sense of discipline; and serve the people wholeheartedly.

At the reception, Bo Yibo urged them to keep the honorable title of model party members all of their life. He said: It is not difficult to do one or two good things, but to do it all in one's life is not so easy. We Communist Party members must perform good deeds for the people all of our lives. To achieve this, we must study Marixm, Mao Zedong Thought, and the line, principles, and policies adopted by the party since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee; and study and temper ourselves in pratice and among the people. Only thus can we make new progress under the situation of reform, opening up, and enlivening. Communist Party members must combine principle with flexibility, and theory with practice; that is, figuratively speaking, like thefirm and indomitable pines, we must never waver under any situation and, at the same time, we must also be like the willow, which grows wherever it is planted. We must take root deep among the masses. Every party member must demand this of himself.

Hu Qili said: To build our nation into a highly civilized and democratic socialist country, we must implement all-round reforms and proceed from our national conditions to explore our own way. This is tremendous task requiring half of century of hard work, as well as a huge undertaking that will change the fate of one-fourth of the world's population. It is a profound revolution. We communists must struggle to achieve this goal. Party members and cadres of central government organs must work hard to ovecome bureaucracy, improve work efficiency, and play an exemplary role in all aspects. This is a question of vital importance, as well as an important part of the reform efforts. We work in different posts, but our goal is identical -- to rejuvenate the Chinese nation and defend world peace. We must work with one heart and one mind and dedicate ourselves to rejuvenating the Chinese nation.

Tian Jiyun said: It is necessary to learn from you comrades. It is hoped that you will continue to exert yourselves, advance forward ceaselessly, and work hard to rejuvenate the Chinese nation.

After the reception, the report meeting on the deeds of model Communist Party members was held. Five fine communist members spoke at the meeting. They were Pan Fulan, senior engineer at No 5 Designing Institute under the Ministry of Ordnance Industry: Zhang Youmin, head of the Financial Bureau of the Ministry of Railways; Chen Xiukang, engineer at the No 403 warehouse of the Ministry of Aviation Industry; Xu Haifeng, an athlete on the national shooting team; and Huang Ronghui, director of the No 5 Atmospheric Physics Instiute under the Academy of Sciences of China.

Zhang Jingyaun, deputy secretary of the party committee of the institutions under the CPC Central Committee and government, spoke. He urged all party members in the central organs, especially those party members who are leading cadres, to take exemplary persons as their model and emulate their spirit of performing official duties honestly, implementing reform, bringing forth new ideas, struggling tenaciously, and dedicating themselves to make contributions to bring about marked improvements in party style and ensuring the smooth progress of reform.

CHENG ZIHUA, OTHERS COMMEND OUTSTANDING COMMUNISTS

[By reporter Xu Xinhua]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 28 Jun (XINHUA) -- The CPC Committee of Organs directly under the CPC Central Committee called a meeting at Zhongnanhai this morning to commend advanced party branches and outstanding communists of the organs. The title of "Advanced Party Branch of Organ Directly Under the CPC Central Committee" was conferred on 20 advanced party branches, and "Outstanding Communist of Organ Directly Under the CPC Central Committee" on 156 party members.

Prior to the commendation meeting, Comrades Hu Qili, Qiao Shi, Wang Zhaoguo, Bo Yibo, Song Renqiong, and Wang Hashou had a cordial meeting with representatives of the advanced party branches and the outstanding communists. After extending warm congratulations to them, the leaders posed for pictures with them.

Liu Huafeng, secretary of the CPC committee of Organs Directly Under the CPC Central Committee, presided over the meeting. Qiao Qing, Standing Committee member of the party committee, read its decision to commend the advanced party branches and outstanding communists.

Amidst spirited music, Cheng Zihua, Standing Committee member of the Central Advisory Commission; other members of the commission; and leader of the party committee presented banners and certificates to the advanced party branches and outstanding communists.

Zhao Zongnai, permanent deputy secretary of the party committee, delivered a speech at the meeting, entitled "Inherit and Carry Forward the Party's Fine Tradition, Build a Contingent of Party Members With Strong Party Spirit and Good Work Style."

Zhao Zongnai said: Currently our party is concentrating efforts on the unprecedented great undertaking of building socialism with Chinese characteristics. In order to accomplish the general task and objective set up by the party for the new period, we must rely on the enthusiasm and creativity of the hundreds of millions of masses and the fighting spirit displayed by party organizations at all levels and all party members during the years of war in mobilizing and organizing the masses to score new achievements.

He said: The tasks for organs directly under the CPC Central Committee during the new historical period are to uphold the four cardinal principles, assist and advise the CPC Central Committee in carrying out the reform and modernization drive, and effectively promote the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization. The CPC Central Committee has set high demands on our work, and Comrade Hu Yaobang has urged us to set a good example for the people throughout the country with our noble mental outlook and fine work style.

Zhao Zongnai reviewed the efforts by the organs in serving the central authorities, as well as the grass roots, in carrying out the reform and modernization drive in recent years.

Zhao Zongnan called on all levels of party organizations of organs under the CPC Central Committee and all party members to play an exemplary role in doing a good job in the work of all fields of the central authorities, and heighten the spirit to make their share of contribution to the reform and modernization drive.

Attending the meeting were leading comrades of organs under the CPC Central Committee and representatives of party branches and members, totalling some 1,200.

517 KILLED, 16,300 INJURED FROM MAY, JUNE STORMS

[By Liu Dizhong]

[Text] The State has allocated another 50 million yuan to help the victims of storms which lashed a dozen provinces during the past two months. The relief funds earmarked by the central government so far this year total nearly 600 million yuan, more than 60 percent of the planned 1986 figure.

Earlier in the year most areas of the country were suffering severe drought, with more than 16.6 million hectares of farmland affected. The rains in mid-May and June eased the problem in many provinces. But the strong winds, torrential rains and hailstorms wrought havoc in 13 provinces and autonomous regions -- Jiangxi, Hunan, Guangxi, Zhejiang, Sichuan, Yunnan, Guizhou, Hubei, Guangdong, Shandong, Shanxi, Anhui and Shaanxi.

The disasters claimed 517 lives, injured more than 16,300 people, destroyed 300,000 homes and damaged 1.5 million hectares of farmland, a senior official of the Ministry of Civic Affairs told CHINA DAILY yesterday.

Sichuan, Jiangxi, Hunan and Guangxi were among the worst hit. Between late April and late may, Sichuan was hit three times by tornados, rain and hailstorms which swept 61 counties and prefectures. In some places the wind reached force 12 and the rainfall in four hours totalled 143 millimetres.

The State has given 20 million yuan in relief to Sichuan alone in the past two months, the official said.

In addition to the relief funds offered by the State, provincial governments allocated large quantities of cement, timber, steel, fertilizer and other emergency materials as well as financial aid to help people rebuild their homes and start work again.

The official said the Army also played "an admirable role" in relief work. More than 4,000 soldiers rushed to Chongqing City in Sichuan Province when it was hit by tornados and hailstorms. They helped transport 3.2 million tons of relief food and emergency materials.

The disaster areas, he said, were now "in good social order" and reconstruction was "in full swing."

Despite the adverse weather, China's summer grain harvest is forcast to exceed last year's, the second highest since 1949.

LI PENG ADDRESSES TECHNOLOGY APPLICATION CONFERENCE

OW291406 Beijing XINHUA in English 1354 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 29 (XINHUA) -- China will use electronic technology to transform its traditional industries in the next few years, Vice-Premier Li Peng said here today.

The machine-building industry should take the lead in this effort so as to improve the quality of its products and reduce the consumption of energy and raw materials, he suggested. At the same time, Li said, the electronics industry should step up its development to meet the growing need of all economic sectors for electronic products and new technology.

The vice-premier made a policy speech on how to develop electronic technology, with emphasis on the use of computers, at a national computer application meeting which closed here this afternoon.

The country now has 7,000 mainframe computers and 130,000 microcomputers and more than 20,000 research and development projects have been computerized. Computer application has already made remarkable economic and social results in China, the vice-premier said. In order to spread computer science, he said, attention should be given to software development and personnel training.

Since China is the world's leader in designing Chinese-character software which is also the key to popularize computers in the country, Li said, scientists should try their best to perfect such systems and develop more high-efficiency Chinese-character software.

During the six-day meeting, several hundred scientists discussed concrete measures for the application of computers in the next five years.

Urges Advanced Technology

[By reporter Wu Jincai]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 29 Jun (XINHUA) -- The National Computer Application Conference closed in Beijing today. Addressing the conference, Li Peng, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, vice premier, and head of the State Council's Leading Group for Development of Electronics Industry, pointed out: China, in order to forge ahead toward advanced technology, should pay great attention to equipping its traditional industries with electronic technology.

Li Peng noted: When viewing the relationship between the traditional and newly emerging industries, we should pay attention to the following aspects: Fist, the traditional industries are still the essence of the national economy as well as the main force in creating material wealth; second, the traditional industries should transform themselves with new technologies represented by electronic technology in order to attain technological progress and to increase productivity; third, the application of electronic technology in transforming traditional industries will, at the same time, be able to open up a vast market for the development of new technologies; and fourth, China should develop its new technologies at a faster pace.

Li Peng pointed out: Among the traditional industries, the machinebuilding industry is an important department of the national economy. Therefore, it is essential to apply electronic technology first to this industry and especially to develop a new generation of integrated machinery and electrical products in order to push forward renewal of machinery products.

Li Peng said: The application of computers has initially started in China. In the course of serving the development of the national economy and that of the society, it has obtained some notable economic and social benefits for them, and therefore has received greater attention. He suggested: From now on we should accelerate the popularization and application of computers with focus on continuously raising economic results and social benefits. In doing this, we should move from single-unit application to developing systems and networks, from single-unit and single-item control to developing automatic control of the whole process of production, from single-item management to developing comprehensive management, and from typical application to developing the application in the whole trade.

Li Peng pointed out: Application of computers in China should fit the national conditions, produce good results, and develop from a low level to a high level. China has a weak foundation in this field. Besides it is short of funds. Therefore, the development and construction of information systems must be undertaken in stages and and in batches on the basis of priority, under guidance, and in a planned way. First of all, consideration should be given to the construction of information systems in departments and localities where the work load is greater, the economic results are more salient, and the demand is more urgent. In the application of joint computer networks, China should fully tap the potential of telecommunication networks through comprehensive utilization of the basis of posts and telecommunications networks. High standards should not be pursued blindly in the construction of specialized systems. Instead, these systems should be practical, money-saving, efficient, and effective.

Li Peng also said: China's vigorous popularization and application of electronic technology should be based on its domestic products. While developing electronics and information industries, we should also insist on carrying out reform of the management structure, increasing the decision-making power of enterprises, enhancing administration of the trade, and developing lateral economic association.

Presiding over today's meeting and delivering a summing-up speech was Song Jian, state councillor, minister of the State Scientific and Technological Commission, and deputy head of the State Council's Leading Group for Development of the Electronics Industry.

STATE COUNCIL ON COLLECTIVE PROPERTY TRANSFER

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jun (XINHUA) -- On 20 June, the State Council transmitted the "Report on Stopping Noncompensatory Transfer of Property of the Second Light Industry's Collective Enterprises and Establishments" prepared by the Ministry of Light Industry and the All-Chinese Federation of Handicraft Cooperatives. In a notice, the State Council also urged all regions and departments to follow the instructions set forth in the report.

The notice says: The CPC Central Committee and the Senate Council have time and again reiterated in recent years that the legitimate rights and interests of collective economic units must be protected and that no organization or individual is allowed to misappropriate or destroy collective property by any means.

However, certain local authorities and departments have disobeyed party and state policies and transferred without compensation property of the second light industry's enterprises, thus affecting the development of the collective economy. All regions and departments must seriously examine their problems regarding noncompensatory transfer of property belonging to the second light industry's enterprises and correct these problems with resolute measures.

According to the report prepared by the Ministry of Light Industry and the All-China Federation of Handicraft Cooperatives, certain local authorities and departments, taking advantage of their authority, have continued to transfer -- without compensation -- property, capital, and labor as well as other materials and equipment belonging to the second light industry's collective enterprises and establishments; they have misappropriated the collective funds of various cooperative federations and misused facilities of collective enterprises and establishments built with collective funds. According to incomplete statistics, over 314 million yuan of collective property belonging to the second light industry's collective enterprises and establishments in 11 provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central government -- namely, Guangxi, Liaoning, Anhui, Gansu, Shaanxi, Jiangsu, Jiangxi, Yunnan, Hunan, Shanxi, and Tianjin -- were transferred or misappropriated from 1981 through 1985, thus seriously affecting the development of the collective economy.

The report notes: China's collective economic units of the second light industry are set up primarily by collective enterprises organized by higher cooperative federations on the basis of cooperation and mutual support. Many enterprises, after developing with assistance from cooperative federations and other collective enterprises, have reciprocated by returning help to other collective enterprises. If the profit-making mainstay enterprises are transferred without compensation, thus taking away investments by cooperative federations, these enterprises' subordinate relations and financial ties would be altered even though they would still be collectively owned in name. This certainly will hurt the interests of other collective enterprises of cooperative federations and weaken the second industry's collective economy. For this reason, the report urges all regions and departments to do the following:

1. Seriously examine the second light industry's collective enterprises and establishments where noncompensatory transfers have taken place, as well as the collective property belonging to cooperative federations; then, verify the facts, return property, and redress any losses. All noncompensatory transfers that have taken place in various localities after the promulgation of the relevant documents by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council in 1981 must be resolutely returned and redressed.

2. In the course of economic reorganization, management specialization, and establishing joint operations, we should uphold the principles that ownership, subordinate relations, and financial ties of second light industry's collective enterprises will remain unchanged. If the transfer red collective enterprises cannot be returned because of special reasons, they should be changed into joint ventures so that collective interests will be safeguarded.

The report also put forward solutions to such problems as collecting funds and management fees from collective enterprises and the misuse of school buildings for training handicraft industry's management personnel as well as other institutes and schools of the second light industry.

JINGJI RIBAO ON USING FOREIGN FUNDS IN POWER INDUSTRY

[Report by Dong Yulin: "China Makes Gratifying Progress in Using Foreign Funds To Run the Power Industry"]

[Text] In the 6 months from August last year to March this year, the Huaneng International Power Development Corporation, a Chinese-foreign joint-venture enterprise using foreign funds to run power industries, formally signed successive agreements with American, Japanese, and French companies on supplying equipment with a total installation capacity of 2.9 million kilowatt-hours to five power plants in Shijiazhuang, Nantong, Dalian, Fuzhou, and Shantou. These high-speed negotiations created a precedent in China's efforts to import large power plant projects. Now the corporation has started importing the second batch of equipment projects with a total installation capacity of 3.3 million kilowatt-hours, most of which will be installed in the Shitongkuo Power Plant in Shanghai, the Dezhou power plant in Shandong, the Yueyang power plant in Hunan, and the Luohuang Power Station in Chongqing, Sichuan.

The Huaneng Corporation is a joint-venture enterprise operated by the Huaneng Fine Coal Company, the People's Construction Bank of China, the China Water Resources and Electric Power External Company, Hong Kong-China Construction Investment Ltd, and the Hong Kong China Resources (Holdings) Ltd. During China's Seventh 5-Year Plan period, it will undertake the task of using foreign funds to import and commission generating units with a total capacity of more than 5 million kilowatt-hours or about one sixth of China's planned total electric energy production in the same period.

To fulfill the task of using foreign funds to run power industries on schedule and to ensure quality and quantity, instead of sending delegations abroad for inspections before importing large projects as it did in the past, the Huaneng corporation has now adopted the method of temporarily transferring specialists in various fields from other parts of the country on a compensation basis, making full use of data accumulated domestically, and assimilating experience in importing equipment of the same type. This has cut down the time used on holding business talks and signing agreements with foreign countries by 1 year when compared with past practices.

Formerly, when holding talks on importing large projects, the corporation would ask several departments to separately complete the aspects concerning technology, prices, and loans; now it has closely coordinated technical and business talks, making an overall appraisal of technical functions, prices, loan terms, goods delivery, 2 way trade, and service conditions. While using foreign funds to import power generating equipment from abroad, the corporation stressed expanding the export of China's commodities through 2-way trade and by supporting exports with imports.

PROGRESS MADE IN REORGANIZING PLA ACADEMIES

[By reporter Xu Jingyue and correspondent Han Zhijun]

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jun (XINHUA) -- The reduction-in-strength reorganization of PLA academies and schools is progressing smoothly. It is reported that the Central Military Commission and the PLA Headquarters will use a certain amount of manpower, funds, and material resources to build up some academies and schools for training key personnel.

According to a plan previously laid out, reorganization of military academies and schools is an important part of the reduction-in-strength reorganization to be carried out by the PLA this year. The system of military academies and schools has now been readjusted on the basis of a decision made by the Central Military Commission. This includes closing and merging some of the military academies and schools and making their personnel smaller in number but better in quality. Now the number of the academies and schools in the whole Army has been reduced by 12 percent, and their personnel cut by more than 20 percent. The PLA's educational system is now more suited to training qualified PLA personnel for the period of peaceful construction.

After reduction-in-strength reorganization, commander-training academies and schools of the Armed Forces have been included in a 3-level training system devised for training commanding officers at the primary, middle, and high level. Under this system, primary commander-training academies and schools training primary-level commanders for various PLA branches and services equivalent to the three tiers of education of secondary specialized schools, specialized colleges, and regular universities. The main task of middle commander-training academies and schools is to train commanders for combined arms units. The highest educational institution in the whole Army is National Defense University.

After readjustment, there are several dozen specialized technical academies and schools in the Army. Some of them are new-type academies and schools that were newly founded or rebuilt. The specialized technical academies and schools have a 2-level training system for bringing up technical officers at the middle and high levels. There are five tiers of training: Secondary specialized training, training equivalent to specialized colleges, training equivalent to regular universities, training for graduate students for master's degree, and training for graduate students for doctorate. Each year the academies and schools will train these five kinds of technical officers according to a definite ratio.

WANG HAI ON STRUCTURAL REFORM OF AIR FORCE

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- China's Air Force Commander Wang Hai said here today that, in line with the instructions of the CPC Central Committee and the Central Military Commission, the Air Force is smoothly carrying out structural reform, streamlining, and reorganization and is making great efforts to become a revolutionary, modern, and regularized Air Force.

At a forum marking the 40th anniversary of the insurrection of the Liu Shanben flight crew, Wang Hai said: The Air Force has elimianted a number of obsolete aircraft and replaced them with new ones. At the same time, it has stepped up the development of modern technology and equipment. In an effort to improve the quality of pilots, the Air Force has conducted three reforms, instituting a pilot grade system, restoring the practice of issuing flight allowances, and determining the maximum age for pilots. To speed up the renewal of knowledge, particularly the mastery of modern knowledge by pilots, it has stepped up the scientific and cultural education of pilots by numerous means. In order to enhance the combat effectiveness of Army units, particulrly their capability for combined warfare, the Air Force has intensively and rigidly stepped up the combined training of various aircraft types, as well as combined training with ground combat troops. The ground combat command system is also intensively strengthening itself. He said: Through structural reform, streamlining, and reorganization and with the improvement of technology and equipment, the enhancement of the pilots' military capability and political consciousness, and the intensive building of the ground command safeguard system, the combat effectiveness of China's Air Force has been enhanced considerably.

DEFENSE INDUSTRY TO HOLD INTERNATIONAL FAIR

[Text] Beijing, June 28 (XINHUA) -- China's Ordnance Industry Ministry will hold its first international fair to exchange technology and products for civilian use from July 1 to 10 in Beijing, it was announced today.

The ministry began making non-military products in the early 1980s. Its output value of products for civilian use has quadrupled over the past five years. An official of the ministry told a press conference here that the fair was aimed at introducing more advanced world technology to upgrade its civilian role.

The ministry was negotiating with companies from the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the United States on the import of technology and production lines involved in machine-building, photoelectricity and chemicals. It was also considering raising funds itself to import technology for producing eight-ton to 20-ton heavy trucks from the Daimler-Benz Company of Federal Germany, and to import all the techniques needed to produce luxury coaches from another German company.

In addition, it would import production lines and techniques for manufacturing plastics, paints and other chemical products, the official said. While serving other sectors of the domestic economy, the ministry was also striving to enhance the competitiveness of its export goods in civilian use. Its target between 1986 and 1990 was to earn a total of 400 million U.S. dollars from exports -- about 300 million dollars more than in the previous five years.

PLA AUTOMATES ARTILLERY COMMAND SYSTEM

[Text] Shenyang, June 29 (XINHUA) -- The People's Liberation Army has automated its artillery firing system, military officials said today. Under the new system, the total time required for the firing process, ranging from the order at headquarters to the firing of artillery in the field, has been cut from minutes to seconds, according to officers from the general staff headquarters here. Over the past few years, they said, the Army has developed command systems using electronic and laser technology.

ENTERPRISES URGED TO EXERCISE DEMOCRATIC MANAGEMENT

[Editorial: "Democratic Management Is the Fundamental Guarantee for Developing Collective Enterprises"]

[Text] The National Congress of Light Industrial Collective Enterprise Employees (commune members) opened solemnly in Beijing. The convocation of the congress is a joyous occasion for the 7.45 million employees of the light industrial collective enterprises. It fully embodies the principle that employees of China's collective enterprises are masters of their own affairs. We warmly congratulate the triumphant opening of the congress and wish it complete success!

The collective sector of light industry occupies an extremely important position in national economic and social development. It shoulders the heavy responsibility of providing people with daily necessities and small merchandise and making the market brisk. It undertakes the important mission of expanding exports and increasing foreign exchange for the state. In improving the people's living standard, accumulating funds for state construction, promoting social stability and unity, and developing socialist spiritual civilization, this is a vital force not to be ignored.

Collective owned enterprises are the independent economic organizations in which laborers jointly own the means of production, work together, and receive remuneration according to work. Employees of collective enterprises are owners of the means of production as well as laborers who directly take part in production activities. This characteristics determines that enterprises should adhere to democratic management and carry forward the spirit of being masters of their own affairs. China's Constitution has explicitly stipulated: "Collective economic organizations practice democratic management in accordance with the law, with all their workers electing or removing their managerial personnel and deciding on major issues concerning operation and management." Thus it can be seen that democratic management is the essential characteristic of collective enterprise management.

Light industrial collective enterprises have developed on the basis of handicraft cooperatives. During the 1950's, a set of democratic management forms suited to the characteristics of the collective economy and the conditions at that time took shape. Due to the influence of the "leftist" deviation, the management patterns of state enterprises of the fine tradition and characteristics of democratic management. To date, the question of democratic management of collective enterprises is not yet thoroughly solved. Factory directors of a number of collective enterprises are still appointed by higher level authorities or democratic elections are carried out perfunctorily. Workers' congresses are not resumed or they are resumed in name but not in reality. Laborers cannot take part in enterprise management or they have become masters in name but actually cannot handle the their own affairs. As a result, it becomes difficult to invigorate enterprises and to enhance the employees' sense of being masters of their enterprises. In order to further develop the light industrial collective enterprises, it is extremely important to lay emphasis on democratic management.

In order to strengthen democratic management and ensure the democratic rights of the employees, it is necessary to first perfect the system of the congress of collective enterprise employees, regularly hold meetings, seriously discuss important matters related to the survival and development of enterprises and interests of the masses, make relevant decisions, and put them into effect. The workers' congress is a body with authority in collective enterprises rather than a consultancy or supervisory mass organization. It has the right to decide on major issues of an enterprise. Meanwhile, collective enterprises should also implement the system of the factory dirctor assuming sole responsibility. This is the objective demand of the development of commodity economy and modernized production. After a factory director is elected democratically by the workers's congress, he is vested with the authority to direct various production and operation activities. Nevertheless, it is necessary to combine democratic management with the system of the factory director assuming sole responsibility. Factory directors must be giben a free hand to handle routine duties. The work of factory directors must be supported rather than intervened in. However, a factory director should regularly give an account of his work to the workers' congress, develop democracy extensively, and solicit emplyees' opinions. A factory director cannot act arbitarily. The workers' congress has the right to recall a factory director who is unqualified or remove him from office.

In order to prevent the practices of disrespecting the democratic rights of employees and neglecting the position of employees of collective enterprises being masters of their own affairs and in order to perfect the system of workers' congress at collective enterprises, a democratic management committee can be established through democratic election when the workers' congress is about to close. In the democratic management of collective enterprises, trade unions should also play their proper role.

It is the objective inevitability of the political and economic systems of China's socialism to implement the principle of democratic management in collective enterprises. This is all the more urgent at the moment. In the change from the old to a new system, however, there are many new problems which must be properly explored. With the spirit of being masters of their enterprises of collective enterprises should take an active part in enterprise management work and contribute their wisdom and intelligence to the development of socialist collective enterprises. Undoubtedly, this is the fundamental guarantee and motive force for the development of collective enterprises.

BO YIBO PREFACES BOOK ON GOOD PARTY MEMBERS

[Text] Beijing, 27 Jun (XINHUA) -- A book entitled "Party Spirit, Ideals, and Righteousness" will be off the press around 1 July, the CPC founding anniversary.

Compiled, edited, and published by the Shanghai People's Publishing House, the book is a collection of stories on the advanced deeds of 16 outstanding communists, including Ma Shengli [7456 0524 0448], Qu Xiao [2575 0876], Hua Yi [5478 1837], Dai Hongxiang [2071 3163 4382], Lu Guanqiu [7627 0385 3808], Fang Qi [2455 0967], Qian Fusheng [6929 1381 3932], Shi Guangzhu [0670 0342 26910, Xin Fuqiang [6580 4395 1730], Zheng Changlu [6774 7022 4389], and Yang Huaiyuan [2254 2037 6678]. The stories run a total length of 110,000 characters.

Comrade Bo Yibo has written a preface to the book under the subject "The Party Spirit, Ideals, and Righteousness of a Communist." The preface says; How should a communist act in response to the party's instruction to be at the front of the great struggle to realize the general task of the party for the new period? And in the great practice of reforms, what should a communist do to really bring his role of a vanguard and model into play? This is a new question calling for serious thinking and handling and a serious answer by every party member. In recent years, many outstanding party members have emerged in every field who are fighting heroically and performing meritorious deeds for the reforms and the drive for the four modernizations. They are the ones who have correctly answered this question with their actual deeds. The publication of the book "Party Spirit, Ideals, and Righteousness" will give an impetus to the whole party in carrying out its on-going education on party spirit, ideals, and discipline and its work of rectifying party style as well as party building in the new period.

YOUTH FEDERATION CONGRESS OPENS, BO YIBO SPEAKS

[Text] Beijing, June 30 (XINHUA) -- The All-China Youth Federation opened the second session of its sixth congress here today calling on young people in all social fields and of all nationalities to contribute to the economic prosperity and reunification of the country.

Liu Yandong, newly elected president of the federation, recalled in her report the work of the organization since the first session three years ago. She said the present 661 members represented the 320 million youth in China. She said the reunification of the country is the hope of all the Chinese people and demands special efforts from the younger generation. She continued that, today a great number of promising and capable young people are distinguishing themselves in various social fields on the mainland, in Hong Kong and Macao, Taiwan and overseas, and the youth federation will pay more attention to contacts between them.

The All-China Youth Federation has established friendly relations with 400 youth organizations in more than 140 countries and regions, leading to increasing international exchanges and cooperation in the fields of economy, technology, culture, and so on.

Bo Yibo, vice-chairman of the Central Advisory Commission of the Communist Party of China, said at the session that the economic reform is China's supreme task at present and for the near future. He hoped that young people would actively participate in the revolution, giving advise and making contributions in their own spheres of activity. He especially hoped that the federation members would take the lead in promoting China's prosperity and reunification.

The session will last six days.

NIE RONGZHEN ON POLITICAL WORK IN 'NEW PERIOD'

HK270033 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 25 Jun 86 p 4

[Article by Nie Rongzhen in June 1986: "Creatively Do a Good Job in Political Work During the New Period -- Preface to 'Handbook on Ideological and Political Work at the Grass-roots Level During the New Period'"]

[Text] Ideological and political work has played an important and far-reaching role in the fighting history of our party and our army. Let us recall the days of the 10-year agrarian revolutionary war, the 8-year anti-Japanese war, and the 3-year liberation war when comrades of the whole party and the broad masses shared weal and woe, went through fire and water, braved untold dangers, and shed blood for the revolution. No matter how tough the conditions were, they made concerted efforts and fought for the liberation of the motherland and people. Shame to those seeking private interests and honor to those dedicating themselves became a prevailing custom at that time. All this was closely related to ideological and political work.

In the present new historical period of building socialist modernization when we are carrying out the policy of "opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy," people have various ideas. While attaching importance to building material civilization, we must also stress building spiritual civilization and cultivate a generation of new people and observe discipline. The whole party is now effectively straightening out party style and improving the general social mood. All this requires that we, by proceeding from reality, carrying forward the party's fine tradition in political work and strengthen and improve ideological and political work in a practical way. It is a misunderstanding to think that political work is no longer important during the new historical period.

We are historical materialists, and cannot deviate from certain historical conditions in exploring and solving any problems. The basic principles and contents of today's political work have not changed on the whole, but the time, conditions, situation, and targets are different. This requires that we emanicipate our minds; sum experiences; combine in a scientific way carrying forward fine traditions, reforming, and blazing new trails; go deep into the grass roots and masses; make strenuous efforts to study new situations, problems, and things; eliminate "leftist" influence; and creatively do a good job in political work. Thus, our ideological and political work can better meet the new situation of reform and opening up to the outside world can be upgraded to a level suited to the four modernization undertaking during the new period.

To build dynamic socialism full of vitality and with Chinese characteristics, we must carry out reforms on all fronts. The party's ideological and political work must ensure reforms and carry out reform. Without carrying carrying out reform, the ideological and political work will have no appeal to the masses and cannot be carried out in a down to earth manner among them.

Our experience over the past years have proved that the masses always judge a person by his words and deeds. Political workers must refrain from saying one thing but doing another. It is very important for political work cadres and all leading cadres, high-ranking cadres in particular, to set a good example, as the masses are watching them. If they fail to set a good example, nobody would be interested in ideological and political work. This is a focal point which we must particularly stress in the current ideological and political work.

The grass roots are the ground for all work and the foundation for ideological and political work. They are also a vast world for us to carry out reforms and blaze new trails in ideological and political work. The Changzhen publishing house has published this "Handbook on Ideological and Political Work at the Grass-roots Level During the New Period." We hope that the book will play its due role in propagating and implementing the party's policies and principles, in enhancing the building of socialist spiritual civilization, and in strengthening and improving ideological and political work.

S&T ASSOCIATION CHAIRMAN PRAISES ACADEMIC DEMOCRACY

[Report by Dai Yaping and Lin Hua: "New Mission for the 'Father of Rockets' -- An Interview With Qian Xuesen, Newly Elected Chairman of the China Association for Science and Technology"]

[Text] Beijing, 27 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- At the Third Congress of the China Association for Science and Technology, Qian Xuesen, China's "father of rockets" and a noted expert in systems engineering, was elected chairman of the association.

While he was chief professor of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory of the California Institute of Technology in the United States early in the 1950's, Qian Xuesen advanced the famous theory of cybernetic engineering. His treatise on cybernetic engineering, which was regarded as a "book from heaven" at that time, became the theoretical basis for modern scientific research, modern scientific and technological management, and economic management 30 years later.

After assuming the post of chairman of the China Association for Science and Technology, Qian Xuesen told these reporters: "I am a new recruit in this post. From now on, I will study and ask for advice modestly, do my utmost to work hard, and be worthy of the trust of the scientific and technological workers of the whole nation."

Qian brought up a recollection: During the reign of Chun Xi of the Southern Song Dynasty, there was an academic organization called the Ehu Society at the Xinzhou Ehu Temple in Jiangxi. The society practiced academic democracy and its members were allowed to air their views. Students could raise objections to teachers' views. Qian said that the society had a fine tradition, that is, views of all kinds could be expressed at the meetings, but spreading of hearsay outside was prohibited. If anyone spread hearsay, he would be dismissed from the society.

Qian Xuesen used this story to express his view on academic democracy. China's history of feudalism lasted for more than 2000 years, he said, so it is no easy job to practice academic democracy. Only by developing academic democracy should also be extended to the world, because international academic exchanges are not unidirectional. China's scientists should assimilate the advanced knowledge of other countries and also introduce China's research achievements to the world so as to benefit mankind.

During his stay in the United States beginning in the 1940's, Qian Xuesen contributed to aerodynamics and rocket propulsion. He returned to China from the United States in 1955 and made outstanding contributions to the development of China's astronautics industry. His field of research was wide and extensive, and included space technology, economic policy decisions, theories on traditional Chinese medicine, and breathing exercises. During the 1970's, he collaborated on a book entitled "Cybernetic Engineering" with Song Jian, an outstanding expert in systems engineering. A year ago, Song Jian took up a leading post in scientific circles and assumed office as minister of the State Scientific and Technological Commission.

"In my capacity as a scientist, I am willing to devote my remaining years to scientific research," said Qian Xuesen.

However, things went contrary to his wishes. Qian Xuesen was elected vice chairman of the CPPCC more than 2 months ago and is now entrusted with a heavy responsibility.

Administrative organization work would occupy most of his time. For this reason, Qian said with a smile: "I can only request the press circles to make an appeal for me."

It has been reported that the China Association for Science and Technology has already made arrangements to reduce Qian's administrative duties to the minimum so that he can devote part of his time to scientific research.

Like many other modern Chinese scientific explorers, Qian Xuesen returned to contribute to the motherland after the founding of new China. As a Chinese national residing overseas for a long time, Qian said, I understand the feelings of Overseas Chinese, and Hong Kong and Macao compatriots toward the motherland. Many of them told me that they are willing to serve the construction of the motherland. I want to inform them that so long as I am working at this post, I will do my best to make their wishes come true.

DIVERSITY OF MODERN SOCIALIST MOVEMENT ANALYZED

[Article by Li Zhongjie: "Why Does the Modern Socialist Movement Show Diversity?"]

[Text] One of the distinctive characteristics of the modern socialist movement is its diversity. This diversity is manifested in diversity in school and organization, guiding ideology or theory, modes of action or social pattern, in class content, and in effect. The diversity of the modern socialist movement stems from various sophisticated social and historical factors.

First, since economic development varies from country to country, social demands and policy objectives as well as class composition and the balance of class forces are also different. This forms different cultural levels and social psychological factors and determines that the socialist movement in a specific country has its own content and form. For example, in developed countries, unemployment, inflation, and production stagnation are main economic problems which the socialist movement there has to consider. The social democratic party and the communist party have different views on how to solve the problems. The former advocates policy readjustments under the framework of the capitalist system while the latter maintains that it is necessary to fundamentally change the capitalist system. In socialist countries, the most important problem is how to meet the material and cultural needs of society members by developing the national economy expeditiously and proportionally. To achieve this objective, it is necessary to make the economic management system more consistent with economic development. Hence, what economic management system to establish has become a crucial question. The difference in socialist patterns in these countries lies mainly in this question.

Second, the development of international relations is the main reason behind the diversity of the modern socialist movement. Although international relations constitute an external cause for change and development in a country, they play an important role in forming the characteristics of the socialist movement in a certain country, a role not to be ignored. Since World War II, major changes have taken place in the world situation in which socialism has developed from winning victory in one country to doing so in many countries. After 1956, the CPC and the communist parties in some other countries consistently maintained independence and kept the initiative in their own hands, opposed hegemonism, and built socialism in light of the actual conditions of their own countries. A prospect of diversity in the international communist movement was thus opened up. In the 1960's and 70's, the communist parties in some West European countries formed and developed European communism.

Before World War II, most countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin American were colonies and semi-colonies of the imperialists. After the war, this situation was ended. The Asian, African, and Latin American countries which won independence in succession were faced with a task of establishing a certain kind of social system. Because these countries were greatly explotied and plundered by the Western colonialists, their peoples utterly detested capitalism. At the same time, with socialism exerting a drastically increasing influence in the world, the people in power in these countries who, more often than not, had access to some socialist or Marxist ideas also attempted to practice socialism.

However, because their main objectives were to develop their own national economies, in practice, they only adopted some measures which they considered "socialist," such as the nationalization of land.

They did not practice the principles of scientific socialism in an overall manner. Therefore the socialism they practiced was not Marxist scientific socialism but non-Marxist socialism, such as the Islamic socialism, self-government socialism, and cooperation socialism that combines some measures, such as land nationalization with the traditional ideologies and cultures as well as the specific social and historical conditions of their own countries.

Third, national traditions vary from country to country. For example, in European and American countries, the bourgeois multiparty parliamentary democratic system has a very long history. It has long become the main form with which various political forces in society including the working class carry out political struggle and a relatively relaxed traditional form for solving class conflicts. Therefore, in these countries, striving for more democratic rights for working people through the parliamentary road is one important characteristic of the real socialist movement in such countries.

Fourth, diversity is the objective law governing the development of the socialist movement. As far as the countries, regions, and nations which seek emancipation of the proletariat and establishment of a socialist society based on the theory of scientific socialism are concerned, since their economics, policies, and cultures differ in thousands of ways, therefore, they should proceed from actual conditions, integrate the universal truth of Marxism with their actual conditions, and independently define the orientation, roads, objectives, principles, policies, and tactics of their socialist movements. In applying the principles of scientific socialism, top priority should be given to existing historical conditions of specific countries and their systems, customs, and traditions should be taken into account, as Marx and Engels stressed.

Moreover, the socialist movement is a developing movement. It will develop from immaturity to comparative maturity and undergo quite a long process of practice and development. This being the case, people are bound to explore, study, experiment, seek different roads, and to envisage different patterns in many ways, and they are bound to distinguish them by comparison. This will help people use their ability and compete with each other on the one hand and help them make up each other's deficiencies and to complement one another. The development processes of various countries cannot be synchronous. Since the foundations and starting points of the socialist movements in various countries are different, it we study the cross section of their socialist movements at a certain point, we will have a fairly clear picture of their diversity.
By saying that the modern socialist movement has a diverse character and by including all so-called schools of socialism in our study, we do not mean that all schools of socialism are scientific and genuinely socialist. In fact, they can be classified as proletarian socialism, bourgeois socialism or petty-bourgeois socialism, and feudal socialism. In the face of all brands of socialism, while admitting their diverse character, we must also adhere to the principles of scientific socialism.

CRACKDOWN ON COUNTERFEIT TRADEMARKS ORDERED

[Report: "Over 17,000 Cases in Violation of the Trademark Law Have Been Investigated and Handled in China"]

[Text] Beijing, 30 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- According to a report in ZHONGGUO XIAOFEIZHE BAO [CHINA CONSUMER GAZETTE] today, last year industrial and commercial administrative and management organs throughout the country discovered and handled over 17,000 cases in violation of the trademark law, stopped 120 million illegal trademarks, ordered the perpetrators to pay 150,000 yuan in compensation for the losses incurred to those whose trademarks had been illegally used, and imposed fines totaling some 7 million yuan.

To strengthen trademark management, last year the State Administration for Industry and Commerce formulated and promulgated a "circular on resolutely stopping enterprises from selling damaged and substandard parts and components as well as invalidated trademarks" and "provisional methods of management over the printing of trademarks." Industrial and commercial administrative organs in various localities also worked out relevant rules and regulations in light of their specific conditions.

Gan Guoping, deputy director of the State Administration for Industry and Commerce, told some reporters several days ago that counterfeit trademarks undermined socialist economic order and that industrial and commercial administrative personnel should execute the law, remove all obstacles, strengthen trademark management, crack down on counterfeit trademarks, and stop the practice of infringing on others' rights.

AWARDS MEETING FOR PLAYWRITING HELD IN CHANGCHUN

[Excerpts] This morning, the cinema hall of Nanhu Guesthouse in Changchun was permeated with joy. The third national awards ceremony for outstanding playwriting and creations sponsored by the Chinese Dramatists' Association was held here.

More than 200 persons attended the awards meeting, including Gao Di, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, Gao Dezhan, governor, Wang Zhongyu, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, Zhao Xiu, chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, Dong Su, vice chairman of the provincial People's Congress and chairman of the provincial Federation of Literary and Art Circles, Fan Yeben, secretary of the Changchun City CPC Committee, Li Huizhen, vice mayaor of Changchun City, responsible comrades of the provincial and Changchun City departments concerned, as well as personages from the provincial literary, art and drama circles. The meeting was presided over by Zhang Ying, permanent secretary of the Chinese Dramatists' Association Secretariat.

Gao Di, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, gave a speech at the meeting: [Begin recording] The third national meeting to award writers of outstanding plays and creations and to exchange experiences in creations sponsored by the Chinese Dramatists' Association was ceremoniously held in Changchun City, Jilin Province today. We are very happy for this occasion. [end recording]

On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and government, he first welcomed the comrades to the meeting and extended congratulations to the award winners. He said: [Begin recording] Literature and art must closely keep pace with the times and reflect the practical situations of reform and the four modernizations as well as the great national spirit. Only thusly can we satisfy the multi-sided need of the people's cultural life, enhance their spiritual state, and help them foster lofty moral sentiments and healthy aesthetic ideas, thereby providing helping forces for reform, and helping the people correctly understand [words indistinct] and reform, support and participate in reform, and dedicate themselves to the great cause of vitalizing China. Our provincial CPC Committee and government have decided to create a democratic, harmonious, and comfortable environment for the broad masses of literary and art workers, and strive by all possible means to provide convenient working and living conditions for them in an effort to help them create more outstanding works. We wish the drama undertakings to prosper and flourish and this meeting to be successful. [end recording]

(Gao Zhanxiang) vice minister of culture, also spoke at the meeting.

FOREIGN FIRMS BID FOR TIANJIN PORT EXPANSION

OW281448 Beijing XINHUA in English 1439 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Tianjin, Jun 28 (XINHUA) -- A total of 31 firms from eight countries and Hong Kong were chosen as tenderers for an expansion scheme of the Tianjin port at a pre-bidding meeting here today.

A port official said that the scheme is aimed at consolidating the foundation of a 600,000-square-meter dam on which berths will be built.

It is one of China's 190 key projects being built this year.

With a loan of 130 million U.S. dollars from the World Bank, the Tianjin Port Construction Development Company decided to open an international bidding for the project.

The tenderers were from Britain, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Singapore, Switzerland as well as Hong Kong.

According to the official, August 1 will be the deadline of the bidding.

The meeting was sponsored by the China National Technical Import Corporation and Tianjin Port Construction Development Company.

JIANGXI GOVERNOR STRESSES ECONOMIC REFORM

OW300528 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Text] A provincial meeting of commissioners and mayors concluded in Nanchang on 25 June. In his speech at the meeting, Governor Ni Xiance stressed: In our economic work in the second half of the year, it is necessary to strive for an appropriate growth rate and to achieve all the economic and social development targets with the stress on better economic results. Ni Xiance called on all localities to give priority to achieving better economic results with the stress on improving produce quality, lowering material consumption, and selling products quickly to accelerate turnover of funds.

Ni Xiance said: We should further readjust the production structure, vigorously increase the production of marketable goods; correctly guide consumption; correct the relationship between commodity production and circulation; unclog commodity circulation channels between urban and rural areas; and appropriately increase circulation funds. All localities should invigorate enterprises as part of the reform; resolutely practice the responsibility system for factory directors; correct the relationship among party, administration, and workers; and step up ideological and political work. It is necessary to continuously implement measures to streamline the administrative structure and delegate powers to lower levels; to practice the economic responsibility system; to stop unreasonable quotes and fees; to differentiate normal business activities and unhealthy trends; and to properly handle problems occurring in the course of reform. Government organizations at various levels should conscientiously provide services to enterprises. The reform in financial, banking, and tax departments should be carried out in connection with enterprise reform. All localities should strive to fulfill their production plans and make up deficits and increase surpluses. They should make conscientious efforts to collect revenues; strengthen budgetary management; economize on funds for investment and administrative expenditures; strictly enforce financial and economic regulations; and ensure a balance between revenue and expenditure.

Ni Xiance pointed out: Our province has very favorable conditions for agriculture, and we should vigorously develop agriculture as the economic foundation. We should continue to rationally readjust the agricultural production structure, do a good job in the field management of early rice, and ensure a steady increase in grain production. We should implement preferential policies in order to promote the development of village and town enterprises.

Ni Xiance said: In the second half of the year, our province should continue to make vigorous efforts to carry out reforms and implement the policy of opening to the outside world. Leaders at various levels should take the lead in carrying out reforms; they should support, show concern for, and protect activists who promote reform in order to bring about an atmosphere of everyone discussing and carrying out reforms throughout the province. Vigorous efforts should be made to develop lateral economic ties so as to promote reform and achieve better economic results.

Ni Xiance called on leaders in various parts of the province to emancipate their minds; relax policy restrictions; take the opportunity to do a good job in economic and technological cooperation with foreign countries: and quickly exploit natural resources in order to develop the province's economy more effectively.

SHANDONG ISSUES CIRCULAR ON SUMMER GRAIN PURCHASES

SK270915 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] The provincial government recently issued a circular to various localities to counter the problems in this year's purchases of summer grain.

The circular points out: The purchase of summer grain is in full swing throughout the province. Generally speaking, the situation is good. However, some localities are withholding the money that should have been paid to peasants for their sales of grain without authorization, or pay little attention to the fulfillment of the purchases commissioned by the state.

To counter such a situation, the circular urges:

1. Unauthorized withholding of grain purchasing payment, which is an erroneous act, should be resolutely banned, and anyone who sells grain should receive payment. Forcible withholding of any funds, except for agricultural taxes and the advanced grain purchasing payment, is forbidden. This should be taken as a discipline, which leading persons at all levels and the masses of cadres should take seriously and abide by resolutely. Any acts in violation of this should be corrected immediately.

2. While ensuring the fulfillment of summer grain contracted purchasing tasks, we should exert active efforts to carry out the purchases commissioned by the state. Prices for the commissioned purchase may be set by counties in a unified manner. Areas where the market grain price is higher than or equivalent to the original increased price of above-quota grain may set the prices for the commissioned purchase according to the original increased price and the quality of the grain. Areas where the market grain price is lower than the original increased price of above-quota grain may set the prices which should be higher than the proportional price but lower than the original increased price, according to the quality of the grain. Areas neighboring other provinces should pay attention to setting the purchasing prices successfully to avoid outflow of grain.

3. Reward sales of materials should be carried out conscientiously. Fertilizer and oil are urgently needed for agricultural production at present. All localities should sell on a priority basis diesel oil and fertilizer which should be sold as a reward in summer grain purchases. Supply and marketing, commercial, and farm machinery departments should organize the allocation and distribution well, and deliver such diesel oil and fertilizer to grass-roots supply stations at an earliest possible date.

The circular also stated that business operations should be geared to the needs of the summer grain purchases, and that all the work affecting the summer grain purchases should be suspended for the time being in order to ensure the smooth fulfillment of the purchasing tasks.

SHANDONG PEOPLE'S CONGRESS HOLDS MEETING 26 JUNE

[Text] The 20th Standing Committee meeting of the 6th provincial People's Congress opened in Jinan on 26 June. At a plenary session held that morning, (Cao Xianqin), deputy director of the provincial Agriculture Department, gave a report on the province's current agricultural production on behalf of the provincial government.

He said: The province has reaped a good harvest of summer grain despite the serious drought. The total output is expected to be basically the same with that of 1985 when a bumper harvest was reaped. The production in the western part of the province and in the plains with favorable irrigation conditions showed a substantial increase, and in the eastern part and mountainous and hilly areas, production decline by a fairly great margin. Half of the 14 prefectures and cities of the province are expecting an increase in production, while the other half are expecting a decline. Crops sown in springare growing fairly well, fruit production continues to develop, the production of animal husbandry, plant-eating livestock, and poultry continues to expand, and the production of hogs and chicken remains stable. Judging from the present situation, the agriculture of our province will maintain a sustained, stable, and coordinated development under normal weather conditions. However, some problems still exist. Major ones are: Sufficient publicity was not given to the need for strengthening agriculture, which is the foundation; sufficient attention was not paid to the needs for increasing input and changing production conditions, and this led to an imbalance in work; means of production; and the circulation of farm products and various service work failed to suit the needs on the development of the rural commodity economy. These problems should be conscientiously redressed when doing our work in the latter half of this year.

Entrusted by Governor Li Changan, Vice Governor Ma Zhongchen delivered a report on the provincial government delegation's recent visit to the United States.

Li Zhen, chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, presided over that morning's plenary session. Attending were Vice Chairman Xu Leijian, Gao Fengwu, Zhang Zhusheng, Xu Jianchun, Lin Ping, Feng Lizu, Lu Hong, Xu Shen, and Yan Gingqing. Attending as nonvoting delegates were responsible persons of relevant departments of the provincial government, the provincial Higher People's Court, the provincial People's Procuratorate, the People's Congress standing committees of the cities under the jurisdiction of the province, the People's Congress work liaison offices of prefectures, and some county People's Congress standing committees.

SHANGHAI DEPARTMENTS JOINTLY FIGHT ECONOMIC CRIME

[Text] According to WEN HUI BAO, the Shanghai procuratorial department and other departments concerned fighting economic crimes have developed lateral ties to jointly handle cases. From January to June they investigated and handled over 2,000 cases of various economic crimes, involving 55.78 million yuan and including over 300 major and important cases. Among the cases of economic crime handled this year, the number of cases of offering and accepting bribes greatly increased, making up 41 percent of the total number of cases. Major and important cases being handled at present involve 10 cadres at and above the departmental level. The handling of these cases is the responsibility of party and government leaders at higher levels.

In jointly handling cases, the Shanghai departments concerned conducted thorough investigations in accordance with the characteristics of the various trades. As a result, they discovered a number of important cases of economic crime. The municipal industrial department party committee tracked down personnel who demanded and took bribes by abusing their power in managing goods and materials in very short supply, products in great demand on the market, and rare, precious, and important raw materials.

From January to May this department investigated and handled 252 cases of this category, making up nearly 50 percent of the total number of cases handled by the department.

The party committee of Shanghai's rural area uncovered nearly 700 cases of economic fraud by considering the characteristics of rural enterprises eager to make profits and prone to be hoodwinked. At present 135 fraud cases are being handled, and 45 cases have been completed with 3.64 million yuan in illicit money recovered.

ZHEJIANG'S WANG FANG URGES BETTER REFORM WORK

OW291138 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] According to a report by our correspondent Dong Fushun and reporter Chai Jianyue, Wang Fang, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, said this morning to a meeting of graduates from the committee's Party School and the special cadre education departments run by higher-educational institutions in Hangzhou: Now our reform work is developing satisfactorily. I hope that after you have returned to you original units, you will carry forward your exploratory and enterprising spirit, stand firmly in the van of reform, and make fresh contributions to the prosperity of our country and the well-being of our people.

Comrade Wang Fang pointed out: Reform means an intensive change in our society and is an arduous exploratory task that no one has previously undertaken. Since there is no mature experience to follow, some mistakes are inevitable. We should use the Marxist stand, viewpoint, and method to deal with the new circumstances and questions that have arisen in the course of reform. Only thus can we stand in van of the current of reform and propel the progress of history.

To carry out this great task, Comrade Wang Fang asked the vast number of young and middle-aged cadres to handle three relationships properly: First, they should properly handle the relationship between personal interests and the interests of the party and people. Second, they should properly handle the relationship between knowledge from book and practical experience. With regard to many questions now encountered in the reform, no ready solution can be found in a book. It is therefore necessary to take the initiative to plunge into the great practice of reform and construction in order to resolve the new questions arising from practice. Third, they should properly handle the relationship between implementing instructions from the higher level and working in a creative way. Working in a creative way means implementing the instructions from the central authorities and those at the higher level creatively. If the policies and instructions passed down from the central authorities and from those at the higher level were only mechanically carried out, it would be impossible to do successful work.

The Organization Department and the Party School of the provincial CPC Committee co-sponsored the meeting and it was presided over by (Shen Huifang), member of the Standing Committee and director of the Organization Department of the provincial CPC Committee. Attending the meeting were leading comrades, including Liu Yiru, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial Advisory Commission and president of the Party School of the provincial CPC Committee; and some 900 graduates of the Party School and from the special cadre education departments of Zhejiang University, Hangzhou University, and Zhejiang Agriculture College.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Hu Jintao congratulated the commended units and individuals.

SICHUAN CORRECTS ANOMALIES, ENCOURAGES RURAL ENTERPRENEURS

HK230323 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Text] Basing its work on current rural realities, the Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee has correctly handled a number of leftover problems in straightening out unhealthy trends and inspecting taxes, and has taken active steps to support and perfect rural economic structural reform and to encourage specialized households, enterprise contractors, and grass-roots cadres to work boldly and make still greater contribution to invigorating the province's economy.

Large numbers of peasant entrepreneurs and specialized households have appeared in rural Sichuan in recent years. They have taken the lead in getting rich and have led the masses to get rich, thus playing an active and stimulating role in developing the rural economy. However, while correcting unhealthy trends and carrying out a major tax inspection in the previous period, some grass-roots cadres, specialized households, and enterprise contractors became mentally confused due to lack of clear policy demarcation lines or to erroneous methods. They dared not work and operate enterprises boldly. A decline therefore appeared in some sectors of the rural economy, especially the township enterprises.

In view of this, leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee went to the rural areas to chat with the grass-roots cadres and visit specialized households and enterprise contractors. The leading comrades publicized the party's policies and principles and encouraged them to work and operate boldly. They also drew up a document defining a number of policy demarcation lines and called on all localities to seriously implement it.

The provincial CPC Committee recently stressed a number of points at various meetings:

1. It is necessary to correct new unhealthy trends and crack down on economic crimes. However, when dealing with these problems, attention must be paid to distinguishing between reasonable profit retention by enterprises and the practice of turning public assets into private property; between bonus distribution in accordance with the terms of a contract and indiscriminate payment of bonuses and subsidies; between normal expenses involved in professional contacts and the practice of giving banquets and presenting gifts; between enterprise diversification and illegal undertakings; and between proper bonus payments for enterprise work personnel and slary [word indistinct] deductions.

2. When mistakes occur in a cardinal link or certain problems are not handled properly because systems are not on a sound basis or because the policy demarcation lines are unclear, we should sum up experiences and lessons, enhance our understanding, and perfect the systems instead of holding individuals responsible for the mistakes or problems. In general the upper levels shoulder the responsibility and the lower levels should not be held accountable if the former previously ordered the latter to do something that was not in full accordance with the regulations.

3. Attention must be paid to protecting the productive forces that have already formed. We should not damage such forces on account of investigating and dealing with problems.

4. The contracts firmed up last year should in principle be made good. We should continue to complete the contracts this year on the basis of perfecting them.

5. We will continue to practice the target management responsibility system for cadres and the previous system of linking cadre rewards and penalities to performance.

SICHUAN HOLDS CONFERENCE ON CONTROLLING PURCHASING POWER

HK271450 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Yesterday evening, the provincial government's leadership group for controlling the purchasing power of social groups held a provincial telephone conference to make arrangements for Sichuan's current tasks of controlling the purchasing power of social groups.

At the conference, provincial government Secretary General Jiang Zeting conveyed the main spirit of the conference of the national leadership group for controlling the purchasing power of social groups and then reviewed the situation in this field throughout the province since the beginning of last year.

Regarding the current work of controlling the purchasing power of social groups throughout the province, Comrade Jiang Zeting stressed:

1. It is necessary to strengthen publicity and education and to heighten ideology and understanding.

2. It is essential to strictly examine, approve, and manage business in the specially controlled commodities.

3. It is imperative to seriously control quotas.

4. It is necessary to investigate and study the method of controlling the purchasing power of the township collective enterprises. Each place can select a county where investigation and study will be conducted, and put forward its views.

5. Offices for controlling the purchasing power of social groups at all levels must strengthen their fundamental work and the work of controlling the purchasing power of social groups must be done by their corresponding departments. These offices must build up archives of relevant data on examining and approving business in the specially controlled commodities.

6. Offices for controlling the purchasing power of social groups at all levels must do their work well in coordination with the departments of planning, finance, and taxation; bank; and departments of commerce, auditing, industrial and commercial administration, and motor vehicles.

7. It is necessary to strengthen leadership and to reinforce the ranks of cadres. All counties which have not been assigned full-time cadres must be quickly assigned them.

YUNNAN MEETING COMMENDS RURAL ENRICHMENT UNITS

[Excerpts] The provincial CPC Committee and government held a gathering in Kunming from 27 to 29 June to exchange experiences and commend and award advanced units and individuals that scored outstanding success in increasing income and getting rich in 1985. Pu Chaozhu, He Zhiqiang, Liu Shusheng, Qiu Chuangxiao, Zhao Tingguang, and other party and government leaders attended.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Pu Chaozhu made a speech. He said: The province achieved fine results in launching a drive to increase income and get rich in the rural areas last year. Despite serious natural disasters, grain output was 18.7 billion jin, while total agricultural output value was 9.65 billion yuan, an increase of 8.2 percent over 1984. Average gross income per capita increased by 76 yuan. In 32 out of 126 counties and county-level cities, average gross income per capita rose by over 100 yuan.

Pu Chaozhu said: Abundant experience was accumulated last year in the drive to increase income and get rich, mainly in the following respects: 1) In everything we do, we must consider making the peasants rich as soon as possible. This is the guiding idea for promoting rural work. 2) Persevere in following the path of reform. 3) Firmly establish the concept of developing commodity economy. 4) In readjusting the production structure, it is essential to seek truth from facts, act in light of local conditions, take advantage of strong points and avoid weak ones, and turn natural strong points into commodity strong points. 5) Do a good job in providing services. 6) Improve leadership style and keep in close touch with the masses. We must raise these experiences to the plane of reason and turn them into the guide for developing the rural economy.

GANSU RADIO FINDS CLAN CONCEPT 'INTOLERABLE'

HK270229 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 26 Jun 86

["Chat for Everybody" article by (Zhao Shaolin): "The Clan Concept Is Intolerable"]

[Text] An apple orchard in (Yuzhai) Village of Mali township in Wushan Country was contracted to a peasant named Zhao. Due to its good management and economic results, more than 10 peasant households named Yu in the village became jealous, saying, we cannot allow these Zhaos to reap a profit. A struggle to seize possession of the apple trees then broke out.

Similar instances of the clan concept seriously hamper the implementation of the party's rural policies and affect the political situation of stability and unity and normal production order in the rural areas. In some places, people whose clan is a weak minority often suffer bullying. Many civil and criminal cases are the result of disputes between clans.

It will be extremely bad for building the two civilizations in the rural areas if the clan concept is not destroyed. I therefore hold that when the CPC and CYL organizations conduct ideological and political work for the peasants, they should regard elimination of the clan concept as a major topic. We should have the millions of households all united and taking the lead in getting rich and pursuing prosperity for all. If this cardinal link is grasped well, the building of the two civilizations in the rural areas can take a step forward.

QINGHAI RADIO COMMENTARY ON PROFESSIONAL ETHICS

HK241522 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Short commentary: "It Is Imperative To Conduct Education in Professional Ethics"]

[Excerpts] Professional ethics is an important component part of the building of spiritual civilization. Grasping education in professional ethics is grasping the building of spiritual civilization. The success in grasping this work will play an important part in keeping close ties between the party and the masses and between the state and the people, in town building, and changing the general mood of society.

Regarding professional ethics, all trades and professions are required to establish good work style and to observe the socialist moral concept and standard of conduct so that they can serve the people still better.

Commerce, the catering and service trades, public communications, posts, telecommunications, banks, and water and electricity supply are closely related to the whole society and have a bearing on thousands upon thousands of households. Since the Third Plenary Session of the CPC Central Committee, these trades have worked hard to improve their work and work style. They have been praised by the masses. However, a small number of comrades of these trades have failed to see the importance of this work. Their concept of professional ethics is poor. Some have taken the advantage of their professions to pursue private ends. Some have made things difficult for consumers. Some have taken advantage of consumers' being in a weak position to overcharge them. Some have done things for their own convenience and been inconsiderate of the masses. The masses are greatly dissatisfied with these.

The main aim of conducting education in professional ethics is to establish good work style, not to punish any people in particular. This is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan and is the crucial year when our province will realize a fundamental turn for the better in party style. We sincerely hope that all units will seriously attach importance to education in professional ethics so that our province can make a new start in the building of spiritual civilization.

SHAANXI GOVERNOR URGES SUPPORT, PROTECTION FOR REFORM

[Text] Today's SHAANXI RIBAO frontpages an article by Governor Li Qingwei entitled "Persevere in Reform, Protect Reform, Stimulate Reform."

The article says: Reform is an important guarantee for invigorating Shaanxi and doubling [fan fan] output value. The leaders at all levels must take a firm and clear-cut stand with the cadres and masses, persevere in reform, protect reform, and strive to create an excellent external environment for the reformers.

The article demands that the leaders at all levels voluntarily accept responsibility for certain mistakes that occur in reform. It is forbidden to grab people by their pigtails, make them wear tight shoes, deal blows at them in revenge, punish people, or go back to the old road. The article says: With regard to people who fabricate facts in order to disrupt reform, our principle is not to allow interference by gossip and slander. We should in general not deal with anonymous letters. We must hold accountable and deal severely with those who make false accusations to frame people.

Li Qingwei's article says: Apart from a few instances of serious violations of law and discipline, the upper-level organs should not be quick to send work teams into units to handle problems that arise in reform, or conduct endless investigations there.

SHAANXI PARTY MEETING DISCUSSES RURAL RECTIFICATION

[Excerpts] The provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee pointed out during a recent discussion on party rectification that this work is now at its most important moment. The party committees at all levels, especially the county CPC committees, must eliminate ideas of relaxing, strengthen leadership, do a good job in rural party rectification, and consolidate and develop the fruits of party rectification.

On the morning of 18 June, the Standing Committee listened to a speech by Li Xipu, leader of the provincial CPC Committee group for guiding party rectification, conveying the spirit of the forum of 11 north China provincial and municipal CPC Committee secretaries on party rectification convened by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification.

The meeting held: Although rural party rectification in Shaanxi has not been underway for long, its development is healthy and good results have been achieved.

The Standing Committee stressed: Now that party rectification has got down to the rural grass roots, it is marked by the characteristics of broad area, complex problems, and pressing time. The question of whether we can carry out rural party rectification with high quality is very important. In addition, having completed party rectification, units at county-level and above still need to further solve problems in party building. The party committees and the leading comrades at all levels must have a clear understanding of the importance of this moment, strengthen leadership, brace their spirits, and complete party rectification with high quality.

The Standing Committee meeting stressed that rural party rectification must be focused on solving serious cases of abuse of power and violations of law and discipline among district, township, and village party-member cadres. The rural grass-roots party leadership groups must be readjusted, strengthened, trained, and improved. We must, throughout the entire course of rural party rectification, get a good grasp of ideological and political education for the party members. We must also do a good job in straightening out rural finances, so as to stimulate rural reforms and the development of commodity economy and bring about a fundamental turn for the better in party style and social mood.

Regarding the further consolidation and development of the fruits of party rectification, the Standing Committee pointed out that it is essential to focus on three cardinal links: 1) Conduct in-depth education in party spirit, especially in the program of serving the people wholeheartedly. 2) Further straighten out unhealthy trends. 3) Set up a healthy political life in the party and put it on a sound basis, seriously eliminate feudal remnants in political life, and put democratic centralism on a sound basis.

SHAANXI: OBSTACLES TO REFORM DISRUPT ADVANCED FACTORY

[Text] According to SHAANXI RIBAO, reform in the Xian food and drink machinery plant has encountered obstructions. Plant manager (Wu Changhai) is unable to exercise his powers, and the enterprise has now reached a state where it cannot even pay wages.

Since the plant instituted reforms in 1980, its main product, the Feiyan brand steamed bun machine, has on many occasions been assessed as an advanced product in the province and city. The plant's profit in 1983 quadrupled the 1980 figure. The plant was named a six-good enterprise by the provincial government in 1985. The plant's profits rose at an annual rate of 36.1 percent over a 7-year period. It became a renowned advanced enterprise in the whole province.

Instead of doing everything possible to protect and support such an advanced enterprise, the Xian City No 2 commerce bureau sent in a work team which conducted inspections in the plant for 9 months. The bureau also appointed a deputy manager and removed (Wu Changhai) from his post of party branch secretary. It also appointed a new secretary. As a result of these moves, this plant, whose annual profit was as much as 1 million yuan, produced less than 500,000 yuan worth of output value in the first 5 months of this year. The workers did not receive 1 yuan in bonuses, and the plant cannot even pay wages now.

SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON U.S. CONGRESS RESOLUTION

OW290829 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] The Broadcasting Corporation of China reports from Taipei: Republic of China [ROC[Foreign Affairs Ministry spokesman Chiu Chin-i on Friday called on the U.S. Congress to respect the RPC Government's efforts in safeguarding democracy and human rights in the nation. The spokesman asked U.S. lawmakers not to be misled by unfounded allegations charged against the government.

Chiu made the remarks at a regular press conference Friday morning, reacting on a resolution passed by a U.S. House of Representatives subcommittee. The resolution asked the ROC Government to allow the organizing of new political parties to step toward a complete parliamentary system. The spokesman said, despite of threats from the Communist regime, the ROC Government has never spared efforts in promoting political participation and the protection of citizens' basic rights. Chiu said: Rather than being led away from their neutral and objective stand, the U.S. lawmakers should encourage and respect the Asian countries' determination to ensure democracy.

In the Friday meeting, Chiu also cited the report on Communist Chinese leader Teng Hsiao-ping's remarks threatening military actions against the ROC, and said the attitude shows that the communist regime's previous advocations of peaceful reunification are just plain lies.

[Begin recording] We have repeatedly pointed out to the free world that the smiling-face, peaceful overtures of the Chinese Communists to us have been purely a united front conspiracy. In fact, the attempt by the Chinese Communists to use force to invade the bastion of freedom, namely, Taiwan, Kinmen, and Matsu, has never ceased, though the Chinese Communists have repeatedly tried to fool the world with their one country, two systems Hong Kong formula, etcetera, etcetera. This baloney has once again demonstrated that these peaceful united front slogans are nothing but lies. We sincerely hope that the people in the free world will see through the Chinese communists' real nature so as not to fall into the trap of their united front tactics. [end recording]

Teng Hsiao-ping said earlier in a meeting with Philippine Vice President Laurel that they are getting impatient with the current situation and may resort to military force in bringing about the reunifcation of China.

Also in the meeting, Chiu said the ROK and South Korea may soon reach an agreement on the handling of the 19 mainlanders who had drifted into South Korean waters. He said the Korean authorities are expected to make public their guiding principles in handling the incident.

TAIWAN NOT TO PLAY TABLE TENNIS ON MAINLAND

[Text] Taipei, June 27 (CNA) -- The Chinese Taipei Table Tennis Association CTTTA has decided not to take part in the Asian Cup table tennis competition scheduled to be held in October in Shenchun, Kwangtung Province in Mainland China, Foreign Ministry Spokesman Chegne J.Y. Chiu said Friday.

To uphold the nation's basic policy, Chiu said in a routine press briefing at the Government Information Office, all ROC [Republic of China] groups or individuals are dutifully prohibited to take part in any activities in Mainland China.

The government's basic and firm policy of "no compromise, no contact and no negotiation" with the Peiping regime should be observed faithfully by all citizens, Chiu said.

The Chinese Taipei Table Tennis Association has formally applied for membership in the Asian Table Tennis Federation, Chiu said. However, he said, this fact does not imply that the CTTTA will take part in the forthcoming competition in Shenchun.

INCIDENT OF MAINLAND CHINESE IN ROK TO BE RESOLVED

OW271707 Taipei CNA in English 1453 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Text] Taipei, June 27 (CNA) -- Foreign Ministry Spokesman Cheyne J.Y. Chiu said Friday that the incident involving 19 Mainland Chinese who made their escape to South Korea June 16 aboard a motorized junk in a bid to seek freedom, is expected to be solved "satisfactorily" soon.

Chiu made the remarks in a press conference held at the Government Information Office in the morning.

South Korean Assistant Foreign Minister Pak Su-kil announced Wednesday that if everything goes smoothly, his government will make public its principle in handling the case within this week.

Pak has also announced that his government will handle the case "in accordance with international law and practices as well as the principle of humanitarianism," Chiu said.

Chui said the Republic of China Ambassador to Seoul Hsueh Yu-chi has been negotiating with the Korean authorities on this incident. "It is expected that the incident will come to a satisfactory solution very soon," Chiu said. However, Chiu refused to confirm a report that the ROC has expressed to the Korean Government that it does not want a third country to help handle the incident. "We have exchanged views with South Korea to make sure that both countries understand each other's stand on the issue," he said.

WEN WEI PO EDITORIAL ON SOVIET 12TH 5-YEAR PLAN

[Editorial: "The Soviet Union Tries To Reform the Old Model -- Comment on the Soviet 12th 5-Year Plan"]

[Text] The "Soviet model" has seriously hindered the pace of Soviet industrial and agricultural development. Since the 27th CPSU National Congress, Gorbachev has stopped at nothing to promote the reform of the Soviet system.

Several days ago at a conference, the Supreme Soviet of the USSR adopted the Soivet 12th 5-Year Plan. This is an ambitious plan calling for the greatest amount of investment, development at full speed, and the adoption of high technology.

In these 5 years, national income is to increase by 124.2 billion rubles. For the last 5-year plan, there was an increase of only 79 billion rubles. The amount of investment is to be raised to 190 billion rubles, an increase of 95 percent over the last 5-year plan. The rate of use of new technologies will be doubled. The rate of depreciation for machinery, according to the new plan, will be greatly accelerated and raised 100 percent. The value of old machinery written off will reach 240 billion rubles.

In agriculture, emphasis will be put on the use of high technology. It is demanded that production be raised 160 percent in 5 years.

Due to heavy investment and high accumulation, the increase in consumer funds will be reduced. A rapid improvement of the people's living standard will suffer.

The new 5-year plan will focus on an attempt to cure the "Soviet disease." What are the symptoms of the "Soviet disease?" In sum, the central planning departments just hand down production targets and assess the performance of enterprises on the basis of output value. On the other hand, enterprises can have funds at their disposal for nothing and seek to increase output value and fulfill given targets by using extensive economic means such as adding to factory premises, using more workers, and increasing machinery. This process of operation does away with cost accounting and profit calculation. No attention is paid to the results of net value added to products. The interests of enterprise operators and production workers are separated from good or bad performance in the operation of enterprises. This practice covers up the true features of economic activities and allows passing off something fake as something genuine, making no distinction between right and wrong and following no clear-cut principle in matters of reward and punishment.

Many strange phenomena have appeared in the Soviet Union. Some enterprises have adopted new techniques, reduced costs, and turned out low-priced products. Because of reduced output value based on rubles, the relevant enterprise ladership is subject to criticism and suffers from a reduction in the amount of investment received.

Some enterprises have turned out bulky and heavy machines that waste raw materials and add to their costs. For a big increase in year-end output value, the relevant enterprise leadership is given rewards and promotions.

Many ridiculous situations have appeared in the Soviet Union. No one pays attention to the use of new technology. Machine products are based on the old patterns of 15 years ago. The iron ore extracted by the Soviet people every year is much more than what is obtained in the United States, but the quantity of machine products turned out is much smaller. There is also a large quantity of timber available, but the output of products processed from timber is very small. Especially in the 1970's, the rate of Soviet economic growth and the pace of its scientific and technical development slowed down. Based on Western national economic output value figures, the Soviet Union has not only been left far behind by the United States in economic strength, but Japan's national economic strength now matches the Soviet Union.

The Soviet reformists note that without basically curing the "Soviet disease," the Soviet Union will definitely fare worse and worse in its competition regarding international economic strength. In the 12th 5-Year Plan, the reformists have written seven presdcriptions: 1) stressing high technology-intensive development and putting an end to extensive economic means adopted in the past such as one-sidedly building new factory premises, extending the capital construction front, and wasting the money invested; 2) encouraging enterprises to be responsible for their own profits and losses and to practice economic accounting, delegating decision-making power, and allowing enterprises to make production arrangements themselves; 3) two-thirds of old machinery no longer being repaired, with all energies concentrated on upgrading enterprise equipment, and focusing the national economy on the machine building industry and electronic automatic instruments, stimulating bureaus for their development; 4) practicing an open-door policy, strengthening trade with Western Europe and China, and stimulating economic and technical development; 5) changing the one-shift system in heavy industry-related factories to a two-shift more pay; 6) removing or replacing cadres unwilling to make reforms and lacking management expertise; and 7) having bank loans take the place of loans formerly obtained free.

The whole reform will do away with old management techniques and allow the introduction of new Western management experience. But the Soviet Union still does not dare to boldly practice a commodity economy. It is difficult to carry out the redistribution of power between central organs and enterprises and laborers, when duties are ill-defined. Can the "Soviet disease" be overcome? It seems that Soviet reformists will continue to encounter numerous obstacles ahead.

FOREIGN MINISTRY HOLDS WEEKLY NEWS BRIEFING

Refutes VNA Espionage Report

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman said here today that reports by Vietnamese News Agency (VNA) on the establishment of an espionage base by China on the Sino-Vietnamese border to carry out espionage activities against Vietnam is "a sheer fabrication".

Answering a question on the VNA reports at a weekly news briefing, the spokesman said the large amount of irrefutable evidence in the possession of the Chinese department concerned shows that it is the Vietnamese side that has repeatedly sent agents into China to carry out espionage activities of various kinds.

Views Relations With East Europe

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman told reporters at the weekly news briefing today that there is no difficulty on the part of the Chinese Communist Party in resuming relations with the communist parties in East European countries.

In reply to a question about party-to-party relations between China and East European countries, he said that the political, economic, trade and cultural relations between China and the socialist countries in Eastern Europe have developed rapidly in recent years. However, he noted, "We have not restored party-to-party relations with the socialist countries in Eastern Europe except Romania and Yugoslavia. For our part, we have no difficulty in resuming party-to-party relations with them."

The spokesman added that there has been no substantive progress in the political relations between China and the Soviet Union. Sino-Soviet relation can be normalized only when the three obstacles are removed, he said. The obstacles refer to Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, Soviet support to Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea, and the heavy Soviet military presence along the Sino-Soviet border.

Urges Arms Reduction

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman said today the importance of both nuclear and conventional disarmament should not be ignored and should be carried out at the same time.

"The two military blocs have concentrated in Europe large number of sophisticated conventional forces and weaponary, which should be reduced dramatically," he said at the weekly press conference here in reply to a question on the recent disarmament proposal put forward by the Warsaw Pact countries.

"If the two blocs can conduct negotiations and reach agreements on the conventional disarmaments and take actions to reduce these armaments, this is welcome," he said.

Condemns U.S. Aid to Contras

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman said today China is opposed to the recent act of the U.S. House of Representatives on providing assistance to the anti-government armed forces in Nicaragua.

Commenting the bill passed by the U.S. House a week ago at the weekly press conference here, the spokesman said, "The act constitutes a violation of the norms governing international relations and will have a serious impact on the development of the situation in Central America."

"Any form of interference in the affairs of Central America will aggravate the tension in that region and will be detrimental to a peaceful settlement of the conflicts in Central America," he said.

"We believe that the principle of non-interference should be fully respected by all parties concerned and the problems between the United States and Nicaragua should only be resolved through peaceful negotiations on an equal basis."

ZHAO ZIYANG ARRIVES IN URUMQI EN ROUTE TO EUROPE

[Text] Bucharest, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang arrived here this afternoon to start his five-day official goodwill visit to Romania. Premier Zhao, who is also member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party, is visiting this country at the invitation of Nicolae Ceausescu, general secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and president of the Republic, and Constantin Dascalescu, premier of the Romanian Government.

Romania is the first stop of the Chinese premier's six-nation tour, which will also take him to Yugoslavia, Greece, Spain, Turkey and Tunisia.

GDR, FRG PARTIES DISCUSS NUCLEAR-FREE CORRIDOR

OW010548 Beijing XINHUA in English 0534 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Berlin, June 30 (XINHUA) -- Representatives of the leading parties from Democratic Germany and Federal Germany today focused on clarifying "some important, outstanding problems" about establishing a nuclear-free corridor in central Europe.

The discussions, the fifth in a series, were instituted in 1985 under an agreement between Erich Honecker, general secretary of Democratic Germany's ruling German Socialist Unity Party, and Willy Brandt, chairman of Federal Germany's Social Democratic Party. Creation of a nuclear-free corridor was proposed by the late Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme. In 1985, the two parties reached an agreement on establishing a chemical weapons-free zone in central Europe.

Teams from the two parties also discussed the latest Warsaw Pact proposals for substantial East-West troop reductions. The proposals were tabled earlier June at the Budapest summit. The next session will be in September in Bonn.

The Democratic Germany team was led by Hermann Axen, Politburo member and secretary of the Socialist Unity Party's Central Committee. Egon Bahr, member of the Presidium of the Social Democratic Party Federal Council and chairman of the Disarmament and Arms Control Committee of Federal Germany's Parliament, was the other delegation leader.

PRC'S NEW CONSUL GENERAL IN NEW YORK SPEAKS

U.S., HONG KONG SIGN TEXTILE IMPORT PACT

[Text] Washington, July 1 (XINHUA) -- The United States and one of its biggest textile suppliers, Hong Kong, initialed a bilateral textile import pact Monday. U.S. trade representative Clayton Yeutter, in a statement released late Monday, announced an agreement that limits the growth of Hong Kong textiles and apparel exports to an average of about 1 percent per year through 1991. Between 1980 and 1985, apparel imports of all fibers from Hong Kong increased by 63 percent, with an average annual rate of about 12 percent, Yeutter said. The new pact will expand coverage to all textile products. The current quotas cover cotton, wool and man-made fiber. The new pact extends the controls to ramie, linen and silk blends.

U.S. textile industry supporters in Congress said the agreement represented an improvement when measures against rapid increases in imports from Hong Kong in the last six years. "It's a step in the right direction, although we would have preferred to see some rollback," said Mark Goodin, a spokesman for Senator Strom Thurmond, Republican of South Carolina, and leader of the Senate textile caucus.

Hong Kong's chief textile negotiator, Hamish Macleod, said, "it's a very tight agreement but the best that we could get in light of the rigid stance of the United States reflecting strong protectionism." But representatives of the American textile industry denounced the accord, claiming it guarantees Hong Kong a bigger share of the U.S. market.

The industry is now mounting a major congressional campaign to override President Reagan's veto last year of textile quota legislation. The House is scheduled to vote August 6 on overriding the veto. Led by Senator Thurmond and Representative Ed Jenkins, leader of the House textile caucus, 372 lawmakers — 302 House members and 70 senators -- warned President Reagan in a letter last month that they might still override his veto and petitioned him to negotiate a tough multi-fiber agreement.

The Hong Kong pact was reached as the U.S. is negotiating a new mult-fiber arrangement, an international agreement governing the world textile trade that expires July 31. Hong Kong's move, analysts say, has insulated it from tougher conditions that may be laid down under any new arrangement.

The United States in recent negotiations had been seeking to freeze imports from three of the biggest textile suppliers -- Hong Kong, Taiwan and South Korea. Last year the value of Hong Kong textile exports to the United States was 3.3 billion U.S. dollars.

U.S. NOT TO RESPOND TO SOVIET PROPOSALS UNTIL SEP

[Text] Washington, July 1 (XINHUA) -- White House spokesman Larry Speakes said today that the United States is "preparing very carefully a reply" to the new Soviet arms control proposals but will not present it to the Soviet side before September when the next round of Geneva talks starts. In a reaction to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's remarks before the Polish Communist Party Congress in Warsaw yesterday, Speakes said that the United States hoped that "the Soviets are prepared to negotiate seriously." "As far as the United States is concerned, we are prepared and we hope progress can be made," he asserted.

Gorbachev in Warsaw accused the United States of sabotaging arms control efforts by ignoring Soviet proposals. "The cause of disarmament has not been advanced by a single millimeter because of the American Administration's open obstruction," he said. Speaks declined to comment on the accusations, saying only that "progress can be made if both sides are willing to discuss the matter seriously."

In a related matter, Speaks said there was no discussion through diplomatic channels on rescheduling a date for a U.S.-Soviet foreign ministers' meeting to prepare a second summit between Reagan and Gorbachev. The only discussion of the matter was a week ago when President Reagan met with new Soviet Ambassador Yuriy Dubinin who presented a letter from Gorbachev to Reagan, he said. "At that time, some ideas about how we prepare for a summit and proceed toward a summit were discussed in a very general sense, but with no specifics," he stated. He said the United States would prefer to have the meeting in September when the Soviet foreign minister comes to New York to attend the U.N. General Assembly session, but it is up to the Soviet side to propose a date.

At the State Department, spokesman Charles Redman complained that Moscow has spurned repeated U.S. overtures on rescheduling such a meeting. "We have been willing since last January, but the Soviets have not been willing to hold such a meeting, despite their commitment at Geneva to regular meetings between the foreign ministers," he claimed.

LI PENG DISCUSSES COOPERATION WITH BECHTEL CHAIRMAN

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Li Peng discussed cooperation here today with Stephen Davison Bechtel Jr., chairman of the board of directors of the Bechtel Group Inc. of the United States. Bechtel said he is interested in helping China in the expansion of its energy industry. The vice-premier said he hoped that the Bechtel Group Inc. could cooperate with China in coal production. The U.S. entrepreneur came here as a guest of the China International Trust and Investment Corporation.

PRC JOURNAL ON USSR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

HK010131 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 10, 16 May 86 pp 5-6

[Article by Lei Zheng and Shi Zhi "The 27th CPSU Congress and the Strategy of Speeding Up Development"]

[Text] Over 2 months have passed since the 27th CPSU Congress. It is, however, still a major matter being discussed by international public opinion. It was the most conspicuous party congress since the 20th CPSU Congress. Gorbachev said: The resolution adopted by this congress "will determine the progress of the Soviet Union for the coming years and decades as well as the nature and rate of its advance toward a new Soviet socialist stage." In other words, it will determine the image and position of the Soviet Union upon "entering the 21st century." It can be said that this congress marked the new development period of the Soviet Union.

The Axis of the Congress -- The Strategy of Speeding Up Development

In his closing speech at the congress, Gorbachev said: "The main political achievement of the 27th CPSU Congress" is that it has laid down the "general line" for "speeding up the country's social and economic development."

What is the strategy of "speeding up development"? According to Gorbachev's explanation, it refers to improving the economic development rate. In the 15 years up to the end of this century, its national revenue will increase by 100 percent and its labor productivity by 130 to 150 percent. In other words, in the coming 15 years the Soviet Union will do as much work as it has done over the last 70 years since the founding of the country. By speeding up, it does not simply mean enhancing the development rate. its essence lies in "improving equality" on the basis of intensive production. Moreover, speeding up does not merely involve reform in the economic field but also demands the "active implementation of social policies," the "improvement of social relationships, the renewal of the work forms and methods of political and ideological organs, the strengthening of socialist democracy, and the removal of conservative factors which cause slackness and stagnation" and "anything which hampers social progress." Gorbachev said in Tolyatti City on 8 April that the 27th CPSU Congress demanded an "increase in the development rates in various fields of Soviet society," including the "economic, social, and spiritual fields" as well as the "political system"

What is the background for the CPSU to set forth the strategy of "speeding up development"? Gorbachev provided explanations from various angles.

1. In the economic field, "from the 1970's to the early 1980's, the Soviet Union markedly lagged behind in terms of economic development, including development, rate, labor productivity, the target fulfillment rate, and the use of advanced science and technology," and the Soviet economy "began to lose" its vitality. As a result of a drop in its economic growth rate, the Soviet Union could not fulfill its targets for three consecutive 5-year plan periods.

Gorbachev's remarks were not groundless. From 1981 to 1985, the average annual growth rate of the Soviet economy was 3.1 percent, lower than that of Japan (4 percent for the same period). Suppose the economies of the two countries continued to develop at the present rates, the Soviet Union would, in not too long a time, lose its meager superiority over Japan in terms of GNP, and it would not be able to maintain the position of a second largest economic country after the United States. Thus, it is not difficult to understand why the CPSU is earger to speed up its economic development.

The stagnation in economic development has resulted from a "lack of understanding of the importance and urgency of enabling the economy to take on an intensive nature" and of using advanced scientific and technological achievements. Therefore, efforts should be concentrated on developing an intensive economy.

2. In the social, political, and ideological fields, the "actions of party and government organs are lagging behind the times and the needs for livelihood. Slackness, rigidity of management forms and methods, inadequate zeal for work, bureaucracy, and depression in social life are becoming prominent." The "mentality of being unwilling to make improvement is prevailing." The tendency of avoiding the settlement of sharp contradictions and mature problems is arising. Furthermore, there are many other unhealthy trends. Ideologically, cadres are "restricted by outmoded concepts." Some people are even trying to turn Marxist theory into a "rigid formula and panacea" and do not take account of the "specific economic and political environments we are in." All this hampers Soviet progress.

In the international field, the Soviet Union is faced with the three major challenges of the U.S. strategic defense plan, worldwide scientific and technological development, and economic reforms in foreign countries CPSU leaders have "reconsidered" the international situation. They are of the opinion that the international situation has never been so "complex and unfavorable" as today; admit that capitalist countries still have vitality and can maintain their present positions and recover their lost ones; are worried that in the coming 15 years, the balance of forces will change in a direction unfavorable to the Soviet Union; profoundly feel the possibility of "falling behind in every step as a result of being slow in the first step"; and are afraid of becoming a third-rate country.

It is just in such domestic and international situations that the CPSU has decided to tackle the challenges.

Economic Reform

How will they put into effect the strategy of "speeding up development"?

A study of the documents of the 27th CPSU Congress indicates that the key is economic reform. Gorbachev announced in explicit term: "The present production relations and operational and managerial system have been formed basically under the condition of extensive economic development. They are gradually becoming outmoded and are beginning to lose their stimulative role, and certain things have become obstacles." He called: "The present situation requires us to carry out fundamental reform instead of making partial improvement," so as to establish a "complete, effective, and flexible management system." People have noticed that in the past Soviet leaders preferred "perfecting" and "transforming" the economic structure to "reforming" it but that they now feel the necessity for carrying out "fundamental reform."

Economic reform covers many aspects and involves bringing into play all positive economic factors; using economic methods to manage the economy so that the relationship between money and commodities becomes a tool by which economic and social policies are implemented; correctly handling the relationship between centralizing and delegating powers; reforming the management system; relaxing agricultural policies; adjusting the proportion of various national economic branches; and changing structural and investment policies. However, reform measures were not clarified in detail by the documents of the 27th CPSU Congress. As to what extent and how economic reform should ge carried out, this depends on their future practice.

Developing Democracy and Expanding the "Scope of Overtness"

While summing up the experience in the previous economic construction, Gorbachev maintained that the following three points were most important: First, it is necessary to "speak the truth"; second, "since economic reform has started, it must not be abandoned halfway but must be carried through to the end"; and third, the masses should be encouraged to take an "active and conscientious part" in economic reform. Obviously, the demand for speeding up development has also manifested itself in the political field. The basic aim of this demand is to develop democracy and expand the "scope of overtness."

Gorbachev said: Without developing democracy, "speeding up social development is inconceivable," and "without overtness, there can be no democracy." Overtness means "placing everything the state and society do under the supervision and attention of the people." With regard to political reform, Gorbachev's ideas contained in his report are mainly as follows: The central authorities should delegate powers to the lower levels, management organs should be streamlined, basic-level cadres should be promoted by election, the legal system should be perfected, and the leadership and work styles should be improved. As political structural reform involves very complicated relationships, the realization of these ideas depends on the development of practice.

Allowing Science and Technology To Take the Lead

In the course of realizing the strategy of "speeding up development," the Soviet Union is speeding up its scientific and technological development along with economic reform so as to make such development the main lever for enabling the economy to take on an intensive nature.

According to an analysis by Western specialists, the Soviet Union is 15 to 20 years behind Western developed countries in terms of science and technology. Due to long-term extensive economic development, the Soviet Union has produced many low quality products with bad economic results and high material consumption, although it has caught up with the United States in producing certain products. If this is allowed to continue, the gap between itself and Western countries will become larger. The domestic and international situation urgently require the Soviet Union to pay attention to the development of science and technology. Gorbachev has concentrated his efforts on this since he assumed office. In June last year, the CPSU held a special meeting on scientific and technological progress. In December, the Soviet Union and the other member countries of CEMA worked out a program on scientific and technological development for the coming 15 years. The strategy of speeding up development, which was laid down by the 27th CPSU Congress, has further confirmed the importance of placing the development of science and technology in a leading position, with the aim of using high technology to achieve better quality and higher efficiency, at a faster rate.

For this reason, it is necessary to give priority to the development of the machine building industry, to speed up the development of intensive industries, to reform the scientific research management system, to strengthen international scientific and technological cooperation, and to introduce more technological projects from abroad.

Summing up the above points, we know that the strategy of speeding up development has two main aspects, one being structural reform and the other being scientific and technological development. These two aspects will carry forward other aspects and enable the Soviet Union to carry out "comprehensive management" and realize the target of doubling its economic strength by the end of this century.

The economic structural reform plan worked out by the 27th CPSU Congress only points out the general direction. Gorbachev said: Economic reform "has just started" and "there will be difficulties." "We cannot guarantee that there will be no mistakes." In addition, obstacles are sure to arise in the course of this reform. In this respect, Gorbachev made these following remarks while in Kuibyshev: Some people do not have a good understanding of reforms; some party and government organs are not willing to carry out fundamental reform, are slow in their action, and even suppress the masses' creative spirit; and some localities have resorted to "formalism" and have "done very little actual work" in implementing the resolution of the congress. We will study how to remove these obstacles and what the future of reforms will be.

At present, people in the rest of the world have differences of opinion in estimating whether the Soviet Union can realize its strategy of speeding up development. Some people maintain that Soviet determination and ability should not be underestimated and others hold that apart from being affected by its social, political, economic, technical, and ideological habits, the strategy of speeding up development is also restricted by external factors, and in particular by its arms race and worldwide rivalry against the United States, which have added to the heavy burden of the Soviet Union and have diffused its human, material, and financial resources.

SOVIET UNION TO MAKE UP CHERNOBYL OUTPUT LOSS

[Text] Moscow, June 26 (XINHUA) -- Measures have been taken to make up the loss of electricity from the shut-down of the Chernobyl nuclear plant, the official news agency TASS reported today.

Vitalyi Sklyarov, Ukrainian energy and electricity minister, said some power plants in the republic, including a nuclear plant, will be put into use later this year.

Also, he said, the nos one and two generating sets in the Chernobyl power station will go into operation again this fall.

The minister said the pressing task now is to economize electricity. He estimated 2,000 megawatts will be saved if certain effective measures are taken.

PRC SEEKS MORE BUSINESS COOPERATION WITH JAPAN

OW020251 Beijing in Japanese to Japan 2130 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] The Sino-Japanese round-table talks on joint business consultancy, which began in Yangzhou, Jiangsu Province, on 23 June under the auspices of the PRC State Economic Commission, closed on 27 June after concluding that business consultancy conducted in the past 5 years has resulted in new and fruitful experience for China's acquisition of new technologies and renovation of existing enterprises.

The program for business consultancy was adopted in 1981 at a high-level working officials' meeting between the Chinese State Economic Commission and the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry. Consultancy is offered by Japanese experts invited to China to work with Chinese officials. The program has been supported by both the Chinese and Japanese premiers.

The Japanese Government and private sector have so far sent 651 experts, and they have consulted 131 Chinese enterprises. At the same time, 400 Chinese engineers and technicians have visited hundreds of companies in Japan. As a result, most of the Chinese enterprises involved have improved management and raised technical levels. Of these enterprises, 60 have signed contracts to import Japanese technology or plants. The total value of contracts has reached $100 million, among them are 22 projects in which production has already started on a full or partial scale.

At the round-table talks, Zhu Ronghi, vice minister of the State Economic Commission, made a three-point proposal on the future conduct of business consultancy:

First, the formula for consultancy-acquisition-renovation should be strictly carried out, and the business consultancy program between the two countries should be steadily developed on a long-term basis.

Second, a new acquisition-renovation-joint management formula should be formulated and perfected, and cooperation between the two sides should be taken to a higher level.

Third, broad, long-term ties of cooperation should be gradually developed between Chinese and Japanese enterprises, medium- and small-scale enterprises in particular, through the consultancy program.

Zhu Rongji further noted that China wishes to offer Japanese firms most preferential terms in production and investment areas and various means of cooperation in order to overcome the current, temporary difficulties caused by the strong yen and the trade imbalance and to lay foundations for lasting cooperation. He added, this can be done.

NATURALIZATION FOR CHINESE TO RESUME IN PHILIPPINES

[Text] Manila, 27 Jun, (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Philippines President Corazon Aquino indicated that hearings on applications by Chinese in the country for naturalization will be resumed soon and that the matter will be studied by Solicitor General Ordonez and the justice minister. Aquino made the above statement in response to a question by a reporter from the Chinese-language SHIJIE RIBAO [WORLD NEWS] on the question of naturalization.

In this connection, SHIJIE RIBAO published an article: "In so doing, the president demonstrated that she stands by her commitment made during the election. She will not abrogate the Philippine citizenship of Chinese naturalized during the Marcos time, and will continue hearings on applications for naturalization left over from the Marcos government."

When asked about the question of fake Philippine reentry permits, President Aquino said: If the reentry papers are fake, then the holders should be deported, even if the fake papers came from the government itself. The fake papers were perhaps signed and acquired by people connected to government officials. I do not think the government should be held responsible.

HONG KONG BUSINESSMAN ASSESSES BUSINESS IN PRC

[Text] Hong Kong, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Jardine Matheson Holdings in Kong Kong remains the "most diverse China trader in Hong Kong, in both scope and size," said Simon Keswick, chairman of the company, here today. "For the most part Jardines' China business is now intertwined with our Hong Kong operations," he told the eighth Asian Security Analysts Council conference held here.

Jardines' Hong Kong companies have virtually come to think of business on the Chinese mainland as an extension of their Hong Kong operations, he added. "From Hong Kong, our China trading division is involved in major project work, such as technology transfers, heavy equipment sales and the oil industry," he said.

In 1980, the China Schindler Elevator Company -- China's first industrial joint venture with a foreign firm -- was formed between Jardines and Chinese enterprise. Since then Jardines has launched more than 12 joint ventures with Chinese firms.

PRC JOURNAL ON KARMAL'S LOSS OF POWER

[Article by Yang Can: "Why Did Karmal Lose His Power?]

[Text] The atmosphere in Kabul, the capital of Afghanistan, was unusual, because the whole city was on full alert as Soviet tanks were deployed on the slopes of the mountains which surround the city, their cannons were aimed at the city proper, and Soviet troops encircled all the Afghan Army barracks inside the city. What was going on there?

At this time, the 18th Plenary Session of the Central Committee of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan [PDPA] was inaugurated under the close watch of the Soviet troops. The meeting announced that Babrak Karmal had been replaced in his capacity as the general secretary of the PDPA by 39-year-old Lieutenant General Mohammad Najibullah, head of the State Intelligence Bureau. Although Karmal still remains in his capacity as a member of the Politburo and the chairman of the Revolutionary Committee, his influence and power have been significantly reduced.

Karmal became the general secretary of the PDPA at the end of 1979 after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan with the support of the Soviet Union. He clearly knew on whose hands his life hinged. In the past 6 and 1/2 years, he has been docile and obedient to the Soviet Union and has acted as a puppet. However, all this did not satisfy the Soviets. Since last year, Soviet newspapers and periodicals have publicly criticized the Kabul regime many times, predicting the downfall of Karmal. At the end of March 1986, Karmal quietly went to the Soviet Union. Since then, he has not been seen in public. Karmal even failed to attend the activities celebrating the eighth anniversary of the "April Revolution." In fact, it was while Karmal was in Moscow that the Soviet Union made the decision to reshuffle the Kabul regime.

The reason Karmal has lost his power is that the Soviet Union feels that he is not a good tool which can be freely used by the Soviet Union. After sending troops to Afghanistan, the Soviet Union originally hoped that the Karmal regime would be able to stabilize the situation in Afghanistan. However, over 6 years have now passed. Although the Soviet Union increased its expeditionary troops, to over 120,000 people, suffered over 30,000 casualties, and paid a price as high as over $10 billion, the Karmal regime still could not survive without the protection of the Soviet troops.

Soviet newspapers and periodicals have also admitted that until now, the Kabul regime could only control 40 percent of the total area of the country. That the Soviet troops burned villages, killed civilians, and carried out a "scorched earth policy" in the areas where Afghan guerrillas carried out their activities aroused resentment among many Afghan Army officials and soldiers. Such incidents as the defection of the Afghan Army officials to the guerrilla side and mutinies of Afghan soldiers often took place. In March this year, over 900 soldiers of the Karmal troops defected to the guerrilla side. Because the Soviet Union could not free itself from the Afghan war and was becoming more and more isolated in the international arena, it wanted to change the situation by replacing its procurator in the puppet regime.

Although the Karmal regime had existed under Soviet protection for several years, its domestic social foundation was still rather weak. The Soviet Union had been demanding that Karmal carry out "political reforms" and let some leading figures of the tribes and the religious circle, intellectual circle, industrial and commercial circle, and so on take part in his government so as to add some democratic colors to the Karmal regime.

In autumn of last year, Karmal put forward a so-called program which aimed at "expanding the revolutionary social basis," but the program achieved meager results. The Soviet Union has publicly expressed dissatisfaction over the program's results. PRAVDA also published articles accusing Karmal of "having obstructed the revolutionary progress of Afghanistan."

Within the PDPA, there has always been a power struggle between the "parcham" faction headed by Karmal and the "Khalq" faction formed mainly by the Pushtus. In July of last year, the guards of Karmal had an armed conflict with the guards of Afghan Prime Minister Soltan Ali Keshtmand, which caused many casualities. In September, shots were again heard inside the presidential palace.

Since then, Karmal mde efforts to purge those who held different views and dismissed or replaced important figures of the party and government, but the problems were still not solved. The purpose of the Soviet Union replacing Karmal with Najibullah is to let a man with real power calm down the internal conflict and strengthen the Kaubl regime. However, since Karmal stepped down from power, there have been numerous demonstrations staged by his followers in Afghanistan, and the contradiction between the "Parcham" faction and the "Khalq" faction has been further intensified instead of being relaxed.

Because the Soviet Union has refused to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan, the indirect talks between Pakistan and Afghanistan which begain June 1982 have not achieved any results. Since last year'sz U.S.-USSR summit, the Soviet Union has repeatedly leaked the information that it is willing to withdraw its troops, giving the impression of a certain flexibility towards a political solution. In fact, the Soviet Union wants to sustain the Kabul regime and safeguard its own vested interests through a political solution.

Because the reputation of Karmal, who returned to Kabul in a Soviet tank years ago, is too negative, the present Kabul regime has not been recognized by Pakistan and other countries concerned. One day before the seventh round of talks between Pakistan and Afghanistan started, Karmal was removed from his post as general secretary. This showed that the Soviet Union wants to improve the image of the Kabul regime and strengthen the regime's negotiating strength in the talks.

Having been involved in the Afghan war for years, the Soviet Union is leading a difficult life. If the Soviet Union really wants to get out of the war, the only feasible way is to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan as soon as possible and let the Afghan people decide the future of their own country. The method of replacing the procurator and continuing to force a puppet regime upon the Afghan people will not help to solve any fundamental problems.

'NOTHING OF SUBSTANCE' TO SINO-PORTUGUESE TALKS

HK011036 Hong Kong AFP in English 0953 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (AFP) — The first round of Sino-Portuguese talks on the future of Macao that concluded here Tuesday were described by both sides as "friendly and cordial." A second round was to be held in Beijing in September, a statement released simultaneously here and in Lisbon said.

"In addition to reaching agreement on the general agenda of the talks, the two sides had an exchange of views on some matters of substance," the statement said.

Macao, which occupies a peninsula and two offshore islands in southern China, has been in Portuguese hands for 430 years and is the oldest European settlement in Asia.

No details were given about the topics covered, but the statement said the two sides had "expressed satisfaction at the results of the first round" and decided to hold a second round in Beijing this September. But a senior Portuguese Embassy official told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE there had been "nothing of substance" to the talks, which had been devoted to preliminaries and were "not exciting."

The period of time between each round of talks was likely to be shortened in the future, the official said, adding that an announcement would be made in the weeks ahead of the exact date of the next meeting.

Analysts said the September round appeared to be a compromise between China, which was believed to have sought more rapid progress, and Portugal, which favored a long period before the second round but had hoped to alternate the venue between Beijing and Lisbon.

Earlier about 40 reporters were unexpectedly barred from the opening of the talks by Chinese officials who said there was a misunderstanding about an announced photo session. Television, radio and press reporters from international agencies, Hong Kong and Macao were stopped at the gates of the Diaoyutai State Guest House.

Foreign Ministry officials said there had been a mistake in the previous day's announcement that reporters would again be allowed inside to photograph the session, as they had been on Monday.

The incident sparked speculation by some journalists that the Portuguese delegation sought to exclude the press after the crush of Hong Kong reporters prevented some Portuguese negotiators from reaching their seats at a photo session Monday. But observers noted that admitting the press to only the first day of each round of talks was in keeping with China's practice during other negotiations, including the two-year Sino-British talks on Hong Kong.

MACAO GOVERNOR LEAVES FOR CONSULTATIONS IN PORTUGAL

"I think it was a happy beginning," was how Governor Pinto Machado, speaking to reporters on his departure, described the first two-day session of negotiations for the return of Macao to Chinese rule after more than 400 years under the Portuguese flag.

(An official joint communique issued in Beijing said the two sides had agreed on the agenda for the negotiations and exchanged views on matters of substance in a "friendly and cordial" atmosphere.)

Dr Machado, who is going to Lisbon for a Portuguese State Council meeting on Thursday, said he would take the opportunity to convey to President Mario Soares the Macao Administration's views on questions arising from the Beijing talks.

Chinese officials have said China's takeover of Macao should follow the pattern of a Sino-British agreement in the neighbouring British colony of Hong Kong, which is to remain capitalist and largely autonomous for 50 years after it reverts to Chinese rule in 1997.

Political and community leaders here said the results of the first round were as expected, and expressed confidence in the eventual outcome of the talks.

Said the president of Macao's Legislative Assembly, Carlos D'Assumpcao: "I have confidence that the two governments, Portugal and China, will consider the interests of the population of Macao." Legislative Assembly member Alexandre Ho also said he thought a satisfactory agreement could be reached, but added that if Macao's future was to follow the Hong Kong model it should be adjusted to suit the realities of Macao.

The influential chairman of the pro-Beijing Chinese General Chamber of Commerce, Ma Man-kee, said he was optimistic that a deal would be struck that would take into consideration the special conditions here.

Hong Kong is a rich commercial, financial and manufacturing centre of more than five million people, 98 percent of them Chinese, with Chinese and English as official languages and a bureacuracy predominantly composed of local Chinese.

Macao is a tiny territory of some 400,000 people, again 98 per cent Chinese, with an economy based largely on gambling, tourism and light industry, and where the administration is principally in the hands of people whose native tongue is Portuguese.

AFRICAN STUDENTS RETURN TO TIANJIN UNIVERSITY

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (AFP) -- Half the African students who fled here a month ago following a clash with Chinese classmates at Tianjin University returned to campus Tuesday, an African student said.

Six of the 12 students remaining in Beijing returned by regular train to the university some 120 kilometers (70 miles) southeast of here, while another six were to undertake field studies in hydraulics in outlying areas of Beijing, one of the African students said.

A group of about six South Asian students who fled to Beijing along with the African students and returned to the campus three weeks ago had warned African students here that tension remained high on the campus, the student said.

"Our ambassador has asked us to give the Chinese a chance to prove what they say," the student said, in reference to Chinese pledges that the Africans would be safe if they returned to the campus. "We will do what the embassy says," he added.

The students' return was the latest twist in series of incidents that began May 24 when some 600 Chinese students throwing bricks and stones beseiged laid [as received] a cafeteria where the Africans and some other students were having a party. Each side blamed the other for the clash, with the Africans saying it was racially motivated and the Chinese saying they had been provoked by an African who broke a beer bottle over the head of a Chinese classmate.

The clash and late-night flight to Beijing by the African students in the face of a second threatened attack a week later sparked a street protest by some 300 African students against Chinese "racist aggression" here last month.

Chinese officials later said the Africans has started the Tianjin clash by throwing bottles at Chinese students who asked them to make less noise. An official investigation into the incident with the aim of "punishing" those responsible for the violence has yet to yield any results. The African student said Tuesday that the investigation was apparently still underway.

PRC INAUGURATES BEIJING TO ROME AIR ROUTE

[Text] Rome, July 1 (XINHUA) -- With the successful landing of a Chinese jumbo passenger plane at the Rome airport this morning, China has opened its 26th international air route (Beijing-Rome).

The under-secretary of the Italian Ministry of Foreign Trade, Robert O. Prandini, the representative of the Italian airline (Alitalia), Giorgio Zadra, the Chinese Ambassador to Italy, Du Gong, along with some other Italian friends, Chinese diplomats and Overseas Chinese here, went aboard the Boeing 747 to congratulate the crew members on their successful flight from Beijing to Rome.

This new air route has been opened by the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) and Alitalia in accordance with a Sino-Italian aviation agreement in 1973 and another agreement on commercial cooperation between the two countries reached in May this year. According to the agreements, a CAAC liner will take off from Beijing every Monday night and arrive in Rome the next morning Via Sharjah, UAE, after 14 hours' flight, the shortest flight between the two capitals. After an hour's stay at the Rome airport, the plane will continue to fly to the Federal German city of Frankfurt. The plane's return trip will start Tuesday afternoon and it will arrive in Beijing the next morning.

During his recent visit to Italy, the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, Hu Yaobang, described this new air route as the "silk road of the 20th century." With the opening of the direct flight between Beijing and Rome, the economic, technical and cultural exchanges between China and Italy as well as other European countries are bound to be promoted.

WU XUEQIAN TALKS WITH EC'S DELORS IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian said today that to strengthen friendly cooperation with the European Community (EC) constitutes an important aspect of China's policy of opening to the outside world. Wu said this in his talks with Jacques Delors, president of the Commission of the EC, here this afternoon.

He said that one important issue in China's ongoing economic restructuring is to continuously improve its open policy. He aired the view that the development of friendly cooperation between China and the EC has not only a sound political basis, but also excellent economic conditions. He said that China attaches great importance to Delors' present visit, which will promote friendly cooperation between China and the EC.

Delors told Wu that the EC supports its member countries to further their cooperation with China and is willing to work for balanced trade and technical cooperation between China and the EC, as well as exchanges between their technical personnel.

Wu and Delors also exchanged views on political and economic situations in the world today and other international issues of mutual interest.

On peace and development, Delors said that peace is the goal of the EC and a supporting pillar for the friendship between the EC and China. Peace and development are obviously related to each other, he noted. The EC, he said, has a moral and practical concern for the situation in the poverty-ridden Asian, African and Latin-American countries. Its member countries have come to know better and better the injustice of the present international economic order.

The EC advocates that international organizations and well-off countries play a greater role in helping developing countries improve their economies. It also stands for a liberation of trade to provide access for products of developing countries into rich countries, he added. He stressed that the establishment of a just and effective international economic order can reduce the number of causes of conflict.

Wu paid tribute to Delors' views. He said that, as a developing country, China is willing to strengthen South-South cooperation with Asian, African and Latin-American countries. Wu also briefed Delors on China's independent and peaceful foreign policy. He said that the modernization of China demands a long-term peaceful international environment.

China, he said, supports all policies and actions favoring peace and opposes power politics, hegemonism and encroachment upon the sovereign of other countries. He said that China is willing to work together with all peace-loving countries and peoples for world peace, and to carry out diversified economic cooperation with other countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit.

Delors arrived here today for a five-day official visit, his first since he became president of the commission of the EC in January 1985, at the invitation of the Chinese Government. Accompanying him are his wife and Emile Noel, secretary-general of the commission. They were greeted at the airport by Wu Xueqian upon their arrival.

Hosts Banquet for Delors

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Acting Chinese Premier Wan Li said here today that the European Community (EC), an important economic and political force in the world today, has made positive contributions to the unity of Western Europe.

"We heartily rejoice over the progress made in recent years by Western Europe on its road toward unity,, and we would like to see Western Europe play a more positive role in international affairs and in maintaining world peace," he added.

Wan made these remarks at a banquet welcoming Jacques Delors, president of the EC Commission, Mrs. Delors and their party this evening.

He pointed out that strengthened friendship and cooperation invarious fields between an independent China and a united and strong Western Europe is of great significance which goes far beyond the bounds of bilateral relations. It is also of great importance for safeguarding world peace and promoting international cooperation.

He reiterated that it is an established policy of the Chinese Government to steadily strengthen its friendly relations and cooperation with the EC and other West European countries.

He expressed satisfaction with the fruitful cooperation between China and the EC in various fields since they established relations 11 years ago.

He also expresed appreciation for the positive approach adopted by Delors and the EC Commission with regard to developing relations with China, and the belief that the friendly relations and cooperation between China and the EC will be furthered.

Delors replied that both the EC and China are working for peace and development. Their consensus on political affairs is of great significance. The question now is how to match their economic cooperation and trade with their political ties.

He expressed willingness to work for this and encourage EC member countries to work in this regard.

He noted that the great efforts made by China for development have caught the attention and won the appreciation of Europeans. He also praised China for its great progress and its role in peace-promoting international organizations.

He said that the 12 EC member countries are determined to unite to make further progress and gradually reach political and economic uniformity. They wish to further their cooperation in foreign affairs and eventually in defense, and have set ambitious targets for economic development, he added.

Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian was among those present at the banquet.

PRC CONSULATE OPENS IN MANCHESTER, ENGLAND

Hu first met Pavarotti during his visit to Italy earlier this month.

As Pavarotti walked into the committee's reception hall, Hu told him, "Your performances in Beijing have been very successful."

A videotape of the performance will be broadcast Tuesday on the China Central Television Network. "I believe many people will enjoy Pavarotti's performance," Hu said.

POLAND'S ECONOMIC STRATEGY FOR NEXT DECADE

OW010625 Beijing XINHUA in English 0600 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 30 (XINHUA) -- Polish Premier Zbigniew Messner has outlined economic goals for the next decade and stressed the importance of economic levers in reforms. The premier submitted today a draft socio-economic plan for 1986-1990 and through 1995 to the congress of the ruling United Workers' Party which opened on Sunday.

The plan envisages a 16 percent increase in supply of goods and services, and a 16-19 percent increase in national income for the next five years, of which half will be realized through better exploitation of raw materials. Funds for scientific and technological development will be doubled by the year 1990. Annual consumption spending will rise by some 15 percent to provide for a gradual improvement of living standards.

Messner said "The basic trend is to fully set in motion mechanisms which stimulate effectiveness." He stressed the importance of economic pressure, which "is by no means in conflict with socialist principles. On the contrary, it is a fundamental condition of the efficiency of socialism as an economic system."

Poland started its economic reforms in 1982. "The process is yet to finish," and "the results so far are unsatisfactory," said Messner. The premier considered weaknesses in the economy as: large reduction on investment, outdated production installations, ineffectiveness in the use of labor resources and raw materials, slow decline in inflation, and an increase in the money supply without a corresponding increase in production."

He stressed that "more substantial reform must be carried out to lead the economy to a further intensive development." In order to do so, "stronger economic measures" must be taken to raise efficiency. The nature of the present reform, Messner went on, is to consolidate a unified and comprehensive economic policy. He pointed out that "the direction of changes is so strongly rooted in the realities we do not need to assure anyone today that there is no backtracking on the reform."

Messner reiterated that Poland supports the establishment of official relations between the Council of Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) and the European Economic Community (EEC), as well as a bilateral agreement with the EEC that would lift the barriers which keep Polish goods away from that market.

NI ZHIFU MEETS BULGARIAN TRADE UNION GROUP

[Text] Tianjin, June 30 (XINHUA) -- Ni Zhifu, president of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, met here today a delegation from Bulgarian Trade Unions headed by its Central Council Secretary Costa Andreef.

Ni said exchange of visits between trade unions of China and Bulgaria had been suspended for 20 years owing to many reasons. He believed that the delegation's current visit marked a new beginning for the two sides to learn from and cooperate with each other.

Andreef agreed that the visit was a turning point in strengthening friendly exchanges between the two trade unions. "What we have seen and heard during the visit in China demonstrated that China's on-going economic reform was of world significance," he added. The delegation arrived here from Shenyang this morning.

MALI PRESIDENT RETURNS HOME AFTER PRC VISIT

[Text] Bamako, Mali, July 1 (XINHUA) — Malian President Moussa Traore returned here today after completing offical visits to Korea, China and Tunisia. Traore said he visited China at the invitation of President Li Xiannian last month. "I held a number of discussions with Chinese officials on bilateral cooperation and on African, Asian as well as international questions," the president told reporters at the airport.

Traore said he wished to thank Chinese President Li, the People's Republic of China, the Chinese Government and "all provincial authorities who greeted my delegation and me with friendly hospitality."

CPC DELEGATION ARRIVES IN ALGERIA 1 JULY

OW020134 Beijing XINHUA in English 0117 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Algiers, July 1 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese Communist Party delegation headed by Deputy Director of the General Office of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China (CPC) Zhou Jie, arrived here today for a friendly visit. The CPC delegation will meet with leaders of the ruling National Liberation Front (FLN) for discussions on the strengthening of bilateral relations between the CPC and the FLN.

The Chinese delegation was met at Algiers airport by Mohammed Chaa, FLN secretary general for external relations and by Chinese ambassador to Algieria, Jin Sen.

The delegation arrived from neighboring Tunisia where it attended the 12th Congress of the Tunisian Socialist Destour party. While here the delegation will visit a number of factories and economic enterprises.

COOPERATION COMMITTEE ESTABLISHED WITH BENIN

OW011140 Beijing XINHUA in English 1108 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) — China and Benin have agreed to set up a mixed committee for economic and technical cooperation and trade between the two countries. An agreement on forming the committee was signed by Chinese Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Zheng Tuobin and Beninese minister of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation Frederic Affo here today. The Beninese minister and his party left here this afternoon for Korea.

PENG CHONG MEETS BENIN PUBLIC HEALTH MINISTER

[Text] Beijing, June 30 (XINHUA) — Peng Chong, vice-chairman of China's National People's Congress Standing Committee, met here today a Beninese health delegation led by Minister of Public Health Andre Atchade. Peng briefed the visitors on China's public health work. The delegation is leaving here tomorrow to visit Yinchuan and Shanghai.

SHIJIE ZHISHI COMMENTS ON MIDDLE EAST ISSUES

HK271241 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 12, 16 Jun 86 pp 2, 3

[Article by Sun Kun, Hu Zhen, and Li Rong: "The Troublesome Current Situation in the Middle East" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Disturbances have arisen repeatedly in the Middle East since the beginning of this year. New contention is underway between all forces centering on complicated contradictions. New crises are incubating in the Middle East situation.

1. Internal Relations Between Arab Countries Are Always Changing and New Combinations Are Emerging, But They Are Suffering From Disintegration

Jordanian King Husayn announced on 19 February that "it is impossible to continue political coordination with the PLO leadership," and has in essence suspended the Jordanian-PLO accord, which existed for only 1 year. There are troubles again in the course of Middle East peace talks. At this juncture, new disintegration and reorganization inside the Arab world has begun.

JORDAN AND PALESTINE PART COMPANY. King Husayn has hoped to recover Jordan's lost territory on the West Bank of the Jordan River through Jordanian-Palestinian and U.S. Israeli talks, before the issue of Palestine's self-termination is resolved between Jordan and Palestine. Therefore, he hoped that 'Arafat would make concessions, and openly announced his acceptance of UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. However, the PLO holds that until Palestine's right of self-termination is guaranteed, the PLO will never accept those two resolutions. At present, Jordan is continuing to bring pressure to bear on 'Arafat. The disputes between them are not likely to be overcome, although Egypt and Iraq have been mediating between them.

EYE-CATCHING SYRIAN DIPLOMATIC TRENDS. Under the sponsorship of Saudi Arabian Crown Prince 'Abdallah ibn 'Abd al-Aziz, Syrian Prime Minister 'Abd al-Kasm and Jordanian Prime Minister Zaid al-Rifa'si met on two occasions in Saudi Arabia's Jeddah and Riyadh in September and October 1985 respectively. Toward the end of 1985, King Husayn visited Syria, and actively bore his own responsibility in some disputes between the two parties. Jordan and Syria rapidly reconciled. On 5 May, President al-Asad paid a reciprocal visit to Jordan. It is reported that Al-Asad's recent trip was to explore the possibility of Syrian-Jordanian military coordination in dealing with Israel's invasion.

The coming together of Syria and Jordan has created conditions for improving relations between Egypt and Iraq. Both the Egyptian and Iraqi leaders have expressed their desire to improve relations with Syria. Syria's relations with the Gulf states have also somewhat improved. Saudi Arabian Foreign Minister Sa'ud al-Faysal Al Sa'ud and Sabah al-Ahmad al-Jabir As-Sabah, Kuwait's deputy prime minister and concurrent foreign minister, have both visited Syria and met Syrian President al-Asad this year. President al-Asad pledged to oppose the expansion of the Iran-Iraq war to other Gulf states. Recently, the Jordanian king has shuttled between Iraq and Syria and made important progress in mediating the relations between Syria and Iraq. Syrian and Iraqi heads of state will hold talks in Jordan in the not-too-distant future. President al-Asad has met PLO Political Department Director Faruq Gaddumi, and openly expressed that he would not oppose the return of 'Arafat's armed forces to the southern part of Lebanon.

In the course of improving the relations between various Arab countries in breadth, troubles have arisen in the relations between Syria and Lebanon. In late 1985, Syria promoted the peace negotiation among Lebanon's three major militia organizations; however, it was nipped in the bud because of strong opposition by the Christian sect. Nor did Lebanonese Prime Minister Rashid Karami support the tripartite negotiation. Syria is rather disappointed in the development of Lebanon's situation, but nothing can be done because of the containment of many factors.

RECONCILIATION AMONG DIFFERENT PLO FACTIONS IS FERMENTING. As soon as Jordan and Palestine parted company, 'Arafat immediately tried to improve the relations among all factions of Palestinian organizations. Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid proposed on 8 April 1986 that a reconciliation meeting be held in Algeria for all PLO factions. The Al-Fatah headed by 'Arafat took the lead in response to the proposal, while other factions have also approved it with conditions. At present, preparations are under way through various channels of negotiation. However, as the factors in the disputes among various PLO factions are complicated and long-standing, it will not be easy to realize reconciliation.

ARAB SUMMIT MEETING ABORTED AGAIN. Since the 1982 12th session of the Arab summit was held in Fes, the 13th session of the summit has been postponed time and again.

After the U.S. attack on Libya in 1986, the ministers of foreign affairs agreed to call the summit on 3 May. However, because serious disputes exist on such major issues as the U.S.-Syrian conflict and the Iran-Iraq war, the meeting had to be "indefinitely postponed." Although a momentum of wide contacts and strengthening unity between various Arab countries has emerged at present, internal contradictions between them remain complicated and difficult to deal with. It will be very difficult for them to adopt unanimous position on many important issues, which will in turn weaken their strength in opposing Israel's aggressive expansion.

2. Israel Couples Threats With Promises, Getting All the More Furious, and Is Threatening Military Action Against Syria.

With U.S. support, Israel is adopting the strategy of coupling threats with promises towards the Arab countries. During his U.S. visit, Israel's Prime Minister Shimon Peres dished up the "Mideast Marshall Plan," and proposed that Western developed countries provide a development fund of between $25 and $30 billion, of which $7 billion is to be used in aiding such countries as Egypt, Jordan, Syria and Israel, which are having financial difficulties, in an attempt to make economic cooperation a breakthrough in realizing the political negotiation and peace coexistence between Israel and the Arab countries. Many Arab countries have pointed out that this is "an evil plot with aid funds in one hand, and Phantom planes in the other," in an attempt to rope in some Arab countries so as to isolate the PLO and other Arab countries.

Meanwhile, the United States and Israel have continuously claimed publicly that Syria has participated in terrorist activities, and have openly plotted to launch a "limited and lightening war" on Syria. Israel is actively making war preparations, mobilizing all those in the reserve service, and calling back all military officers studying abroad. It has deployed 27,000 troops and 1,700 tanks in the areas south of the border of Lebanon.

When the United States succeeded in its second air raid in Libya, Israel was encourged because Washington has condemned Syria for going in for terrorism. Under the pretext of striking blows at terrorists, Israel has threatened war against Syria, and its purpose is to greatly reduce Syria's military strength, to sabotage Syria's efforts to realize its "strategic balance" with Israel, and to further force Syria, Jordan, and Lebanon to make peace with Israel on this basis.

As a tit-for-tat measure, Syria has reinforced its military deployment in Golan and Bekaa, increased the number of troops stationed in Lebanon from 20,000 to 50,000, and stepped up its import of new-type guided missiles, MiG-29's, and tanks from the Soviet Union. The Syrian leader has said that should Syria come under attack, the Syrian Army would counterattack at any place with whatever weapons they have. Meanwhile, Syria is doing its best to relax its tense relations with the United States and Israel. The Syrian leader says, Syria does not go in for terrorism; on the contrary, it is the target of terrorism. Syria will do its best to set free the hostages held in Lebanon. Syria has no intention of being antagonistic toward the United States, but is has to look to its self-defence. The Syrian leader pointed out on 18 May: "The tense situation between Syria and Israel has relaxed somewhat." Because of Syria's military strength, which is not to be neglected, and the clauses on military cooperation in the Syrian-Soviet friendship treaty, the United States and Israel have to think twice before they take any action. Israel's Prime Minister Peres has also stated that Israel has no intention of attacking Syria," "The danger of war between Israel and Syria does not exist at present." Thus, the touch-and-go military conflict between Israel and Syria is relaxed for the time being. However, the possibility of Israeli-Syrian confrontation remains; for Israel will not turn over a new leaf, it is still ready to resort to force toward Syria and Jordan.

In October this year, Peres will transfer his power to the Likud Party's Shamir. Whether Peres will go in for a new military venture in order to gain some ground in delaying his transfer of power, and whether the Likud will adopt tougher actions, we shall have to wait and see.

3. U.S-Soviet Contention Grows More and More Intense

The United States is actively pushing its "Reaganism" in the Third World. In his State of the Union Message and speeches on foreign policy, Reagan has repeatedly stressed "regional conflicts." And U.S.-Soviet contention in the Middle East has intensified since the beginning of this year.

The United States is doing its utmost to maintain its superior position in the Middle East. It has repelled the Soviet Union, in an attempt to manipulate the Middle East peace talks itself. In military affairs, the United States has also beefed up its deployment in the Middle East, set up a "counter-Soviet strategic cooperative system," and held frequent military exercises, getting itself ready to be engaged in "low intensity confrontation." Reagan announced in February this year that the United States would keep access rt 16 seaways under its control, a great number of which are in the Middle East and its neighboring areas. On 24 March and 15 April respectively, the United States attacked Libya under the pretext of punishing terrorism, in an attempt to crush the Qadhdhafi government, and to dislodge the Soviet foothold in North Africa. Meanwhile, the United States has openly threatened Syria and Iran, thus, the Mideast situation has grown extremely tense.

Soviet focus on foreign affairs is on the U.S.-Soviet summit talks and restricting the arms race, and it is doing its best to avoid direct confrontation with the United States in the Middle East. Superficially, the Soviet Union is fairly prudent. However, it is taking advantage of the opportunity of the Arab countries' objection to the U .S. starting a war in the Middle East, and actively infiltrating the Middle East. The Soviet Union continues to support Syria and Libya on a large scale, supplying them with new-type weaponry. In late May, high ranking Syrian and Libyan leders simultaneously visited the Soviet Union, holding discussions on the possibility of a U.S. and Israel attack on Syrian and PLO bases. In addition, the Soviet Union has also adopted a flexible strategy toward Israel, in an attempt to trade with Israel and the United States for consent to its participation in the Mideast peace process with the relaxation of the emigration of Jews in the Soviet Union to Israel, and even establishing normal diplomatic relations with the latter.

4. The Chain Reaction in the Oil Price Slump

Oil is the life blood of the Mideast economy. The world oil price has been falling since 1985, dealing a heavy blow to the economies of the Mideast countries, and intensifying a series of social contradictions. Unstable factors in the political situation in some countries are growing.

The oil income of the six Gulf Corporation Council states dropped from $144.5 billion in 1980 to $68 billion in 1984, and it continued to drop significantly in 1985 and 1986. Saudi Arabia, the "god of wealth" in the Middle East had a financial deficit as high as $12.9 billion in 1985. Most seriously affected are Algeria, Libya, Egypt, Iran, and Iraq. Oil prices will not rise very much for the time being, and the oil producing countries will be in financial difficulties for a comparatively long period; such a condition will force the majority of Mideast states to cut back their budgets, and to reduce the scope of contruction, eventually boosting unemployment rates.

Some countries have reduced their price subsidies because of their financial difficulties, resulting in universal price spiraling, complaints from the masses, and the intensifying of class contradictions as well as the growth of internal contradictions among those in power; the omen of political instability is making itself felt. The extreme religious forces is some countries are on the rise as a result of this opportunity.

Some of the Arab press estimates that the Middle East, the "hot spot," will "become all the more dangerous with the coming of the rainy season and the rising tenperature." The Middle East political climate is always tempestuous, with one storm succeeding another before the previous one is pacified. We can assert that quite a long while from now, the Mideast situation will continue to develop tortuously in turbulence.

YE JIANYING'S FORMER SON-IN-LAW REPORTEDLY JAILED

[Text] Hong Kong, July 1 (AFP) — A former son-in-law of top Chinese official Marshal Ye Jianying is in a Beijing jail awaiting trial for drug trafficking and gold smuggling, reports here said Tuesday.

Liu Shikun, a renowned Chinese pianist and formerly married to Marshal Ye's daughter, movie director Ling Zi, was arrested in Beijing in May, the local China-watching magazine CHENG MING reported. The couple are now divorced.

The magazine, quoting sources in the Chinese capital, said the authorities had hesitated to take action against Mr. Liu as "he was the pampered son-in-law of Marshal Ye."

The arrest was only made after Marshal Ye's health deteriorated, the monthly alleged, adding that a scheduled performance here by Mr. Liu with China's central symphony orchestra in September had been cancelled.

TAIWANESE DEFECTOR URGES DEVELOPMENT OF DEMOCRACY

HK020746 Hong Kong AFP in English 0732 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (AFP) -- A Taiwan pilot who defected to the mainland in 1983 has criticized corruption in China and called for further development of democracy, a leading Chinese daily said here Wednesday.

Li Dawei said that despite vast improvements since Deng Xiaoping's policies were introduced in 1978, China still carried a heavy burden of feudalism, the CHINA YOUTH DAILY said.

"As the deputy head of the military academy, even I have some people come to give me presents in an attempt to develop special ties. I curse them and drive them away," Mr. Li was quoted as saying. "Some leaders treat their official powers like a personal belonging. They speak about personal feelings and 'face' but not principles."

"The fundamental way to change this is to develop a high level of democracy and a complete legal system at the same time as developing the economy," Mr. Li was quoted as saying.

Analysts said Mr. Li's call for "democracy" was in keeping with current efforts by China's top leaders to fight corruption among leading cadres by increasing supervision by the masses.

The efforts have recently sparked an academic debate about the need for "political reform" to accompany economic reforms, but the concrete details of the reform have yet to be discussed in the Chinese press, the analysts said.

In a related report, the CHINA NEWS SERVICE said that Mr. Li and Huang Zhicheng, who became the first Taiwan pilot to cross to the mainland since the 1950's in 1981, had both been given new posts.

Mr. Li was now a deputy director of the Military Department in the Central Military Academy, while Mr. Huang was deputy director of the Construction Department in the Air Force Academy, the report said.

SCIENTISTS SEND 'COMPUTERIZED TEXT' VIA SATELLITE

[Text] Beijing, 29 Jun (XINHUA) — Scientists of the Academy of Sciences of China computer center and the PLA General Staff headquarters Signal Corps Department recently made use of China's telecommunication, radio, and television satellites and 0520 microcomputers to successfully carry out an experiment of sending computerized texts from Beijing to Kunming and from Beijing to Urumqi. This is another important progress made by China in developing satellite telecommunications following the successful transmission of radio and television programs and telephone signals via satellites.

The use of computers in telecommunications is an integration of computing techniques with telecommunication technology. This is an important part of modern information technology. Linking one computer with other computers via communication satellites has been of great importance in developing communication between computers abroad. It is also of great potential significance in developing communication between computers in China.

In carrying out this experiment, the Chinese scientists successfully made use of ordinary telephone dialing circuits to link satellite signal channels and send texts in Chinese characters as well as in internationally recognized standard codes from one computer to another. They also fully utilised the special characteristics of China's digital communication satellite system to successfully carry out high-speed long-distance data exchange between computers. To successfullly carry out the experiment, the department assigned with the task developed the special software needed to send computerized texts via satellite. It also developed the necessary facilities to link computers with the satellite communication satellite system. The entire system functioned properly during the experiment. More than 1 million bytes of data were accurately sent and received.

According to experts, the capacity of China's communication satellites will greatly expand in coming years. With the rapid development of computer application, the development of communications by using computers becomes an increasingly important task. The experiment's success paves the way and opens up a broad vista for exchanging computerized messages and information via China's communication, radio, and television satellites.

HONGQI CARRIES ARTICLE ON IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

HK010952 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0343 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Report: "HONGQI Says That CPC Is Determined To Achieve a Fundamental Turn for the Better in Party Style" — ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 1 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) — Today's HONGQI publishes an editorial article saying that in order to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style, the CPC will first grasp the work firmly for 2 years and will then continue to tackle it for the next 10 years. It will use practical actions and actual results to prove to the public that it is not just paying lip service.

The article says that during the CPC conference held in September last year, and particularly since the central organ meeting, which was held in early January this year and which was attended by 8,000 people, the central committee has dealt strictly with the work of correcting party style and has been very determined in achieving a fundamental turn for the better in both party style and the general mood of society. It therefore adopted a series of important measures. The leading organs and cadres played an exemplary role. Beginning with themselves, they discarded the work style of paying lip service but doing less. Starting from specific cases, they seriously investigated and dealt with the major and important cases. Now, compared to the case last year and in previous years, the party style and general mood of society have been greatly improved.

The article stressed: China's current reforms and the policy of opening up will not be changed.

The article holds: Though the unhealthy tendencies, economic crimes and other criminal activities are related and the practice, of opening up, they are not inevitable results. It is wrong to feel doubts about reforms and the policy of opening up based just on this. On the other hand, since the causes of economic and other crimes will continue to exist for a long time to come, we must for a long period and frequently wage struggles against and hit at economic and other crimes.

The article says that some people think that reforms have given rise to unhealthy tendencies, or even think that more problems have developed following party rectification. This is a one-sided understanding and not realistic. It should be the case that through the in-depth development of party rectification and reforms, problems concerning party style are further exposed, which makes us become determined in solving these problems. And the aim in solving these problems is just to promote reforms and ensure that reforms, the policy of opening up, and activities and invigoration develop along a healthy path. We must understand thoroughly that the rectification of party style and strengthening of the party organization are long-term tasks that accompany reforms throughout the course of development. Therefore, we must be determined in our understanding and our actions: First, we must be determined in implementing reforms, the policy of opening up, and activities of invigoration; second, we must be determined in rectifying party style. In our actual practice, we must pay close attention to the revolutionary enthusiasm of cadres and the masses. We must not confuse some inevitable mistakes committed in the course of reforms with unhealthy tendencies. Similarly, we must not let people engage in criminal activities under the banner of reform, or let them escape punishment by the party and the state.

ADMINISTRATION ESTABLISHES FINANCE COMPANY IN SHENZHEN

[Text] Hong Kong, June 29 (AFP) -- China's State Administration of Exchange Control has approved the setting up of the country's first finance company in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone (SEZ), the pro-Beijing WEN WEI PO reported on Sunday.

The company, to be run by the Shenzhen SEZ Development Co. is to take deposits in the form of foreign exchange and will offer various other financial service geared to foreign-exchange operations, the report said.

The Shenzhen SEZ Development Co. has built up commercial relationships with more than 170 overseas corporations since it was set up in late 1981, the report noted. The Shenzhen SEZ, bordering Hong Kong, is one of four such zones created by China in 1980 to attract foreign capital and technology.

CUSTOMS RULES ON ADVERTISEMENT ITEMS REVISED

OW012328 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1357 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 1 Jul (XINHUA) -- In order to promote foreign trade and international economic and technical cooperation, the PRC Customs General Administrations has revised and reissued the "Rules of the People's Republic of China on Supervision and Control Over Imports and Exports of Samples and Advertisement Items."

The new rules relax the control over samples and advertisement items and raise the limit for exemption from customs duties. According to the new rules companies and enterprises approved by the state for doing import and export business are no longer required to present import or export licenses to customs when importing or exporting samples and advertisement items, and customs will inspect and release such samples and advertisement items on the basis of the customs declaration forms for imports or exports filled out by the companies or enterprises concerned.

As for the imports and exports of samples or advertisement items by other enterprises and institutions, if they are in reasonable quantities and no more than 1,000 yuan in value as determined by customs, no import and export licenses need be presented to customs. Customs will inspect and release such samples and advertisement items on the basis of the certificates issued by the competent authorities concerned. If they are not in reasonable quantities or if their value is over 1,000 yuan as determined by customs, they will be inspected and released on the basis of the documents of approval issued by the economic and trade administrative departments.

For samples and advertisement items that belong to the category of products prohibited by the state for import or export or belong to the category of controlled imported or exported commodities requiring import or export licenses, it is imperative that import or export licenses be applied for according to the pertinent regulations established by the state, unless approval to waive the license requirement is obtained from customs. The original rules state that a duty should be paid according to the pertinent regulations if the total value of a batch of samples or advertisement items exceeds 50 yuan. The new rules stipulate that a batch of samples or advertisement items valued less than 200 yuan is exempt from duty, and that if it is over 200 yuan, the excess portion requires payment of duty and product tax (or value-added tax).

The new rules have been put into effect today.

FUJIAN TOURIST ZONE FOR TAIWAN COMPATRIOTS PLANNED

OW011200 Beijing XINHUA in English 1147 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Fuzhou, July 1 (XINHUA) -- A tourist zone is planned for Taiwan compatriots in Quanzhou, an ancient cultural and port city in the coastal province of Fujian, southeast China, according to local authorities.

A group has been set up to take charge of the construction of the zone, centered on Chongwu town. The provincial and municipal authorities have jointly repaired the town wall and built a road to it with an investment of 400,000 yuan. They plan to build the zone into a summer resort by opening a swimming beach and a coastal recreation area and beautifying the environment.

Additional attractions are on the bay bordering Nanan and Jingjiang Counties, including a memorial hall, mausoleum and other places connected with national hero Zheng Chenggong (1624-1662), who drove the Dutch imperialists out of the island of Taiwan. Included in the zone are also a 2,070-meter-long stone bridge with a history of 848 years and a monastery with a 1,000-handed statute of Guanyin (goddess of mercy). Many of the relics have been repaired over the past few years.

Since Quanzhou and Taiwan are separated by only a narrow strip of water, about 40 percent of the people on Taiwan Island have their ancestral homes in the mainland city. The city plans to build 10 more tourist zones in the next five years.

BEIJING GET-TOGETHER MARKS CPC ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- More than 20,000 veteran officials gathered in the Great Hall of the People here this evening to mark the 65th anniversary of the founding of the Communist Party of China (CPC).

The CPC, China's leading party, was founded on July 1, 1921, in Shanghai. Among the celebrants were Chinese party, government and Army leaders. But most of them were veteran communists who have retired from the leading posts. Some of them took part in the first revolutionary civil war (1924-27) and the world-famous long march (1934-35), and some made outstanding contributions in this war of resistance against Japanese aggression (1937-45) or in the liberation war (1945-49). All of them have made important contributions to the people's liberation and the building of new China.

In the company of their families, these veterans watched performances of songs, dances, music, acrobatics, traditional Beijing opera and feature films, and played chess and bridge.

The colorful gathering was arranged jointly by the Organization Department under the CPC Central Committee and the Ministry of Labor and Personnel.

BANK TO EXTEND LOANS FOR HOUSING CONSTRUCTION

OW121406 Beijing XINHUA in English 1355 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 12 (XINHUA) -- The People's Construction Bank of China will extend loans up to one billion yuan this year for building apartments to sell to urban workers, the ECONOMIC DAILY reported today.

In an accompanying commentary, the paper praised the bank's plan, which breaks with China's dominant urban housing policy since the 1949 liberation -- assigning apartments and charging negligible rents.

"In the past, China's housing policy was a form of public welfare," the paper said. "But it has been a heavy burden on the state treasury and has not generated funds for new construction -- and still far too many people don't have decent housing."

Beginning in 1979, the government began reforming its housing policy to encourage increased construction, allowing state-owned companies to enter the real estate business, buying land and building apartments for sale.

Although 80 cities in China now allow workers to buy apartments, the practice is still considered experimental and individual owners cannot sell them at will. A 50-square-meter, two-room urban apartment -- which usually means two bedrooms, a hall, a lavatory and a kitchen -- typically sells for about 10,000 yuan.

Buyers are expected to pay one-third of the price. Work units and state agencies pay the rest. Generally, a down payment of at least 500 yuan is required. Usually the worker can pay for the apartment over then or 20 years, with no interest charged.

Rental apartments are inexpensive -- usually under ten yuan a month for two rooms. But work units building rentals have not been able to keep up with their workers' housing needs.

Altogether, the paper said, urban workers have bought 2.26 million square meters of living space over the last five years. Since the housing reform began, the construction bank has loaned 3.9 billion yuan for building housing designed for sale. So far, 1.3 billion yuan has been repaid.

COMMISSION STRESSES COORDINATING KEY PROJECTS

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jun (XINHUA) -- In organizing and managing key construction projects in the first half of this year, the State Planning commission has repeatedly urged all localities and departments in charge of capital construction to effectively step up coordination, supervision, and inspection of key construction projects in order to promptly discover and solve problems cropping up in the course of construction and to ensure the completion of key construction projects for the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Since the beginning of this year, the State Planning Commission has further coordinated with the State Council departments concerned and with planning commissions and urban and rural construction departments in all localities, and drawn up a number of provisional regulations on intensified management of capital construction projects, calling on these departments and localities to establish and improve management systems and networks and assign liaison personnel to all key construction projects for promptly transmitting instructions, accurately reflecting conditions, resolutely implementing policies, and handling problems with decisiveness. The State Planning Commission has also regularly held coordination meetings or set up on-the-spot offices to help quarters concerned solve problems caused by lack of coordination in the course of construction. Moreover, the State Planning Commission has enforced a biannual general inspection and management briefing system for all key construction projects in the country. The general inspection and management briefing for the first half of this year was held recently.

The number of key projects organized by the state within a reasonable construction period has increased from 169 last year to 190 this year. Judging from the recent general inspection and management briefing, although the construction pace of these projects has been faster that the national average, problems remain in planning because the tendency of overextended investment in fixed assets in the past 2 years has not been brought under control, and the financial and material resources the state has concentrated on these projects can only meet basic needs. A number of projects involving a large construction scale and advanced technology are having coordination difficulties with departments concerned in tackling problems in designing and construction. In this connection, the State Planning Commission has urged all localities and departments concerned to pay close attention to the work in the following four fields:

It it necessary to earnestly conduct an inventory of projects under construction and to make determined efforts to suspend or postpone projects with inadequate construction conditions or poor economic results, as well as unnecessary redundant projects, in order to release some financial and material resources to complete key construction project.

In is necessary to step by step ensure funds, materials, equipment, labor forces, and coordination with relevant quarters for key construction projects, especially those that have been started this year. It is necessary to set a reasonable construction period and strictly enforce the investment responsibility system. Projects that lack the conditions for meeting a reasonable set construction deadline can only be regarded as reserve projects, and should not be started.

As for key projects and other large and medium-sized projects that are to be put into production this year, it is necessary to do a good finishing job, make adequate preparations for production, and earnestly complete acceptance tests. It is especially important to conduct an evaluation of the completed project and receive proper feedback in order to provide useful reference for future construction of similar projects.

In order to ensure the supply of funds, materials, and equipment for key projects and their auxiliary facilities, all localities and departments should actively coordinate with one another in regulating material surpluses and deficiencies, aside from the contracted supplies by departments concerned. No department or unit is allowed to divert, for other purposes, funds and materials intended for these projects and their auxiliary facilities.

BEIJING STUDENTS VOLUNTEER LABOR OVER SUMMER

[Text] Beijing, June 30 (XINHUA) -- More than 25,000 of Beijing's University students will do voluntary labor, technical consulting and other jobs throughout China over summer vacation this year, the BEIJING DAILY reported today.

The paper said the number of applicants for the work far exceeded the number of available jobs for the vacation period, which begins between July 10 and 20 and ends in late August. Beijing has 62 universities and colleges with nearly 123,000 undergraduates and 16,000 graduate students.

Organized by the Youth League and the Students' Federation, the summer program will send 1,000 Quinghua University students to work at the Guanting reservoir, in the Shijingshan power plant in Beijing and on four major projects in Tangshan City in Hebei Province.

Students from a dozen other colleges, including the Beijing Engineering University, the Beijing medical college, will study conditions and work in remote mountain areas in Hebei, Jiangxi, Shaanxi and Shanxi Provinces.

Graduate students from Beijing University and the Beijing People's University will train teachers, managers and legal workers in Yunnan and Guizhou Provinces and the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region, one of the most undeveloped areas of China, in the northwest.

Undergraduates and graduate students from the Beijung Agricultural Institute and the Agricultural Engineering Institute will teach farming techniques in poor areas of Gansu Province, in northwest China.

Another 6,400 students from 40 colleges will lecture on culture and industrial and farming techniques to soldiers in the People's Liberation Army while learning about military affairs and revolutionary traditions.

Students of drama and film will arrange for performances and promote amateur cultural activities in factories and the countryside while they study conditions and work there.

AGRICULTURAL MODERNIZATION PROGRAM LAUNCHED

HK010428 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 1 Jul 86 p 1

[By staff reporter Zhu Ling]

[Text] The Chinese Academy of Agricultural Sciences is launching a programme to develop advanced technology for the modernization of the nation's agricultural production.

Professor Liu Zhicheng, the academy's vice-president, told CHINA DAILY yesterday that the plan was to equip the country's agricultural sector with computer and bio-technology "which suits our actual conditions."

The move, he said, was aimed at making efficient use of the country's limited arable land and encouraging the cultivation of more and higher-quality crops.

China has 130 million hectares of cultivated land, but while its population is increasing by more than 10 million a year, its cultivated land is dropping by 970,000 hectares annually, mainly because of the rapid expansion of township industries and rural housing.

"While the State is making the Land Law, which has just been approved by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress for operation in 1987, we must focus our efforts to develop new and high technologies which are long overdue," Liu said.

A bio-technology research centre was officially launched in the academy last week, he said. The academy is China's highest research body in agricultural science.

"It will be trying to alter natural reproduction to produce new strains of plants and animals that are of higher quality, have higher productivity and are disease resistant" he said.

The vice-president said China would give priority to the research and development of biology techniques that could be translated into productivity in the short term. He said such techniques would play a decisive role in the country's agricultural development by the end of this century.

Between 1981 and 1985, developments in agricultural science contributed an estimated 35 percent to the total rise in agricultural output. In the next five years, they must contribute at least 50 percent, Liu said. The professor also stressed the need for extensive research into such techniques as hybridization of crops, artifical insemination, and genetically engineered vaccines.

The academy will step up its exchanges with foreign colleagues by establishing 10 laboratories in which foreign specialists will be employed to help with research work.

As for computer technology, which is still rarely used in rural China except for some state farms and a few counties mainly in Zhejiang Province, Liu said that his academy would develop and popularize its use in irrigation, fertilizer spreading, disease prevention and pest control as well as output forecasting and plan drawing.

He said an immediate and long-term plan was being drafted to apply computer technology to every sector of rural farming.

The Chinese Academy of Agricultural Sciences, staffed by about 5,000 agro-scientists and researchers, has so far achieved important results in its attempts to improve the land, prevent and treat wheat diseases, and improve artificial insemination techniques, Liu said.

The academy has also developed more than 50 new tracing chemicals that China used to have to import. These chemicals are used in the study of insecticides, herbicides and chemical fertilizers and their impact on insects, grass and public health.

Since 1981, the academy has increased the use of computers, setting up computerized data banks to facilitate the development of new strains of rice, wheat, corn, silkworms, poultry and livestock.

INCREASE IN JAN-MAY STEEL OUTPUT REPORTED

OW111326 Beijing XINHUA in English 1226 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 11 (XINHUA) -- China produced 21.2 million tons of steel in the first five months of this year, 10.5 percent more than in the same period of last year, according to the Ministry of Metallurgical Industry.

Steel increase is higher than for the country's industry as a whole, a ministry official said.

During the period, 16.8 million tons of rolled steel, which is in short supply, was produced. The increase was 9.6 percent. Almost 20 million tons of pig iron was turned out, 13.8 percent more than in the same period of last year.

The official said that responsible for the increase was the Baoshan steelworks in Shanghai, which went into production last September. It has a daily output of 6,000 tons of steel and 7,000 tons of pig iron. China reduced 46.7 million tons of steel last year. The goal for this year is 49 million tons and 44.8 million tons iron. Officials of the metallurgiccal industry said they were optimistic the goal could be met.

LI PENG CHAIRS ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION MEETING

[Text] According to our reporter Xu Yongqing, the State Council's Environmental Protection Committee held its seventh meeting in Beijing today to discuss, in particular, the control of water pollution and related questions. Vice Premier Li Peng presided over the meeting and delivered a speech.

Some 32 billion cubic meters of waste water are discharged yearly in the entire country, three quarters being industrial waste water. Most was discharged without treatment causing considerable economic loss. The problem of ground water pollution in cities is also very serious. According to records monitored in 18 cities which rely on ground water as their main water source, 17 cities have contaminated ground water problems. Formulating a technological policy to control water pollution and adopting measures to timely reduce such pollution are impending environmental protection tasks of our country.

Today's meeting examined, discussed, and approved in principle the provisions of a technological policy aimed at controlling water pollution and regulations on controlling ship salvaging operations to prevent environmental pollution.

LI PENG OPENS ORDNANCE INDUSTRY PRODUCTS FAIR

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) — An industrial fair showing technology and products China's ordnance industry develops and makes for civilian use opened at the Beijing Agricultural Exhibition Center today.

Vice-Premier Li Peng cut the ribbon for the 10-day fair, sponsored by the Ordnance Industry Ministry. Taking part are 300 defense industry enterprises, research institutes and colleages from across the country. On display are items including a 36-ton mining dump-truck built under a Sino-U.S. cooperation plan, heavy-duty trucks and pickups, oil drilling equipment, sports guns and ammunition, motorcycles, refrigerators and cameras. There are also picture and models showing technical results achieved by ordnance enterprises in such areas as metallurgy, machine-building, electronics, energy, transport, light industry and environmental protection.

The ordnance industry now produces more than 700 types of goods for civilian use, compared with 64 six years ago. The output value of these goods accounts for one-third of the industry's total.

300 Factories Participate in Fair

[By st[illegible] reporter Zhu Ling]

[Text] The country's largest-ever ordnance industry technology fair opened in Beijing yesterday and is expected to "give enormous impetus to the industry's drive to switch from military to civilian production," according to Zou Jiahua, Minister of Ordnance Industry.

The 10-day fair at the Beijung Agricultural Exhibition Centre is intended to be a "grand review" of achievements since the industry's massive reorganization in 1980, he added.

The fair also aims to attract worldwide attention to the industry's need for advanced foreign technology to upgrade its civilian role, the minister said.

Nearly 300 of China's major weapon factories and research institutes are displaying 3,000 items involving communications, satellite recovery, robots, lasers and night visibility devices.

The former manufacturers of tanks and machine-guns are also showing 2,400 civilian products ranging from motorcycles and furniture to cameras and sun-sensitive glasses.

The ordnance industry is embarking on a four-pronged drive to further adapt devence technology to domestic and international markets in the face of a sharp drop in military requirements this year.

The ministry's ambitious programme is to reorganize its management, establish export-oriented bases, open up further to advanced foreign technology and equipment, and launch co-operative ventures with civilian industries.

Li Liqing, vice-minister, told CHINA DAILY the ministry was significantly breaking down administrative barriers by launching 24 giant trade groups to manage the overall planning and production of 24 major civilian products, including motorcycles, heavy trucks, light vehicles, metallurgical machinery, clothes manufacturing equipment, household electrical appliances and soft drinks.

The groups will take over management powers from the ministry's administrative bureaux, a major shift from administrative control to direct individual management of trade, thus cutting red tape and duplication of imports.

The ministry is also preparing for a boom in overseas sales by grooming at least 10 of its 190 armament factories as export-oriented production bases.

The first batch of three has just been approved for specializing in exports of motorcycles, plastic machinery and telephones. The motorcycle factory in Chongqing used to turn out bullets.

In the meantime, the ministry is planning to increase its imports of advanced foreign technology and production lines over the next five years to ensure that civilian production can take off at a higher level, Li said.

He said the ministry was negotiating with companies from the United States, West Germany, Japan, Spain, Italy and Holland on imports of technology for the production of heavy trucks, luxury coaches, paints, foamed plastics and beer, through funds raised by itself.

Substantive negotiations, are going on between the ministry and the Benz Company to import West German technology and production lines for 8-20 ton trucks.

In the past five years, the industry has imported 140 items of advanced technology and equipment, including technology for manufacturing motorcycles from Japan, refrigerating technology from Italy, and technology for manufacturing trucks of up to 36 tons from the United States and West Germany.

Ministers from the industries of ordnance and metallurgy are currently putting their heads together for a joint effort to boost the country's annual steel output to 60 million tons by 1990.

Weapons factories are also to manufacture drilling equipment and vehicles for the petroleum industry prospecting in desert areas, Li said.

The output value of civilian products now accounts for 31 per cent of the ordnance industry total. The percentage will soar to 70 percent by 1990, Zou Jiahua said.

FANG YI ON NONFERROUS METALS DEVELOPMENT

OW301329 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1429 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jun (XINHUA) -- At the closing session of a national nonferrous metals conference today, State Councillor Fang Yi noted that it is necessary to develop the nonferrous metals industry with relentless efforts, so that the role of China's nonferrous metals resources can be fully developed.

Fang Yi said: Since its establishment, the China Nonferrous Metals Import and Export Corporation, through its efforts and those of its 1.26 million workers and staff, has attained a notable result in creating a situation for the balanced and steady development of the nonferrous metals industry. However, because the supply of nonferrous metals still falls far short of the needs for development of the national economy, the state annually must spend a great deal of foreign exchange to import them. This does not match China's position of being abundant in nonferrous metals resources. This situation will restrain development of the national economy if it remains unchanged.

Fang Yi stressed: In developing the nonferrous metals industry, we must adhere to the principles "everyone participates in developing it" and "the initiative of the state, collective, and the individual should all be encouraged," and must enhance the initiative in all quarters through different levels and various forms of lateral economic associations.

When speaking of the focus in developing the nonferrous metals industry, Fang Yi emphasized: Top priority should be give to the development of aluminum. He said: The importance of aluminum is next only to iron and steel.

The conditions in China for developing the aluminum industry are quite favorable, for we abound not only in aluminum resources, but also in coal and hydropower. Fang Yi called on the Nonferrous Metals Import and Export Corporation not to become an administrative organization.

At today's meeting, the directors of managers of six enterprises, including the northeast light alloy processing factory, signed protocols with the Nonferrous Metals Import and Export Corporation on the quota responsibility system of directors and managers. This system is another reform carried out by the corporation on the basis of implementation of the system of directors and managers assuming full responsibility.

The national nonferrous metals conference opened on 23 June in Beijing.

HU QIAOMU VISITS SHANGHAI EXHIBIT ON CPC HISTORY

OW020101 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] After adjustment and enrichment, a supplementary exhibition at the First CPC National Congress Memorial Hall in Shanghai will officially open to the public on 1 July.

To respect history and to comprehensively show the First CPC National Congress by seeking truth from facts, the new supplementary exhibition includes for the first time portraits of all 13 participants of the congress and brief biographies on them. They were Mao Zedong, Dong Biwu, Chen Tanqiu, He Shuheng, Wang Jinwei, Deng Enming, Li Da, Li Hanjun, Zhang Gyotao, Liu Renjing, Bao Huiseng, Chen Congbo, and Zhou Fohai. The explanation accompanying the portraits states: Most of the 13 participants were revolutionary intellectuals who accepted Marxism. They knew the historical task of the proletariat, did their utmost to integrate with the worker masses, and became vanguard proletarian fighters. A few were opportunists who were later expelled from the party or became renegades or traitors.

On 21 June, Comrade Hu Qiaomu visited the supplementary exhibition and wrote an inscription for it.

CHEN PIXIAN ADDRESSES LEGAL STUDIES CLASS

[Excerpts] Beijing, 30 Jun (XINHUA) -- The opening ceremony of the first study class on common knowledge of law for bureau directors of the party Central Committee and state organs was held this morning in the auditorium of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee's Party School. Chen Pixian, secretary of the CPC Central Committee's Secretariat and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, attended and addressed the ceremony. He pointed out: This study class will certainly help promote the popularization of knowledge about law throughout the country and it has direct bearing on the strengthening of the legal system.

Summarizing the work of popularizing common knowledge about law throughout the country in the previous period, Chen Pixian fully affirmed the practice of principal leading comrades of 24 provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central government, and that of the PLA and the People's Armed Police in taking the lead in studying and applying laws.

He emphasized the importance of leading cadres' taking the lead in studying laws.

This study class is jointly run by the CPC Central Committee's Propaganda Department, Ministry of Justice, the party committee of organs directly under the CPC Central Committee, and the party committee of central state organs. This is the very first time since nationwide liberation that leading cadres have concentrated their time and energy on law study. Over 520 are attending the 4-week first class.

Wang Daming, deputy director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, presided over the opening ceremony. Zou Yu, minister of justice, attended.

COMMUNICATIONS MINISTER INSPECTS SICHUAN SITES

HK020253 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] Communications Minister Qian Yonghang recently went deep into eight prefectures and cities of our province to inspect in detail the situation in building bridges and roads and harnessing rivers. He put forward many valuable views.

He affirmed that the outlook of communications of our province has undergone a relatively big change and expressed satisfaction with the work done, achievements scored, experience gained, the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and reform being carried out.

Regarding our province's future work, he pointed out:

1. It is necessary to adhere to reform and to put reform above everything else. Through reform, we must impel development.

2. It is essential to strengthen the key project construction. With emphasis laid on the central part of Sichuan, we must lay stress on building roads. We must help the western part develop shipping work and fully use the strong points of the original water transport to improve the outlook of the old liberated areas.

3. It is imperative to continue doing well in grasping the building of two civilizations, particularly the building of spiritual civilization.

4. It is necessary to work out a long-term plan for communications. On the basis of carrying out the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must carry out the plan for development by the year 2000.

WEIGHTS-MEASURES LAW BECOMES EFFECTIVE 1 JULY

OW220831 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1105 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 21 Jun (XINHUA) — The "Weights and Measures Law of the People's Republic of China" will become effective on 1 July. According to the State Bureau of Weights and Measures, all preparations have been made for the implementation of the law.

The law was adopted at the 12th Session of the 6th NPC Standing Committee, and promulgated by Presidential Decree No 28.

Since the law was promulgated, people's congresses and governments at all levels, as well as all departments under the State Council, have attached great importance to it and have propagated and studied it in one way or another. They have also taken positive steps to create the necessary conditions for implementing the law, such as setting up enforcement organs, training the necessary personnel, purchasing additional equipment for enforcing the law, and so forth.

Great progress has been achieved this year in promoting the official weight and measurment units throughout the country. Journalistic, publishing, educational and statistical departments have taken the initiative in using the official weight and measurement units. Over 4,000 stores and markets in cities and rural areas have experimented with the change of adopting their new weight and measurement system. Food and edible oil coupons, as well as commodity labels in Beijing, Tianjin, Shanghai and other large cities have started suing the official weight and measurement units. To promote the implementation of the law, relevant government departments have accomplished a whole series of preparatory tasks. They have drafted a dozen or so specific regulations and rules for the law's implementation, assessed and licensed enterprises which manufacture measuring equipment or provide the maintenance and repairing services; thoroughly rechecked the standards and the standard value transmit systems [biao zhun liang zhi chuan di xi tong 2871 0102 6852 0237 0278 6677 4762 4827] of all technical organs; and trained the first group of supervisors. To facilitate the implementation of the law, the State Bureau of Weights and Measures sponsored a class in early June for directors of various provincial and municipal weights and measures bureaus to study the law and unify their understanding of certain major policies for implementing law.

POWER PLANTS GENERATE MORE ELECTRICITY IN 1986

[Text] Beijing, July (XINHUA) -- China generated 213.9 billion kwh of electricity in the first half of this year, 7.56 percent more than in the same period last year and almost half of the annual target, according to the Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power today.

The electric power industry constitutes an important part in the country's Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90). At present, projects with a combined installed generating capacity of more than 38 million kilowatts are under construction. And new generators with a total capacity of 5.47 million kilowatts will be set up this year.

Most of projects set to be completed within the year are being construted according to the planned speed, the ministry said. The ministry singled out the Zouxian power plant in Shandong Province, the Iuohe plant in Anhui Province, and the Harbin no 3 plant and the Jinzhou plant in northeast China as those which are being constructed much faster than scheduled. From January to June, China completed high-voltage transmission lines totalling 561 kilometers and transforming equipment of 950,000 kilovolt-amperes.

During the same period, rural hydroelectric power stations with a total installed capacity of 106,000 kilowatts were built. These samll stations produced 11 billion kwh of electricty -- 700 million kwh more than in the corresponding period last year.

NATIONAL MEETING ON MINORITY CLASSICS ENDS

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- China will publish new editions of some 700 ethnic minority classics in their original languages, a ranking ethnic minority official said today.

Also planned, said Norbusang, a Monogolian who is vice-minister of the State Nationalities Affairs Commission, is a complete catalogue of the classic texts of China's 55 ethnic groups. The 700 works will include "Meeting With Maitreya," written in the ancient Uygur Language in the eighth or ninth century, historical records from the imperial archives of the Qing Dynasty (1644-1911), and records and classics of the Tibetan, Mongolian, Dai and other ethnic groups. At a six-day national conference on the publication of minority classics which closed here Saturday, Norbusang stressed the importance of preserving rare books, collecting texts from the country's ethnic groups and training personnel in the field.

He said that since the State Council called for collecting classic texts in 1981, China has published more than 300 titles in 10 minority languages, including the "Memorial Ceremony of Genghis Khan," "An Encyclopedia on Eight Banners of the Manchu Nationality," the ancient Tibetan folk epic "King Ge Ser," and "The Great Turkic Dictionary," written by a Uygur scholar in 1074.

According to commission materials distributed at the conference, Chinese ethnic groups "are rich in classic texts." For example, the commission said, the Yis and Tibetans have preserved more than 10,000 titles each, and archives in Dalian, Shenyang and other places in northeast China are filled with historical records of the Man ethnic group. In addition, oral versions of folk poems and legends are scattered throughout rural China, the commission said.

SHANDONG COMPLETES TOWNSHIP PARTY RECTIFICATION

[Excerpts] At present, our province has basically completed its township-and town-level party rectification work characterized by a sound beginning, healthy development, and remarkable results.

Our province's township-and town-level party rectification began in January. Thanks to the efforts of the CPC committees at all levels to conscientiously implement the Central directives and to draw the party rectification experiences of the units at and above the county level, and particularly to the powerful stimulation of the 8,000-person rally held by the central authorities, the various city, prefectural, county and township CPC committees have further clarified the guidelines for rural party rectifcation, firmly grasped education on party spirit, and attended to the party rectification work of the administrative and economic units. Their leaders have taken the lead in making rectification and correction simultaneously, thus solving the following five problems in a comparatively good manner.

1. We have further deepened the people's understanding of rural reform and promoted the second step of rural reform and economic development. In the course of rural reform, the CPC committees at all levels have always adhered to the fundamental guiding ideology of taking party rectification to promote and guarantee reform and economic develpment and have closely combined party rectification with the implementation of the central document No 1 and the work of promoting rural reform and economic development.

2. We have enhanced the revolutionary spirit of the party members and cadres in townships and towns and intensified their devotion to work and their sense of responsibility. The ideology and understanding of the township party members and cadres have been greatly enhanced. New changes took place in the mental outlook of the party members and cadres and in the work of the township organs.

3. We have relentlessly checked malpractices and achieved obviously improvements in party style. In township and town party rectification, we have emphasized the work of investigating and checking all kinds of malpractices, particularly the problems of party members and cadres who have abused their power and positions to seek personal gains, and have achieved remarkable results.

4. We have strengthened our sense that "leadership means service," given consideration to the masses on our own initiative, and gone deeply to the grass-roots level to do good things. Since party rectification, most of the cadres in townships and towns have improved their work style, gone deeply to the selected rural units to take responsibility for the party rectification work of villages, served the masses on their own initiative, and helped them solve practical problems.

5. We have clearly defined the work between the party and the government and ended the situation in which party members do not manage party work. In the course of township party rectification, all localities have paid attention to studying ways to resolving the issues of making a distinction between the administration of the party, the government, and enterprises.

Nevertheless, the development of township party rectification is uneven and there is still much to do in the fields of improving party style, strictly observing party discipline, dealing with organizational measures, and displaying the role of party organizations as the fighting bastions.

In order to comprehensively fulfill the party rectification tasks of townships and towns from start to finish, at present, the CPC committee of various counties (cities and districts) are making continued efforts to conscientiously conduct examinations and acceptance tests for the party rectification work of various townships and towns, to attend to the work of giving organizational measures and implementing measures for conducting rectification and making corrections, to give remedial measures for those units which have done bad job in solving problems, and to further consoliate and develop the achievements in township party rectification.

SHANDONG ARTICLE ON IMPLEMENTING CONTRACT SYSTEM

[Commentator's article: "Do Not Let the 'Contract System' Stand Aside"]

[Text] Since the beginning of this year, some enterprises in our province have slackened their efforts in the economic responsibility system, while others have not yet worked out their contract plans; and still others have even tended to let the "contract system" stand aside and go back to the situation of "eating from a common big pot." This cannot but make us feel anxious.

The economic contracted responsibility system is a good method gained in the process of the rural reform. Practices over the past few years prove that introducing the "contract system" to the urban areas has helped implement the principle of "distribution according to work, with more pay to more work," and has helped mobilize the initiative of enterprises and workers, thus being a successful way to invigorate enterprises and economy. Of course, we cannot say that the contracted responsibility system, which is a new thing, is perfect and flawless. While implementing this system, some errors and deviations have also been made. For instance, some enterprises have inaccurately estimated the various data necessary for enterprises, and, therefore, their contract targets are not scientific and reasonable enough. Some enterprises' assessment standards are not good enough, which leads to a situation of only paying attention to the quantity but neglecting the quality and consumption. Some enterprises' assessment systems are not strict, thus resulting in the situation of only paying attention to the partial interest. And some enterprises have executed the contracts in a reckless manner, and have presumptuously altered and destroyed contracts. All these problems have mainly resulted from the improper rules, regulations, and systems, the poor measures, and the lack of experience. Through constant improvement, we will be able to standardize and systemize the contracted responsibility system. So long as we approach things conscientiously and distinguish right from wrong, it is not difficult for us to solve the problem of taking advantage of the loopholes in the contract system and reform to seek personal gains and to indulge in evil practices. On no account should we take a skeptical attitude on the correctness of the contract system after seeing some problems emerge in the process of implementation. We should never refrain from implementing the contract system, nor should we go back to the situation of "eating from a common big pot."

It should be noted that during a period of time, owing to the failure in drawing a clear line of demarcation between the legal economic activities and the unhealthy trends, some localities have regarded the remuneration to honoring of contracts as a malpractice of lavish bonuses, thus making enterprises' leaders unable to know what course to take, and also dampening the initiative of workers and staff members.

It must be defined that the bonus for honoring of contracts is reasonable remuneration to the labor of workers and staff members, as well as an expression of the principle of distribution according to work. This is entirely different from the practice of lining one's pockets with public funds in violation of the party and the government policies and by infringing upon the interests of the state and the people. The enterprises are allowed to obtain the bonuses, their shares of profits, and the above-quota portions on the premise that they deal with business in proper ways and pay taxes in accordance with regulations instead of embezzling state revenue. Only by so doing can they enjoy the confidence of the people; can the enthusiasm of the enterprises and staff members and workers be protected; can the enterprises be further vitalized; and can the effective measures for reform be persistently carried out and ceaselessly facilitated.

We must notice that the reform of wage system has created new difficulties in implementing the contracted responsibility system due to the fact that after reform, the fixed wages of the staff members and workers increase while the enterprises' bonus funds are reduced. Thus, from now on we must make conscientious efforts to eliminate these difficulties. However, this must not be regarded as an excuse to neglect the responsibility system and go back to the situation of "eating from a common big pot." When the contract system was first introduced to the cities, the responsibility system was carried out under the circumstances in which bonus funds were limited. The implementation of the responsibility system has greatly aroused the initiative of the enterprises and staff members and workers, thus, a rapid development of production has been facilitated. At present, even if conditions are better than before, the enterprises will certainly suffer declines in their production and income if they neglect the responsibility system and go back to the situation of "eating from a common big pot" only because they lack bonus funds. If they do so, they cannot say for sure that they can afford fixed wages of the staff members and workers, let alone bonus funds. Practices of many localities have proven that the successes in implementing responsibility system do not hinge on the amounts of bonuses but are decided by whether or not they properly applied the system, whether or not their ideological and political work could catch up with their demands, and whether or not they used the system of giving bonuses as a means to reward the industrious and punish the lazy as well as a means to arouse the enthusiasm of the staff members and workers. Recently the central authorities and the province have adopted appropriate measures for creating certain conditions for the enterprises to implement the responsibility system. Only when we persist in the socialist principle of distribution according to work and the principle of grasping spiritual and material civilizations at the same time will we certainly be able to further bring into play the important functions of responsibility system, to better arouse the enthusiasm of the vast number of staff members and workers, and to facilitate a vigorous development of production.

SHANGHAI PLA RECTIFIES PARTY ORGANIZATIONS

[Dispatch by Han Shengbao and Huang Biao]

[Text] The brigade-level and regiment-level units under the Shanghai Garrison District have in the main completed their party rectification recently. In order to strengthen their party committees, these units made efforts to solve major problems of their party organizations, overcome negative aspects, and promote their organizational reform and other work.

As soon as the party rectification began, these units carried out an education in party spirit, and called on the party members and cadres to guide their thinking and deeds with the party spirit. The party committee of the "Ye Ting Regiment" with glorious traditions assumes a correct attitude toward honor and achievements, upholds high standards and strict demands, and has the courage to expose shortcomings. During the party rectification, members of the party committee received more than 30 recommendations and suggestions, analyzed them one by one, adopted corrective measures, and improved the leadership of the party committee. The party committee of a garrison regiment was formed after the strength-reduction reorganization. At first, some comrades thought that "there are no conspicuous problems to investigate because the leading body is new." Later, they dealt with problems left over from the past; studied problems in the leading bodies of other regiment-level units; and solved problems concerning surplus cadres, cadres transferred to civilian work, and Army-government and Army-people relations. The comrades exposed contradictions, seriously dealt with them and thus enlightened the leading body to make a good start of the party rectification. During the party rectification, the district and county People's Armed Forces departments were about to be reorganized into local governments. In order to improve the leading bodies of the party committees and leave no problems to local authorities, the district and county People's Armed Forces departments sternly investigated, dealt with, and corrected unhealthy practices of the leading bodies and firmly solved problems that affected the unity of the leading bodies.

Whether the leading cadres often go to grass-roots units or not has a direct bearing on the quality of a leading body. In view of this fact, the brigade-level and regiment-level units adopted corrective measures and remarkably corrected some party committees' lack of enthusiasm for helping grass-roots units during the party rectification. A garrison brigade proposed that leading cadres should give command "near the front" and exercise direct leadership in the forefront. At the same time, these units also dealt with the malpractice of giving dinner parties and gifts. Now, all units under the Shanghai Garrison District have basically stopped the malpractice of spending public funds on dinner parties and gifts.

In the course of the party rectification, six work groups organized by the party committee of the garrison district conducted a general inspection of brigade-level and regiment-level units with regard to their party style. The work groups comprehensively solicited opinions from the party members, seriously summed up experience and lessons, and universally educated the vast number of party members.

GUANGDONG: LIN RUO ATTENDS CPC ANNIVERSARY RALLY

HK280613 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Excerpt] The CPC Committee of the organs directly under the provincial CPC Committee held a rally to celebrate the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC this morning. The rally called on all party members to faithfully carry out the party's program in the new historical period, spontaneously strengthen their party spirit, and serve the people wholeheartedly.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Lin Ruo and Standing Committee member Zheng Guoxiong presented certificates to outstanding party organizations and members.

GUANGDONG RURAL AREAS TO ABOLISH DISTRICTS

HK280615 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarn 0300 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] The rural areas of Guangdong are about to commence the work of abolishing districts [qu] and establishing township and town [zhen] level governments. The current grass-roots government structure in Guangdong, with districts administering townships and townships administering villages, is out of step with the rest of the country. In order to prefect the building of grass-roots rural government and meet the needs of developing rural commodity economy the provincial CPC Committee and government recently decided to abolish districts and establish township and town government throughout the province, thus forming an administrative setup in step with the rest of the country.

There will be no basic change in the size of the districts after they have been changed into townships or towns. There will be no change in the cadres' pay and conditions. There will be no change in the ownership of collective enterprises originally set up by the townships and villages, nor will the former district and township economic channels be affected.

GUANGXI EXPERIMENTS IN BILINGUAL EDUCATION

["News Feature: Guangxi Tries Bilingual Education" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Nanning, June 26 (XINHUA) -- Last week the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region graduated its first class of primary school students taught mainly in the language of the Zhuangs, their ethnic minority group.

The 92 students, who from the third grade were also taught in Mandarin Chinese, were part of an experiment in bilingual education designed to promote Zhuang literacy in the countryside. They attended four schools in Wuming County, 60 kilometers north of Nanning, Guangxi's regional capital.

Although more than a third of the region's 38 million residents are Zhuangs, until 1981 Guangxi's schools taught only in Mandarin, the official language of China and the language of the country's major ethnic group, the Hans.

From their first day in school, however, this group of students was taught in Zhuang and used Zhuang textbooks.

Local officials say another 70 students taught in Zhuang will graduate this summer from three schools in Debao County, 200 kilometers west of Nanning.

Prior to the founding of new China in 1949, the Zhuangs had no written language, although their oral tradition has a history of at least 2,000 years. In 1955, language experts hired by the State Council, China's highest governing body, created a written language for the Zhuangs, based on their speech and using the Latin alphabet. Teaching of the Zhuang language was halted during the "Cultural Revolution" (1966-1976).

In May 1980, leaders of the regional government decided to resume promotion of the Zhuang language and set up a language committee, publishing house, newspapers and schools to accomplish the task. More than 17,000 students have received some instruction in Zhuang in the region's primary schools.

According to a local education official, Zhuang is "easy to learn." A peasant "with little or no Han language can read and write Zhuang after about 200 hours of instruction," says the Guangxi official in charge of promoting the language.

Since 1981, regional officials say, more than 100,000 peasants have learned Zhuang, and 90 percent of them can speak, write letters and take notes in the language. Increasing recources will be devoted to promoting Zhuang over the next five years. "After 1990," one Zhuang leader says, "we expect interest in the language to really take off."

BEIJING GROUP HELPS HENAN SOLVE PRODUCTION PROBLEMS

[By reporters Li Fufu and Yang Yusheng]

[Text] Zhengzhou, 29 Jun (XINHUA) -- A working group composed of personnel from the State Economic Commission [SEC] and four other ministries and departments has helped enterprises in Henan settle certain urgent problems while conducting on-the-spot investigations and study in the province from 23 to 27 June.

Henan's industrial production has been unsatisfactory since the beginning of the year. The province's industrial growth during the period from January to early June was slow. The output value of machinery, electronics, chemical, and collective industries was lower than that of the same period last year. Furthermore, industrial enterprises' budgets for producing finished products were misused, and production costs and losses were higher than that of the same period last year. Although the Henan provincial government and other relevant departments as well as the industrial and mining enterprises themselves tried hard to change the situation, the results were still unsatisfactory. After being informed of the situation, instead of simply hearing and reading reports and making decisions in Beijing as usual, the SEC promptly designated its member Lu Bing to head a working group -- composed of personnel from the Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power, the Ministry of Metallurgical Industry, the State Bureau of Materials and Equal, and the Industrial and Commercial Bank of China -- to Henan to study the situation and help solve problems.

After arriving in Zhengzhou on the morning of 23 June, the group members, ignoring their fatigue after the long journey, immediately discussed and analyzed Henan's economic situation with the Henan Provincial Economic Planning Commission, the Henan Electric Power Administration, the Henan Supplies Bureau, the Henan Industrial and Commercial Bank, and the Henan Department of Metallurgical Industry and Construction Materials.

In the afternoon, they divided themselves into three groups — electric power, banking, and raw semifinished materials — and had thorough discussions with the relevant departments in Henan and studied ways and means to deal with the situation. Braving the scorching summer heat, the group members also visited Luoyang, a city with relatively more problems, to conduct investigations and study and have discussions with the relevant departments. In Luoyang, they visited the Luoyang Tractor Plant, the Luoyang Bearing Plant, the Luoyang Mining Equipment Plant, the Luoyang Copper Processing Plant, and the Luoyang Glass Plant to talk with their directors and secretaries to understand the situation. After realizing that the nation's largest tractor plant had virtually suspended one half of its operation because of power shortages and other reasons, the working group supply. Owing to the shortage of 200 metric tons of heavy-gauge steel plates, the Luoyang Mining Equipment Plant had to suspend the manufacture of a set of cement equipment for export. Although the plant tried hard to seek help everywhere, its efforts were to no avail. After being informed of this situation, the working group immediately contacted a steel plant and asked it to produce the type of heavy-gauge steel plates needed by the mining equipment plant as soon as possible.

The working group learned from the investigation that, in addition to subjective factors, certain objective factors such as the relatively serious shortage of electric power, capital, and raw and semifinished materials have handicapped Henan's production growth to a certain extent, causing the slump in the province's industrial production. Thus, on the basis of its investigations and study, as well as Henan's actual needs, the group took immediate and decisive actions to settle more real problems. As for some other broadly based problems that could not be resolved immediately, the working group decided that, after returning to Beijing, it will report them to leading authorities concerned and make the necessary arrangements with the hope that the problems can be settled as quickly as possible, and that Henan can rapidly catch up with other parts of the country in industrial production.

HUNAN: REPORT ON UNHEALTHY TREND OF SENDING GIFTS

HK261149 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Report by (Hu Yueping): "Party-Member Cadres Must Take the Lead in Resisting the Unhealthy Trend of Sending Gifts"]

[Exceptions] After listening to the report of the Hunan People's Broadcasting Station that the burden of sending gifts is heavy and peasants cannot bear it, I am reminded of how often I have thought about how the unhealthy trend of sending gifts was stirred up and how this unhealthy trend will be curbed.

Some people say that the unhealthy trend of sending gifts was brought about by incorrect party style. I think that this point is slightly biased. However, the unhealthy trend of sending gifts is related to incorrect party style. For example, party-member cadres have a certain power in their hands and some cadres have regarded this power as a commodity which waits for the right price to sell. They will give benefits to those who send them more gifts. As a result, when a cadre's family has a happy event, the masses are obliged to send generous gifts. As another example, some cadres are fond of eating and drinking, and so long as they have something to eat and drink, they will not stop things from being done extravagantly. We must hold that this is one of the reasons for stirring up more and more violently the unhealthy trend of sending gifts.

We must first affirm that human feelings are not a bad thing by themselves. Communist Party members have worked hard to eliminate the social phenomenon of people oppressing people and of people exploiting people which is most unreasonable. It can therefore be said that Communist Party members are most amenable to reason. However, the human feelings of Communist Party members are established on the ideological basis of egalitarianism and mutual love. They demand uniformity in outward show and inner thoughts, make no pretense, and disapprove of insincerity. This requires us to pay attention to changing customs in our social contacts, to do new things in a new way, and not to go through unnecessary and overelaborate formalities.

People indulge in the unhealthy trend of sending gifts not just for the purpose of courtesy contacts or friendly contacts. Out of burgeois vanity, some stress fame and go in for ostentation and extravagance. Some want to reap profits from others. Under the pressure of the unhealthy trend of sending gifts, some are obliged to do so. This is actually a sham social contact and is entirely different from the sincere manner, civility, and courtesy advocated by Communist Party members. If this unhealthy trend is allowed to continue, it will make the relations between people become falser and falser and poison the general mood of society.

Therefore, all genuine Communist Party members must adhere to the organic unity between inner moral motive and outward deeds, actions, and manner, take the lead in resisting the unhealthy trend, do their best to do persuasive work well, and work hard to curb this current unhealthy trend of sending gifts which jeopardizes society and make the people's burden heavier. Communist Party members must not shirk their responsibility in the course of curbing the unhealthy trend of sending gifts.

HUNAN SYMPOSIUM ON URBAN SOCIAL ORDER ENDS 30 JUN

[Excerpts] The provincial sympopsium on urban social order work which lasted 5 days, concluded in Changsha today. At the symposium, 27 units, including Changsha City, introduced their experiences. (Dong Jiwen), provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee member and Political and Legal Commission secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a report. Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Liu Fusheng attended the symposium and spoke.

The symposium stressed: It is necessary to vigorously do well in grasping urban social order and to promote the steady improvement of social order through the province. The common characteristics of the experiences introduced at the symposium are: CPC committees and governments have attached great importance to social order work and really strengthened leadership. In coordination with each other, political and legal departments have fought hard together. Enterprises, institutions, streets, and workers have vigorously participated in this work and comprehensively tidied up social order. Marked achievements have been scored. The number of criminal cases that occurred in Changsha City from January to May this year was 13.8 percent less than in the same period last year.

The symposium summed up the good experiences of these units and studied and arranged for the current social order work. It is necessary to continuously implement the principle of severely and quickly meting out punishment in accordance with the law, to sternly crack down on serius criminals, and to resolutely ban and eliminate the repulsive social phenomenon. It is also essential to crack down on economic crimes.

This symposium was convened by the Political and Legal Commission of the provincial CPC Commitee. Attending the symposium were the responsible persons of 6 cities under the jurisdiction of the provincial government who are in charge of political and legal work, and secretaries of the political and legal commissions and public security bureau directors of all prefectures, cities, and autonomous prefectures and 14 cities at the county level.

HUNAN RADIO ON HARM CAUSED BY IDLE TALK

["Sunday Chat" by (Hu Zheng): "Idle Talk Can Only Cause Harm to Our Country"]

[Excerpts] When we are talking about the fact that idle talk will cause harm to the country, many people recall the history of the Wei, Jin and Southern and Northern Dynasties. At that time, metaphysicians applied the thought of the Taoist school to interpret the classics of the Confucian school and in synthesizing the thoughts of the Confucian and Taoist schools, and then proceeded to abstract speculation which deviated from reality, in an attempt to look for an abstruse and remote world. This practice of idle talk caused turbulence and unrest in society. Rulers frequently usurped power, leading to a big split that lasted several hundred years and caused agony for the people.

Metaphysics has now become a thing of the past, but the practice of idle talk has not yet vanished. For example, in reform, many people are bold in practicing and have vigorously explored a way to build socialism with Chinese characteristics, but some people have not conducted investigation and study or seriusly thought with an active attitude about how to solve the practical problems in the course of reform. In the capacity of an outsider, the latter have looked on coldly and are overly critical. If you ask how a thing should be done in the end, these people have no real knowledge or deep insight. When this practice of idle talk comes into vogue in a unit, the unit will hold things up. If we allow the practice of idle talk to spread, it will harm our country.

While we oppose idle talk, it does not mean that we do not want people to conduct discussions. We are carrying out reform because we want to really build the socialist economic system, which is different from the past ossified or semiossified pattern and intrinsically different from the capitalist pattern. To embark on such a large-scale and extremely delicate and complicated social system engineering project, and without previous experience for reference, it is impossible for us to win a victory without bringing the wisdom and creativeness of the whole party and all people into play. Therefore, we not only do not oppose the idea of people conducting discussions, but we mobilize them to conduct discussions. However, this kind of discussion and exposition and idle talk are two entirely different things. While vigorously conducting discussion and exposition, we want to weigh the advantages and disadvantages and to push reform forward with a progressive attitude. In idle talk, people speak indiscreetly and cannot solve problems. Idle talk can only interfere with and hinder reform. Therefore, to do a good job in reform, discussion and exposition is indispensable and the practice of idle talk must be abolished.

Our comrades must therefore firmly remember the lesson in our history that idle talk caused harm to our country. We must strive to shun idle talk and be determined to go the forefront. We must not constantly stay in the organs to make empty comments and big reports. If we indulge in idle talk that is not to the point, people will get bored listening to us and the idle talk will impair the relationship between the party and the masses and hinder the development of the productive forces.

SICHUAN RIBAO ON CURBING SUPERSTITIOUS ACTIVITIES

["Sunday Chat" by Wen Dahui: "Ignorance Must Not Be Encouraged"]

[Text] The winds of superstition are blowing in the rural areas of our province. For example, when a certain person wants to build a house, more often than not he will ask a "geomancer" to practice "geomancy" for the location of his house. When a person wants to choose the site of a tomb, he will ask a "semi-supernatural being" to cut "the dragon's arteries and veins" so as to get a favorable position. More seriously, even to set up a door, people would ask a "censor" or a "Taoist priest" as to its direction, size, and the date for setting it up. What merits attention is that when these persons of dubious character who work with spirits and devils have "gone underground" "to fight as guerrillas," another more ignorant activity has surfaced in the big way "campaigns" are fought. The news reported by SICHUAN RIBAO on 27 April under the title of "Reckless Building of Temples in the Rural Areas of Shehong County Becomes the Order of the Day" is a typical case. The report says: "More than 100 new temples have been built in the 75 villages all over the country." It has also been reported that "similar cases can also be found to varying degrees in many localities throughout the province." From these reports we can thus easily notice the momentum of this wind of ignorance.

Although the deceitful tricks of such people who work with spirits and devils as "geomancers" and "semi-supernatural beings" are becoming less and less workable, they are after all human beings. With his experience in life, even a man "without teeth can probably bite a louse" -- with a rate chance of success. Therefore, there is a possibility for people to deceive other people who are more ignorant than they are for a certain time. In the final analysis, deceitful tricks cannot last long and cheap tricks are bound to be exposed. The mask will ultimately be stripped off by the people who are not ignorant.

Compared with the "geomancers" and "semi-supernatural beings" who are human beings, what ability do the "gods" carved in wood or molded in clay really have? Neither do they have blood and flesh and conscience, nor can they speak and move. They are no more than products of man's imagination and craftsmanship. If they do work miracles, why can they not sweep the dust off their faces? Why can they not save themselves when misfortune befalls them? Why can they not save themselves when misfortune befalls them? Why can they not protect themselves from winds and rains? If they do work miracles, why must human beings "dress them in gold" and build "temples" for them? If they do work miracles, why do the working people in the societies under the exploitation system who earnestly and sincerely believe in them, respect them and look to them for help, still not have enough food and clothing.

The reasons are simple and easy to understand but the faithful turn a deaf ear or a blind eye to the facts. What are the reasons behind this? As I see it, they can be summed up in one word: Ignorance.

The aforesaid news report says: "In pooling funds for building a temple, some people adopted various methods, such as selling 5-yuan-a-bowl 'disaster-fighting cooked rice.' In the short space of a few months, they collected more than 80,000 yuan."

Just think. If the amount of money had been used to improve the township's educational facilities, how much disaster created by ignorance could have been "eliminated?" If that amount of money had been used to improve the township's medical work, how many people with mental "illness" could have been cured?

The concept of worshiping gods and fearing ghosts is incompatible with the concept of science indispensable to modern spiritual civilization. To carry out modernization, we must vigorously encourage science and civilization. Ignorance must not be encouraged.

SICHUAN LEADER HELPS SOLVE PROBLEMS AT NEIJIANG

[Summary From Poor Reception] On 19 and 20 June, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Yang Rudai led responsible comrades of various provincial organs including the policy research office to do on-the-spot work at Neijiang City and help to solve some practical problems there.

After hearing a work report given by the city leaders, Yang Rudai said: "Manpower transfer is the key to Neijiang's economic take-off. Neijiang has good conditions for manpower transfer. It has three counties each with a population for manpower transfer. It has three counties each with a population of 1 million [words indistinct]. The degree of manpower transfer reflects the degree of development of commodity production and also of the peasants' affluence."

When the city leaders reported on the local electricity shortage, which has hampered growth rate, Yang Rudai said that when the expansion of the (?Baima) power plant is completed, 40 percent of the local power shortage will be solved. Yang Rudai said: "Our leading cadres must be bold in reform and practice. They must not be afraid of this and that."

CHONGQING LEADER STRESSES IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

[Excerpts] Chongqing City held a rally yesterday to mark the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC, commend outstanding party members and advanced party branches, and make arrangements for achieving further improvement in party style.

Liao Bokang, secretary of the city CPC Committee, spoke at the rally. On the question of how to carry out in depth the work of straightening out party style and promoting a turn for the better in social mood, he demanded that the city organs and the party organizations at all levels take resolute, decisive, accurate, and swift action to investigate and deal with major and important cases. They must devote great efforts to correcting unhealthy trends with sectoral characteristics, and step up education in professional responsibilities, ethics, and discipline.

XIZANG PARTY LEADER URGES STRUCTURAL REFORMS

HK010249 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Xizang Regional CPC Committee Secretary Wu Jinghua said at a meeting convened on 30 June by the regional leadership group for sending cadres down to the rural areas that Xizang is doing the correct thing in grasping structural reform, and the principles and policies advanced by the regional CPC Committee are fully correct and have been commended by leading central comrades.

We must affirm our confidence and unswervingly make a success of structural reform.

Comrade Wu Jinghua said: From a Marxist viewpoint, our current structure is not socialist, and it is imperative to reform it. Otherwise, there is no way out. We are now in the stage when new systems are replacing the old, and the main contradiction is that between the new and old systems. We must speed up reforms and replace the old systems with the new.

Comrade Wu Jinghua made these important remarks at a meeting of leaders of groups going down to the rural areas just after his return from Beijing.

Raidi, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, spoke on the tasks of the work groups sent to the rural areas. He said: There are five characteristics of the current work of sending large numbers of cadres down to the rural areas:

1. The guiding ideology is clear-cut. The groups are publicizing and implementing the central authorities' series of important instructions on work in Xizang and the spirit of the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee, and helping the masses to find ways of getting rich.

2. Their methods are correct. They have changed from issuing orders to providing services. They have appropriately eased the masses' worries and mobilized their enthusiasm for production.

3. Their work style is good, and they have done many tangible things for the masses. The masses are very grateful for this.

4. Their work is thoroughly sound and their discipline strict.

5. They have vigorously promoted investigation and study, got hold of a great deal of first-hand material, and discovered many new situations and problems. They have thus provided a reliable basis for the upper-level party committees and government in guiding work and formulating policies.

Raidi put forward demands on the work of these groups in the next stage. He said: The foundation of Xizang's agricultural and animal husbandry production is very weak. The quality of the grass-roots cadres is poor. The task of the work groups remains very heavy. They must continue to discover new situations and study new problems, and find new ways of solving the problems. They must further help the masses to find ways of getting rich.

YUNNAN'S PU CHAOZHU ON BUILDING MATERIALS INDUSTRY

HK290203 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Pu Chaozhu has written an article after hearing that output value of collective enterprises exceeded that of enterprises owned by the whole people in the building materials industry last year.

The article said: Output of the province's building materials industry rose from 177 million yuan in 1980 to 443 million yuan in 1985. During this period output value of state-owned enterprises doubled, while that of collective enterprises increased by 340 percent. The collective enterprises' output value has exceeded that of state-owned enterprises for the first time, while their economic results have improved and their tax and profit payments to the state increased by 200 percent during these 5 years.

BEIJING PLA PARTY MEMBERS DISCUSS RECTIFICATION

OW300109 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1500 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] The Beijing Military Region of the Chinese PLA recently called a meeting of leading comrades of major units of the military region to discuss how to consolidate and develop the achievements of party rectification, and how to further strengthen the party ideologically and in its work style after the party rectifiction is completed.

At the meeting, Qin Jiwei, secretary of the Beijing Military Region party committee, analyzed the situation in party rectification throughout the military region. He proposed concrete measures for consolidating and developing the achievements of party rectification and doing a better job in party building. These measures are:

To apply useful experiences gained in the course of party rectification to party building at ordinary times;

To carry out reorganization and reform measures as a major task in consolidating and developing the achievements of party rectification so that these measures will be implemented more effectively; and

To continue raising party members' political consciousness and have party life regularized and institutionalized.

HEBEI SECRETARY AT FORUM TO HANDLE VISITORS, LETTERS

SK270838 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Text] The provincial forum on the work of handling visitors and incoming letters from the masses which concluded in Shijiazhuang on 12 June set forth five requirements for further achieving the work.

The five requirements are as follows: We should thoroughly upgrade our understanding, improve our work style, and grasp the work of handling visitors and incoming letters from the masses with a sense of political responsibility and a spirit of reform. We should do creative work and solve problems in accordance with relevant regulations set forth in the policies and principles of the central authorities, in line with local actual conditions, and by seeking truth from facts. We should eliminate bureaucratic work style and advocate the practice in which leading cadres go deep into the masses to conduct investigations and studies to solve problems on the spot so that the tendency of the masses visiting the higher levels will be replaced by that of leading cadres going deep into the grass roots. Leading cadres should strictly make routine the work of regularly and personally handling visitors and incoming letters from the masses. We should strictly carry out the system of each level fixing responsibilities for handling the work. We should further strengthen the construction of the ranks of cadres in charge of the work of handling visitors and incoming letters from the masses by selecting and transferring the comrades with certain political level and with a high sense of political responsibility to engage in the work. We should strengthen supervision and inspection.

Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, and the provincial government attended the forum. Xing Chongzhi and Sun Guozhi delivered speeches at the forum. Lu Chuanzan made a summing-up speech at the forum.

Xing Chongzhi stressed in his speech: The party and government should regard the work of handling visitors and incoming letters from the masses as a key channel for maintaining contacts with the masses. Through handling visitors and incoming letters from the masses, we can understand the situation of the implementation of policies, cadres' ideologies and work style, the situation of society, and the people's will. In order to achieve the work of handling visitors and incoming letters from the masses, leaders should pay attention to the work, leading cadres should do more solid deeds, and the ranks of cadres in charge of the work should be built well. We should love and care for the cadres in charge of the work, help them solve living and working problems, and support their work.

Wuyi County, Fengnan County, Langfang City, and Nanpi County respectively introduced their experiencesd in handling visitors and incoming letters from the masses, and their experiences were well received by the participants in the forum.

HEBEI'S XING CHONGZHI ENCOURAGES REFORM

SK270932 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] On the morning of 18 June, Xing Chongzhi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, called a forum of some plant directors in Baoding City. After hearing reports on reform given by these plant directors, he stressed that party and government leaders at all levels and all pertinent departments should have the courage to support reform, enthusiastically protect the initiative of reformers, and conduct investigations and studies at grass-roots units to help enterprises solve their practical problems arising in carrying out reform in a down-to-earth manner.

In view of the situations revealed in the reports, Comrade Xing Chongzhi pointed out: Reform is a kind of exploration in which there is no ready-made experience. It is unavoidable to commit this or that kind of mistake in carrying out reform. There have been two types of attitude toward problems in reform: One is, proceeding from the viewpoint of supporting and cherishing reformers, to actively help redress problems whenever they are discovered in order to improve the reform continuously; the other is to criticize and deal with the mistakes in reform as the stand, and even take the road back. The latter one is obviously wrong and is detrimental to the development of the spirit of the masses of cadres and people to conduct reform bravely and their initiative in reform. The duties of CPC committees and governments at all levels are, in line with the correct policies of the central authorities, to support and cherish the units, leading bodies, and comrades who have the courage to carry out reform with various measures and help them correct their mistakes and sum up experiences in order to create a favorable social environment for reform and continuously deepen the reform.

In view of the questions raised by the participants, Comrade Xing Chongzhi gave four opinions on supporting reform. First, the power already delegated to lower levels must not be recalled, and efforts should be made to improve the implementation of reform in line with the guidelines of the documents issued by higher authorities whenever problems arise. The power that enterprises are entitled to should be delegated to them earnestly and thoroughly. Second, we should not stress the need for establishing the organs of enterprises in line with corresponding administrative systems and regard the establishment of certain organs as the criterion for examining and approving enterprises as well as the criterion for judging the performance of enterprises. We should give enterprises the power to establish organs.

Third, we should avoid sending investigation groups, especially duplicate investigation groups, to enterprises. Form now on, approval should be obtained from city party committees before sending investigation groups to the enterprises which have achieved good results in reform. With regard to the problems involving the directors or party committee secretaries of large enterprises, city CPC committees and discipline inspection commissions should first hold talks with the persons involved, ascertain the situation, and then decide whether investigations should be conducted.

Fourth, with regard to the issues concerning reform, those which have been correctly handled should be upheld, those which have not been correctly handled should be corrected, and those wrongly handled should be thoroughly rectified without any carelessness.

Comrade Xing Chongzhi fully affirmed Baoding City's achievements in previous reform. He urged leading persons of the city CPC Committee and government and the people throughout the city to face up to the actual situation, overcome difficulties, carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man, carry out reform more successfully, and score greater achievements during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

HEBEI PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT, ECONOMIC NETWORK SET UP

[Text] On 17 June, the government affairs and economic information network jointly organized by the government general offices of 12 provinces was established in Shijiazhuang City. As one of the members of the information network, our province sponsored the first annual meeting.

This network will help exchange work experiences and develop lateral cooperation among the government general offices of the membership provinces and whose main activities are to provide government and economic information and data for the membership provinces and to exchange their work experiences. Since the government general offices are the pivot of provincial governments, the establishment of this network will help strengthen ties among the general offices of the various provincial governments, benefit the exchange of experiences of the provinces in reforming their government work and in conducting economic work, and enable the provincial governments to better display the role of think tanks and advisers.

As a principal initiator, the general office of our provincial government started its government and economic information exchange work earlier than the other provinces. Beginning from July 1984, it has gradually reformed outdated work methods and established three information networks including vertical, lateral, and popularization networks among government departments. These networks have provided a great deal of information valuable for making policy decisions for leaders at all levels and have served as advisers to leaders through scientific means. Since the beginning of this year, the information work of the provincial government general office has been laterally developed among other provinces. Through consultation with Hubei and Liaoning Provinces, we have decided to establish a government affairs and economic information network of 12 provinces. The other nine membership provinces are Heilongjiang, Shandong, Shanxi, Henan, Jiangsu, Zhehjiang, Sichuan, Anhui, and Hunan.

On the morning of 17 June, Lu Chuanzan, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and secretary general; Hong Yi, vice governor; and Liu Bingqing, responsible person of the secretarial bureau [mi shu ju 4434 2579 1444] of the State Council, attended the meeting to extend congratualtions.

NORTHEAST ELECTRICITY SHORTAGE TO BE REMEDIED

[Text] Shenyang, June 28 (XINHUA) -- The electricity shortage in northeast China will be alleviated over the next five years, said the director of the Northeast Electricity Bureau here today. Lang Weicheng said that 62 billion kwh of electricity was generated in northeast China in 1985, but the area was still short of four billion kwh. Electrical energy production has been increased by 4.6 percent annually in the past five years, but was still insufficient.

The northeast, including Liaoning, Jilin and Heilongjiang provinces, and part of the Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region, is one of China's important oil, steel, coal, machinery and grain-producing bases.

Lang said that the state and local governments would invest one billion yuan to construct electricity-generating plants auxiliary facilities in the next five years. New generators with a capacity of 5.9 million kw will be installed, and by 1990, the installed capacity of the northeast grid will reach 18.2 million kw. Moreover, seven large electricity-generating plants are to be constructed. Among them, Jinzhou generating plant, with an installed capacity of 1.2 million kw, is one of the nation's key projects. It will not only supply the western part of Liaoning, but also the Anshan steelworks in southern Liaoning when it is completed in 1990.

HEILONGJIANG MEETING COMMENDS ADVANCED PARTY BRANCHES

SK290722 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2100 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Excerpts] On the morning of 28 June, the CPC committees of the organs under the provincial CPC Committee and government held rallies to commend advanced party branches and outstanding party members to mark the 65th anniversary of the founding of the party. The rallies were declared open amid the playing of "the Internationale" Sun Weiben, Zhou Wenhua, Huang Feng, and Wang Lianzheng, as well as other leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and government separately attended the two rallies. Wang Yilun, Zhang Ruilin, Wu Cheng, Zhao Zhenhua, (Gao Xitang), Liu Zhenrong, and (Liu Zhimin) who joined the party in 1937, and (Zhao Zhifei) and (Li Chengwen), veteran Red Army soldiers, also separately attended the rallies. Some 79 advanced party branches, 13 advanced party groups, 254 outstanding Communist Party members, and 78 outstanding workers of the party were commended and awarded by the CPC committees of the organs under the provincial CPC Committee and government.

Huang Feng, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and secretary general of the Provincial CPC Committee, and Du Xianzhong, member of the party groups of the provincial government and secretary general, gave speeches at the two rallies.

The two rallies called on the party organizations under the provincial level organs and their party members to take the advanced party branches and outstanding party members as their examples, to play an exemplary role in raising working efficiency, studying, strictly observing discipline, and strengthening party spirit, to further improve the service of party organs, and to raise their levels in giving guidance and making policy decisions in order to achieve fundamental improvements in the party style of the provincial-level organs within a short period of time.

SUN WEIBEN ADDRESSES HEILONGJIANG PARTY MEETING

[Excerpts] On the morning of 27 June, the theater of the provincial exhibition hall permeated with a joyful and warm atmosphere where the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee was holding a commendation meeting to confer honorary titles on advanced party branches and outstanding Communist Party members.

As the 20 representatives of the advanced party branches on various fronts throughout the province and the 66 outstanding Communist Party members stepped into the theater, warm applause broke out throughout the meeting hall.

Liu Chengguo, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, presided over the meeting. Huang Feng, Standing Committee member and secretary general of the provincial CPC Committee, read the decision made by the provincial CPC Committee on commending advanced party branches and outstanding party members.

At the meeting, presenting inscribed plaques, certificates, and prizes to the representatives of the advanced party branches and members who have emerged in building socialism and in conducting reforms were leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, including Sun Weiben, Hou Jie, Li Genshen, Chen Yunlin, Liu Chengguo, Zhou Wenhua, Wang Yaochen, Li He, Huang Feng, Chen Yuanzhi, and Wang Fei, as well as Wang Yilun, a retired cadre from the provincial level organ.

At the meeting, Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech. In his speech, Comrade Sun Weiben stated: Our party has created a new situation in the cause of building socialism and conducting reforms. In line with the new tasks faced by the party in the new historic period. The 12th CPC Congress put forward the obvious demand on the role of Communist Party members in the new period. The 66 outstanding Communist Party members being commended at the meeting have had different experiences and posts. However, their ideology and acts have given a concrete answer to the question of how to be a Communist Party member in the new historic period. The answer includes the practice of firmly fostering communist ideals, consciously upholding the four basic principles, displaying the spirit of pioneering the road of making progress, actively engaging in reforms, serving the people wholeheartedly, and of doing a good job in conducting their professional work in a down-to-earth manner. Efforts should be made to set examples in abiding by the party's discipline and by state policies, laws, and orders and to enhance training in party spirit. While conducting reforms in the objective world, efforts should be made to improve Communist Party members' subjective world as well. In the new historical conditions of conducting reforms and enforcing the policy of opening to the outside world, a great and important task faced by the 100,000 party branches throughout the province is how to bring into play the combat-fortress role of the party branches in line with the demand and provisions set forth by the party Constitution. The advanced party branches being commended at the meeting have provided precious experience for us, which indicates that efforts should be made to be strong, powerful, and vigorous leading bodies. This represents a decisive factor in determining whether the party branches are strong in combat power. The party branches should base their work on ensuring the fulfillment of the task of building the two civilizations and uphold the principle of intensifying education among party members in order to steadily upgrade their quality. They should also have a sound system of democratic life, which is the source of their combat power.

They should enhance discipline inspection work in order to maintain the party's purity in ideology, work style, and organizational systems. In his speech, Comrade Sun Weiben stated:

[Begin Sun Weiben recording] Comrades: The year in which we are celebrating the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC is the same year in which we have taken the first step in implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The current and central task faced by the people throughout the province is to unite as one and to make all-out efforts to strive to successfully fulfill the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The provincial CPC Committee hopes that Communist Party members throughout the province will earnestly study the advanced experience and deeds introduced by the party branches and members at this meeting in order to upgrade in an overall way the quality of ideology, politics, culture, and professions. They should actively join the drive to conduct reforms, straighten out party style in down-to-earth manner, score first-grade achievements in their professional work, and lead the masses in making progress. Party organizations at all levels throughout the province should popularize in a timely manner the experience gained by the party branches being commended at the meeting, inherit or develop the fine tradition in party style and discipline, do a good job in implementing the measures for enhancing the building of the party, uphold the principle of making a success in enforcing the party's discipline, and strictly run the party in order to upgrade the party's leadership to a new standard. Only by meeting the demand imposed by the new historic period can we make new contributions to ensuring the successful fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan and making Heilongjiang prosperous and wealthy. [end recording]

Also attending the commendation meeting were leading comrades of the province, including Bai Jingfu, Zhao Zhenhua, Wang Lianzheng, Liu Zhongli, and Jing Bowen, and secretaries and party members from the provincial and Harbin city level organs, the Songhuajiang prefectural level organs, and party branches at grass-roots levels -- 2,200 persons in all.

On the morning of 27 June, a number of representatives of the advanced party branches and outstanding party members commended at the meeting delivered reports to the broad masses of participating party members to introduce their advanced deeds.

JILIN COMPLETES TRANSFER OF ARMED FORCES DEPARTMENTS

SK290511 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Excerpts] As of 27 June, all 54 county, city and district People's Armed Forces departments throughout the province had been transferred to the local authorities. Some 914 cadres and fighters took off their army uniforms in a cheerful state of mind. Leaders of the provincial CPC Committee, government, and the military district have been concerned about the transfer of the People's Armed Forces departments to the local authorities. They have dispatched 87 work groups on several occasions to help the various people's armed forces departments solve practical problems.

Local governments at all levels throughout the province have allocated more than 144,000 yuan for the People's Armed Forces departments to repair arms and weapon depots and build training bases. Furthermore, they have helped 124 families of People's Armed Forces cadres solve housing problems despite a shortage of houses for local cadres.

GANSU TO ESTABLISH COMMODITY GRAIN BASE COUNTIES

[Excerpts] A provincial conference on the building up of commodity grain bases during the Seventh 5-Year Plan was held in Lanzhou from 23 to 27 June. The meeting designated 26 counties and 95 townships as commodity grain bases.

Beginning this year, the whole country will gradually institute the system of focusing on regional balances in grain. In this new situation, doing a good job of building commodity grain bases becomes a major factor for provincial balancing, whereby there is a self-sufficiency and a surplus in bumper years and an appropriate readjustment in lean years, with the aim of meeting the industrial grain requirements and the food requirements of a new population of 20 million. It is an important strategic measure for gradually achieving self-sufficiency in grain.

In order to overcome the provide's unfavorable factors for grain production and creative very good conditions for it, the meeting put forward the following effective and practical measures: 1) Continue to do a good job in water conservancy construction. 2) Set up systems of agricultural technical services, seed cultivation, and crop protection. 3) Ensure that the funds allocated by the central and local authorities for developing commodity grain production are used in the most effective way.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Li Ziqi and Governor Jia Zhijie spoke at the conference. They called on the party and government departments to strengthen leadership, and handle properly the relationship between developing grain production and diversification in the commodity grain areas. Great efforts must be made in supplying science, talent, information, and management. All sectors and trades must continue to provide vigorous support for agriculture and make contributions to building commodity grain bases.

[Excerpts] The provincial CPC Committee Organization Department and veteran cadre work bureau held a gathering of retired cadres and party members on 30 June to celebrate the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC. The function was attended by leading comrades of the party, government, and army and cadres of the provincial organs including Li Ziqi, Jia Zhijie, Wang Bingxiang, Lu Kejian, Wang Zhanchang, Wang Shital, and Li Keru.

SHAANXI PLANT MANAGERS DISCUSS REFORM PROBLEMS

[Excerpts] At a forum on urban economic structural reform convened in Xian on 23 June, managers of eight large and medium plants in Xian and Xianyang stressed that enterprise reforms must be supported from all sides, and in particular must be understood and supported by the upper-level leadership.

A small 300-man state-owned plant in Xian has carried out a series of reform measures in recent years. From being a poor plant with poor prospects, the factory has turned into a six-good enterprise with annual profits exceeding 1 million yuan. The manager of this plant said: When certain mistakes occurred in reform, the upper-level departments in charge should have enthusiastically helped us to improve our work and carry out reforms in depth, instead of making it impossible for the plant manager to work. A work team sent by the departments in charge has now been in the plant for 10 months. The team has distracted people and output has fallen. The plant has had to borrow to pay its wages.

The plant managers said: How would anyone dare to carry out reform if such methods are practiced? They pointed out: The CPC Central Committee and State Council have stipulated that enterprise decision-making powers should be expanded and the plant manager responsibility system practices. Most of the powers that should be delegated to the enterprises have not been. They are held firmly in the hands of the departments in charge. Some people hold that if the manager has the power to hire and fire cadres, this will lead to the formation of factions and cliques and to favoritism in making appointments. They are therefore suspicious of the plant manager responsibity system. Some people have even announced the revival of the system of divided responsibility under the party committee's leadership.

In view of this situation, two managers of large enterprises said: In practicing the plant manager responsibility system, the managers and directors of the enterprises are all appointed by the upper-level departments in accordance with the criteria for four transformations of the cadre force and after conducing serious examination. The upper-level departments should believe that the managers they have themselves appointed are capable of using their powers well. The present situation is that if you want to fire an incompetent middle-level cadre, some people will say that you are only getting rid of a dissident. If you want to promote a cadre with the pioneering spirit of reform, some people will accuse you of appointing people by favoritism. As a result, it is very difficult for the plant manager to form a production operations command system with unified thinking and measures.

The plant measures expressed the hope that the comrades in the upper-level leading organs would go down to take a look at the practice of reform, study its realities, fully understand and enthusiastically support enterprise reforms, and create an atmosphere of relaxation and harmony for them.

SHAANXI RIBAO Editorial

HK260347 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Today's SHAANXI RIBAO frontpages an editorial entitled "Practicing the Plant Manager Responsibility System Is the Trend of the Times."

The editorial says that some Shaanxi enterprises owned by the whole people have now instituted this system. The problem now is that the plant manager's powers have been withdrawn in some places. Some managers cannot actually act as the masters. In some cases the upper levels delegate powers but the middle levels intercept them. Some units have even gone back to the old system of having the party committee exercise leadership. Some plant managers are thwarted in their efforts as they work in a difficult environment, and production suffers losses.

The editorial points out that the main problem to be solved at present in practicing the plant manager responsibility system is, in a word, that of truly delegating powers. A leading central comrade has pointed out that in a certain sense practicing the plant manager responsibility systems means cutting the powers of the party committee over things it should not take charge of in production operations. One of these powers is that of policymaking in enterprise operations, and the other is the power of the plant manager to hire and fire middle-level cadres in the enterprises.

SHAANXI MEETING ON IMPROVING RURAL PARTY ORGANIZATIONS

[Excerpts] Bai Jinxun, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and director of the Organization Department, pointed out at a meeting on building grass-roots party organizations in the rural areas convened on 30 June that the party organizations at all levels must persevere in reform, strengthen leadership, raise the building of the grass-roots rural party organizations to a new level, and strive to bring about a big transformation in these organizations within 1 or 2 years.

Bai Jinxun said: The province has done a great deal of work in building the grass-roots rural party organizations in the past 2 years. Notable achievements have been scored. However, these organizations are still unable to meet the demands of the new situation in rural economic structural reform and commodity economy development. We must clearly recognize this.

The current task facing the grass-roots rural party organizations is to continually readjust the rural production structure, vigorously develop socialist commodity production, and promote and ensure the victorious fulfillment of the party's general task and goal. These organizations must also continually step up their own building and fully play their role as a fighting force.

He demanded that the prefectural, city and county CPC committees do still better in building the leadership groups of the districts, townships, and villages. They should focus on training, improving, and conducting regular building of ideological style for the grass-roots rural leadership groups. The following three aspects should currently be grasped in education for party members: 1) education in the program of serving the people wholeheartedly; 2) education in the concept of commodity economy and in cultural and scientific knowledge; 3) education in party style and discipline.

Also present at the meeting were Bai Jinian, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Bai Wenhua and Li Xipu, vice chairmen of the provincial Advisory Commission; and Tao Zhong, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee. Mou Lingsheng, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, presided.

NEW DEFENSE MINISTER ASSUMES OFFICE 1 JULY

OW011145 Taipei CNA in English 1014 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 1 (CNA) -- The ROC's new defense minister, Wang Tao-yuan, assumed office Tuesday after a change-over ceremony at the Ministry of National Defense.

Under the supervision of Minister Without Portfolio K.T. Li, Wang received the official seal from his predecessor Adm. Sung Chang-chi. Speaking on the occasion,, Li highly praised Sung for his contributions to national defense development, as Sung has served in many important military posts.

Under Sung's leadership, the military has successfully developed modern defense technologies to beef up national defenses. He has also instituted cut-backs in personnel to save on military expenditures, Li said. Li said that Wang, with his rich experience and spirit of dedication, will surely be able to advance national defense.

Sung also spoke at the ceremony, urging the military to continue striving for progress and innovation in order to transform themselves into an even stronger and more modern force.

In response, Minister Wang pledged that his ministry will work to build up the nation's defenses to safeguard the nation. The militay will follow Presidente Chiang Ching-kuo directives to mold themselves into a lean, tough fighting force, he said.

AMBASSADOR TO ROK DISCUSSES TAIWAN-KOREAN RELATIONS

[Text] Taipei, July 1 (CNA) -- The Republic of China's newly appointed ambassador to South Korea, Tsou Chien, said Tuesday that he believes friendly relations between the ROC and South Korea will be further enhanced because the two countries share the ideals of loving peace and freedom and objecting to the tyrannical rule of the Chinese Communists.

Tsou made his remarks in reply to a query on Sino-Korean relations posed by reporters after he was sworn in Tuesday.

Tsou said that the two nations have maintained good relatins because they are close geographically and culturally. The two Asian democracies have made outstanding advances in economic development in recent years, he said, pointing out that progress and mutual cooperation between the two nations play a very important role in maintaining peace and stability in north Asia.

Tsou also said that he felt honored to serve in his new post. He said he will make unstinting efforts to promote cooperation and exchange in various fields between the two nations.

'NEW STAR' TIAN JIYUN HAILED AS REFORMER

HK240030 Hong Kong NEW CHINA QUARTERLY in English 12 Jun 86 pp 10-12

[By Zhu Minzhi]

[Text] A new star rising on China's political scene is attracting public attention both at home and abroad. He is Tian Jiyun, vice-premier and newly elected member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party.

Tian become Vice-Premier in 1983 at the age of 55. He is now one of the youngest Chinese government leaders. He was appointed Vice-Premier and Secretary-General of the State Council at the Sixth National People's Congress and elected to the Political Bureau at the 5th Plenary Session of the Communst Party's 12th Central Committee held in September, 1985. Since coming to Beijing in February 1981 to serve as the State Council's Deputy Secretary-General, he has peformed many and varied duties with distinction and in particular displayed talent for organizational work and reforms.

Foreign papers describe him as an economist. He is indeed an expert in finance and economics, with wide experience gained since he began working in these fields in 1953. Before he was promoted to the State Council, he served as Director of the Provincial Finance Bureau of Sichuan, the most populous Chinese province which pioneered economic reforms in the country.

In the day-to-day running of the State Council's business, Tian has been in charge of financial, monetary and commercial affairs and foreign trade. This writer interviewed the Vice-Premier twice on the question of economic restructing. His insights into the Chinese economy and his views on reforms are presented in an easy and informed manner.

He is a warm advocate of economic reform. He puts immense effort into the drive, making personal investigations and suggesting various ways to use economic means to regulate activity instead of the use of administrative measures. As vice-premier, he first dealt with the problem of switching from delivery of profits to tax payments, a reform which he believes crucial for China's future economic growth. Under the profit delivery system, the enterprises turn their profits over to the state and draw on the state for expenditures. This practice makes no distinction between well-run and badly-run enterprises. It has the shortcoming generally described as "everybody eating from the same big pot", that is, every enterprise eats from the "big pot" of the State and every employee from the "big pot" of the enterprise. This "big pot" can be smashed, Tian suggests, by substituting taxes, with every enterprise completely responsible for its own profits and losses, and with each allowed to retain a share of the profits, with independent authority and functions. Only in this way, he believes, can an enterprise become fairy independent and operate with increasing vigour. He is detemrined to use the switch to taxes as a catalyst for restructuring the urban economy.

Back in 1981, he had submitted concrete proposals for the switch to the State Council, and contributed articles to the press to explain points that might give rise to misgivings. When he became Vice-Premier in 1983, he urged an early start of the second step of the switch with profit deliveries replaced by tax payments instead of the paralled use of both methods as practised in the first step. The second step was generally enforced the year before last and has brought very good results.

Tian's concept has a scientific basis and is of strategic significance for China's economic growth. It has been highly commended by top Chinese leaders. Communist party's General Secretary Hu Yaobang wrote this comment of Tian's report: the subject is "carefully studied" and "well presented" "this provides enlightenment and inspiration for the newly promoted young cadres to learn how to work."

Tian is very active in the national drive for reform of the economic structure decided upon in 1984 by the Party Central Committee. At the request of this writer, the Vice-Premier gave an incisive exposition of his views on a major issue of economic reform. He dealt with the separation of the functions of governmental departments and those of state-owned enterprises -- an important issue in the current reform of the economic structure. From his long experience in financial and economic work, he drew the conclusion that under the socialist system of ownership by the whole people, the right ownership and the managerial powers of these enterprises can be separated to a certain extent. Such a separation will make sure that the national economy remain an integrated whole while strengthening and improving the socialist system of state ownership.

He calls for a conceptional change to delegate more managerial authority to enterprises so that they can, while observing State plans and policies, operate independently and bear complete responsibility for their profit and loss. He stresses the need to put an end to the use of administrative orders to intervene in the management of an enterprise.

In the course of reform, efforts should be made to keep a firm grip on major aspects and explore new ways of reform suited to the characteristics of the Chinese economy.

In practical work, the Vice-Premier has taken personal charge of both price adjustment and wage reform. To solve problems cropping up after price controls over farm produce were relaxed, he made long journeys last year to Jiangsu, Anhui and Shandong provinces to study the practice and make investigations. He held meetings in Jiangsu and Beijing to solicit the views of leading Chinese economists on reform of the price system.

With more than 30 years' experience in financial and economic work, he proved himself to be a capable assistant to Zhao Ziyang, when Zhao, then chief executive of Sichuan, instituted his innovative economic experiments in that largest Chinese province in 1979. Tian was then Director of the Provincial Finance Bureau. He took an active part in the experiments and went to nearly every county in the province to see how things were going.

Everybody who meets and talks with Tian is impressed by his vigour, quick wit and wide knowledge. In spite of his heavy study of the Chinese economy, he is also interested in the economies of foreign countries because he wants to learn from their successes and failures for China's benefit. His knowledge has been enriched by foreign travel.

He gained first-hand knowledge of the economic patterns abroad during his tours in Asia, Africa and Europe. He attaches great importance to economic cooperation with West European countries. When he accompanied Zhao Ziyang on a visit to Britain, Federal Germany and the Netherlands in June last year, he made extensive contacts with industrial, commercial and financial circles and signed documents with the governments of the three countries on trade and economic and technological cooperation.

At the end of that tour, he told the press that China's relations with these countries are founded on a common political basis, and that to uphold world peace and promote each other's prosperity are in the interest of all. For the sake of world peace, he said, China and the West European countries will make common cause against the arms race and for the relaxation of international tension.

He drew attention to recent progress in China's cooperation with the West European countries in trade and other economic and technological fields. Such relations will continue to develop and be extended to other West European countries. There is much scope for this since China and the other countries each have their own potential and can supply each other's needs, he said.

In the last two years, Tian visited 11 African countries and signed a number of agreements on economic and technological cooperation. He told the press that he was convinced that prospects for economic cooperation with the other Third World countries were hopeful. There are many ways for China and the African countries to draw closer. Following its principle of "equality and mutual benefit, stress on practical results, diversity in form, and common progress," China will explore new ways for cooperation and make contributions to South-South cooperation.

Son of a revolutionary cadre, Tian imbibed revolutionary ideas in his youth. At the age of eleven, he began as an apprentice in a factory in the revolutionary base area of Shandong Province. He distinguished himself during the war years, providing logistical support for battles against the Japanese aggressors. He directed stretcher and agrarian reform teams and edited a battlefield-paper during the national liberation war. He was sent early in 1947 to take a one-year course in commercial accounting. He served afterwards as an accountant in an army unit.

After liberation, he was transferred to Guizhou Province to run a college and a school in finances and economic. For three years he was both an administrator and teacher. He managed to study Karl Marx's Capital, Stalin's The Foundations of Leninism, and books on economics and Chinese history. This knowledge proved to be of use in his work. Enriched by long years of diligent study and tempered in wartime hardship, he has grown from a boy apprentice to a government leader.

Tian has earned a name as a man of action. In his new demanding post as Vice-Premier, he carefully examines documents submitted to him for approval. He revised the repor he drafted in 1983 suggesting the switch to tax payments at least seven or eight times. He usually gets to the office an hour early and sometimes takes breakfast in the canteen with his staff. He works a 12-hour day. When he returns home in the evening, he reads more reports and documents until the late hours.

The Vice-Premier is always cheerful and optimistic. He likes swimming, jogging or just taking a walk. Now in his late fifties, he looks much younger, his face glowing with health, his hair dark and glossy.

Tian's wife now works at the People's Construction Bank of China. They have two sons and two daughters. Only the youngest son works in Beijing. Tian's father is still hale and hearty, and he himself has become a grandfather.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN ON NUCLEAR SAFETY STANDARDS

HK021448 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1229 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 2 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Yu Zhizhong replied at a news briefing this afternoon to questions raised by Chinese and foreign reporters on nuclear power. A reporter asked: Have the Chinese authorities considered the evacuation of the Hong Kong population in case of any emergency occurring at Daya Bay nuclear Power Plant?

Yu Zhizhong said: Vice Premier Li Peng has already answered similar questions raised by reporters. China's nuclear power industry is just at the initial stage. From the very beginning we have attached prime importance to engineering quality and safety. At the same time, we have also drawn up our own nuclear safety standards in light of the standards adopted by other countries. Therefore these standards can completely meet the requirements for nuclear safety. We should not negate nuclear energy as an advanced technology just because some minor accidents have happened in the field of nuclear power. As a part of the energy industry, the important role of nuclear power is undeniable.

Asked by reporters how many nuclear power plants are currently operating in China and whether any accident has ever happened, Yu Zhizhong said: As far as I know, there is no nuclear power plant currently operating in China.

RENMIN RIBAO NOTES HIGH INVESTMENT OVERSEAS

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- China has invested 239 million U.S. dollars in 144 joint ventures and exclusively Chinese enterprises in 34 countries and regions abroad, the overseas edition of the "PEOPLE'S DAILY" reported today. The paper said another 300 joint venture projects are being negotiated. Most of the operating ventures have involved investments of less than 10 million dollars, it said.

According to the paper, China's foreign enterprises are involved in forestry, fisheries and minerals. The Ministry of Forestry, for example, has opened a plywood factory in Brazil with an annual production capacity of 10,000 cubic meters of plywood.

In addition, China's deep-sea fishing fleets operate off the coasts of seven countries, including the Senegal, Sri Lanka and the United States, where they split the catch evenly with the host nation. As a result of the foreign fishing, fish from the seas of Western Africa were sold in Beijing for the first time last October.

The joint ventures also include 54 companies involved in such projects as drilling water wells and building railroads in Africa and harbor facilities in southern Asia.

By the end of May, Chinese restaurants with chefs sent from the mainland generated three million dollars in foreign exchange for the country. More than 100 chefs work in restaurants in Western Europe and North America that feature Sichuan, Guangdong, Beijing and Shanghai cuisines.

China is also building in Australia, Canada and elsewhere to produce iron, copper, diamonds and gold, the paper said.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS SOVIET-U.S. DISARMAMENT POSTURES

HK030853 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 3 Jul 86 p 3

["News Analysis" by Zhang Liang: "New Soviet-U.S. Postures on the Disarmament Issue"]

[Text] The fifth round of U.S.-Soviet arms control talks in Geneva concluded on 20 June. As with the previous rounds, this 50-day round of talks made no progress. However, around the time the talks concluded, the postures adopted by the United States and the Soviet Union on the nuclear disarmament issue attracted attention. During the talks, the Soviet representative put forward to the U.S. side a so-called "intermediate plan" on disarmament, which was openly welcomed by President Reagan. He expressed the hope that this Soviet move showed that the Soviet Union "has started to make serious efforts" in disarmament, and that this would mark a "turning point" in the arms control talks. Outside opinion holds that this new posture adopted by the two sides is something rarely seen since their summit meeting last November, but it is still too early to say that the U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks have yielded some result, since there are still many differences between them to be resolved. The following are the main contents of the proposal: 1) The Soviet Union proposes that the United States and the Soviet Union should not withdraw from the "treaty limiting antimissile missile defense systems" in the next 15 years," and that work in the field of the U.S. "Strategic Defense Initiative" be limited to laboratory research, that is, to the level that the United States has already reached. 2) The offensive strategic weapons of the two sides, that is, land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles, submarine-fired missiles, and heavy bombers, should be limited to the level of parity, and the two sides should each reduce the numbers of carrier vehicles to 1,600 and warheads to 8,000. 3) The question of medium-range nuclear weapons capable of hitting the Soviet Union or the United States should be resolved separately from the above-mentioned three-in-one strategic weapons.

The media generally hold that the Soivet Union's new "intermediate plan" is more flexible in certain respects compared with previous Soviet disarmament proposals. In the past the Soviet Union has consistently opposed the U.S. "star wars" scheme (that is, Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative) and has regarded U.S. scrapping of this scheme as a precondition for reaching an agreement on reducing strategic nuclear weapons. This time, however, the Soviet Union says that "star wars" scheme research can be limited to the level of laboratory research. In addition, the new proposal no longer insists on counting as strategic weapons medium-range missiles and bombers deployed by the United States in Europe and on aircraft carriers, but instead suggests that reductions should first be carried out in long-range missiles and bombers. However, it is evident from the plan that the Soviet Union is emphasizing that the two sides must undertake their obligations and must not withdraw from the treaty on antimissile missiles for at least 15 years, thus limiting U.S. development of strategic defensive weapons.

This new Soviet proposal was put forward not longer after President Reagan announced his decision on no longer adhering to SALT-II. Western public opinion felt that this proposal was "unexpected," and also analyzed the Soviet move as possibly being based on the following consideration: If SALT-II is indeed scrapped, the 1972 U.S.-Soviet treaty directed against antimissile missiles will also be in danger of disintegration; and so the Soviet Union produced this new plan in order to maintain the process of the U.S.-Soviet arms control talks and also to limit the U.S."star wars" scheme as far as possible. In this way the Soviet Union could demonstrate its flexibility before world opinion and would also be able to buy time to maintain strategiv party with the United States.

The U.S. response to the new Soviet proposal has also exceeded expectations to some extent. There are also reasons for the relatively positive U.S. response. First, certain aspects of the new Soviet proposal are in accord with U.S. thinking, because the United States has consistently demanded that reduction of strategic weapons cannot be directly linked to the strategic defense scheme, and the two should be resolved separately. The United States also holds that the research work on the strategic defense scheme does not violate the antimissile treaty. Second, since the Reagan administration announced at the end of May its decision to no longer adhere to SALT-II, it has come under strong domestic and international pressure, since its Western allies and the majority of congressmen have urged the administration to change its mind and continue to adhere to the treaty. Some people in the West therefore hold that in expressing appreciation "beyond expectation" for the new Soviet proposal, the Reagan administration is acting partly to extricate itself from a passive position and to keep up the momentum of talks and dialogue with the Soviet Union. Doing this is useful for continuing to bargain with the Soviet Union in the talks, without going so far as to cause domestic discontent when the U.S. congressional mid-term elections are imminent. It can also reassure its West European allies in this fashion.

However, a good deal of public opinion holds that the recent mutual posturing of the United States and the Soviet Union on the disarmament issue only represents a lightening of the atmosphere, and there is no clear intention on the part of the two sides for reaching any kind of disarmament agreement, and it appears that they are "sharing a bed but dreaming different dreams," with each devising its own schemes. The new Soviet proposal focuses on reducing strategic nuclear weapons in exchange for no U.S. withdrawal from the antimissile missile treaty for at least 15 years, while also setting restrictions on the U.S. "star wars" scheme. And in its response, the Reagan administration stressed that the new Soviet proposal "is unacceptable without amendments." It appears that the U.S. "star wars" scheme remains the crux of the argument between the two sides. As for how to reduce strategic nuclear weapons when the two sides have different kinds of weapons and in different strengths, and each side is superior in different respects, this remains a hot potato.

The well-known American commentator Hersh recently published an article in the CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR which drew a vivid analogy: The first big door blocking serious talks between Moscow and Washington has been opened, and Reagan naturally wants to go into the room to see what is there. However, before entering the room, there are still many doors that are still unopened along the long corridor of the disarmament talks.

USSR, U.S. NEGOTIATE OVER FUTURE MEETINGS

[Text] Moscow, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Moscow and Washington are negotiating on rescheduling a foreign ministerial meeting to prepare a second summit between U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, a senior Soviet official said today. Deputy Foreign Minister Vladimir Petrovskiy told a press conference that his country has proposed to the United States to reschedule a meeting between U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and that the talks have now started. Petrovskiy said, however, that the two men will meet only after the preparatory talks yield "concrete" results.

Because of the U.S. air raids on Libya on April 15, the Soviet Union cancelled a mid-May Shultz-Shevardnadze meeting to discuss a new superpower summit.

"The Soviet Union supports productive dialogue and makes no exception for any country, including the United States," Petrovskiy told reporters. Asked when Shultz and Shevardnadze would meet, Petrovskiy said, "dates have no consequence, what is important is the content of the meeting." He said the Soviet Union would like the summit not to be "just a handshake," therefore it should produce "concrete and tangible results with regard to international security."

Petrovskiy confirmed that Moscow has proposed to Washington for a meeting of the Standing Consultative Commission in Geneva to discuss the fate of the SALT II Treaty. The commission was established under the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty to study allegations of violations by both the United States and the Soviet Union.

Reagan has announced that the United States would scrap the 1979 SALT II Treaty because of alleged Soviet violations. The Soviet Union, however, has accused Reagan of starting a new round of arms race by renouncing the accord.

U.S. 'INTERFERENCE' IN NICARAGUA DECRIED AT UN

[Text] United Nations, July 2 (XINHUA) -- China and several other United Nations Security Council members today reiterated their opposition to any form of external interference in Central American affairs and called on the United States and Nicaragua to settle their disputes through peaceful negotiations.

Speaking at an emergency meeting of the Security Council, the representatives praised the Contadora Group and its supporting Lima Group for their efforts in mediating conflict in Central America and for attempting to bring peace to the region. The Contadora Group is composed of Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela and the Lima Group joins Argentina, Brazil, Peru and Uruguay.

In his speech, Li Luye, Chinese permanent representative to the United Nations, said he regretted that the U.S. House of Representatives recently passed a bill providing 100 million U.S. dollars for military and other aid to the anti-government armed forces in Nicaragua. "This action by the House of Representatives violates the established norms governing international relations and places new obstacles to the restoration of peace and stability in Central America. It will have serious impact on the development of the situation in Central America," he said. He added that "the Chinese government is opposed to such an action of interference in the internal affairs of Nicaragua."

The Chinese ambassador maintained that the fundamental way to ease tension in the region was to respect the state sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Nicaragua and all other countries in the region and to stop all outside interference. "We believe that the principle of non-interference should be fully respected by all parties concerned and that the disputes between the United States and Nicaragua should be settled through peaceful negotiations on an equal basis in accordance with the principles of the United Nations Charter, and not through the use or threat of force," he said.

The Chinese ambassador expressed the hope that all the countries concerned would respect the aspirations of the peoples of the Central American countries so that the efforts of the Contadora Group and the Lima Group for the realization of peace might yield positive results.

Ambassador James V. Gbeho of Ghana said that the decision of the U.S. House of Representatives to grant 100 million U.S. dollars in aid to "the rebel mercenary force" in Nicaragua abused the letter and spirit of the U.N. Charter. The acts of the U.S. Government, he added, substantially undermine the peace-seeking efforts of the Contadora and Lima Groups.

Australian permanent representative Richard Wollcott said that recent developments in Central America had only served to "complicate the situation further". He stressed that the cycle of violence must be stopped and all states in the region had the right to choose their forms of government free from outside interference". The Australian ambassador called on all countries to support the Contadora process and to fulfill their obligations under the U.N. Charter, specially the obligation to settle international disputes by peaceful means.

Representatives from Cuba, Mongolia, Vietnam, Czechoslovakia, Angola, Syria, Democratic Yemen and Spain also spoke at today's meeting. The emergency meeting which began yesterday will continue tomorrow.

RENMIN RIBAO ON U.S. POLICY ON NICARAGUA

["Roundup" by Zhu Manting: "A Move Which Aggravates the Tension in Central America"]

[Text] The U.S. House of Representatives approved a bill providing $110 million military aid for the Nicaraguan rebels on 25 June. This has aroused strong repercussions in the world, with attacks on it echoing everywhere. It is universally believed that this move of the U.S. Congress has given the green light for the Reagan administration to have a freer hand in pushing the policy of intervention in Central America, and will inevitably aggravate the tense U.S.-Nicaraguan relations and seriously affect the Central American peace talks promoted by Contadora in a big way.

In the current U.S. aid provided for the Nicaraguan rebels, $80 million is in military aid, and the other $30 million is in logistics aid. As the U.S. Senate had earlier adopted this bill, the U.S. Congress has for the first time approved the government's formally providing military aid to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Providing military aid to the Nicaraguan rebels has been an issue of great dispute in the U.S. Congress. Back in 1982, the U.S. Government instigated the Nicaraguan contras to carry out their activities. At that time, the aid funds were provided by the CIA. Since March 1983, the military activities of the Nicaraguan contras have expanded, and large-scope harassing activities have been conducted in Nicaraguan territory. The inside story of the U.S. Government's plotting behind the scenes of this "secret war" was gradually disclosed, arousing strong opposition in the United States, and some personages in the U.S. Congress also held serious doubts about the U.S. authorities' utilizing the rebels against the Sandinista government, and on several occasions proposed to stop CIA aid, which was aimed at overthrowing the Nicaraguan Government. In the latter half of 1984, the U.S. authorities suspended aid to the Nicaraguan rebels under the opposition of the Congress. But since the beginning of Reagan's second term of office in 1985, the U.S. Government has adopted a tougher line on the Nicaragua issue, and created public opinion in a big way, condemning Nicaragua's obtaining military aid from another big power. Its aim is simply to make the Congress approve continued aid to the Nicaraguan rebels. In 1985, the U.S. Congress approved nonmilitary "humanisation aid" of $27 million to the Nicaraguan rebels, and now, under pressure from the U.S. Government, the U.S. Congress has finally adopted the aid bill.

The U.S. Government is doing its best to support the Nicaraguan rebels, and the cause lies in the fact that it wants to make use of the Nicaraguan contras in creating a military threat to the Nicaraguan Government and in maintaining its military pressure, in order to compel the Nicaraguan Government to give in and to impede the Central American peace talks. As is known to all, although the United States has verbally supported the peace efforts of Contadora, it has in practice done its utmost to impede a peace accord among the Central American states. This is because the United States and the Latin American states represented by Contadora are pursuing different targets. The Latin American states are trying to get rid of foreign intervention and to display the principle of self-determination in Latin America through their own efforts; while the United States is doing its utmost to keep Central America under its control. Once the Latin American peace talks reach an accord, all external forces will be unable to continue their intervention in Latin America, which is very difficult for the United States to accept. It is precisely because of this that when the eight foreign ministers of the Contadora and Lima groups went to Washington in February this year, demanding that the United States stop aiding the Nicaraguan contras, President Reagan avoided them. On the contrary, a few days later, he was receiving the leader of the Nicaraguan contras, and stepped up lobbying of the Congress to approve the bill on aid for the Nicaraguan contras. The approval of this bill will inevitably aggravate the tense situation in the Central American region, and create a block to the peace talks. The Nicaraguan Government has already issued a statement condemning it, while the other Latin American countries have also attacked it in succession. Carlos Andres Perez, former Venezuelan president and vice chairman of the Socialist International, pointed out that the U.S. move shows no respect for, and neglects the feelings of, the Latin American people.

The various Latin American countries are exerting their efforts in getting rid of the intervention of and control by superpowers, and hoping to adopt a road of peace and development. The U.S. interventionist move at such a moment is a "historical mistake," as pointed out by some personages of the Contadora Group.

KIM IL-SONG GREETS HU YAOBANG ON CPC JUBILEE

OW021205 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, received a message of greetings from Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Central committee of the Workers Party of Korea [WPK], on 30 June on the 65th founding anniversary of the CPC.

The message said: On the occasion of the 65th founding anniversary of the CPC, in the name of the WPK Central Committee, all its members, and myself, I extend my warmest congratulations and comradely greetings to you, the CPC Central Committee and all its members. The 65 years of the CPC have been a course of severe tests and heroic deeds decorated with victories and glory.

The message said: Under the correct guidance of the CPC and displaying the revolutionary spirit of self-reliance and hard work and upholding the four cardinal principles, the fraternal Chinese people have scored tremendous achievements in carrying out modernization and building socialism with Chinese characteristics since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The changes taking place in China are great contributions to the common cause of the world's revolutionary people who are struggling for freedom, independence, and socialism. The WPK and the Korean people heartily rejoice at and warmly congratulate the achievements made by the CPC and the fraternal Chinese people in their revolutionary struggle and construction. It is a steadfast policy of the WPK to cherish the traditional Korean-Chinese friendship and to continue to consolidate and develop this friendship. We will, as always, do our utmost to consolidate and develop the invincible fraternal friendship and unity between our two parties, the governments of our two countries, and our two peoples for generations to come.

In conclusion, the message said: The WPK and the Korean people sincerely wish the CPC and the fraternal Chinese people greater successes in the struggle to carry out the resolutions of the National Conference of Party Delegates, build a modern socialist power, bring Taiwan back to the embrace of the motherland, and achieve the reunification of China.

DPRK SAYS U.S. HOUSE RESOLUTION 'CONSPIRACY'

[XINHUA report: "NODONG SINMUN Article Says U.S. House Resolution on Korean Issue Is a Conspiracy"]

[Text] Pyongyang, 28 June (XINHUA) -- The Korean NODONG SINMUN today carries an article saying that a recent U.S. House resolution on the Korean issue is a conspiracy. It was reported that in a resolution adopted on 24 June, the U.S. House of Representatives required North Korea to contribute to relaxing the tense situation on the Korean peninsula. Referring to the resolution's demand that North Korea accept the plan on "cross recognition" and that both North and South Korea "simultaneously join the United Nations," the article points out that this plan is an outcome of the U.S. conspirary to create "two Koreas," aiming at splitting Korea forever. The article points out that the root cause of the tense situation on the Korean peninsula is that U.S. troops have seized South Korea and carried out provocative activities. But North Korea has made positive efforts to relax tension on the peninsula. This is an indisputable fact that can never be altered by U.S. sophistry. Finally, the article requires that the United States should not evade the peace proposal put forward by North Korea and immediately withdraw its troops and weaponry from South Korea.

HOANG VAN HOAN GREETS CPC FOUNDING ANNIVERSARY

[Text] The CPC Central Committee received a congratulatory letter from Comrade Hoang Van Hoan on 30 June on the occasion of the 65th founding anniversary of the CPC.

The message said: The birth of the CPC is an important event in modern history and is of positive significance for the development of revolution in the world, especially the revolution in Vietnam. Over the past several decades, the Communist Party of Vietnam [CPV] and the CPC have established a comradely fraternal friendship in their joint struggle under the banner of proletarian internationalism. In recent years, since the downfall of the gang of four, the CPC has achieved remarkable results in making the people better off and the country strong. Almost all communist and workers parties in the world have spoken highly of the proposition of building socialism suited to the conditions in China. Although the Le Duan clique has sabotaged the close relations between Vietnam and China, the CPC's contributions to Vietnam's revolution will forever be remembered by the Vietnamese people.

FILIPINOS DEMAND WITHDRAWAL OF FOREIGN BASES

[Text] Manila, July 2 (XINHUA) -- A multi-sectoral movement in the Philippines today called for the withdrawal of all foreign military bases and all nuclear weapons from the Philippine soil.

In a press conference held here, "the campaign for a sovereign Philippines" announced that it would launch a nationwide signature campaign calling for a sovereign Philippines. A spokesperson of the movement claimed at the press conference that the movement is initiated by 60 organizations. It is guided by the principles of nationalism, peace, sovereignty, independence, neutrality and development, she added. She said the Philippines should actively cooperate with its neighbors to make Southeast Asia in general and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) members (Brunei, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, Thailand and Indonesia) in particular, a zone of neutrality, freedom and peace, free of all nuclear weapons and free from the domination of all foreign powers.

The campaign demanded that foreign military bases in the Philippines be removed once and for all. There are two U.S. military bases in the country: the Subic Naval Base, some 130 kms northwest of Manila, and the Clark Air Base, some 80 kms north of here. Philippine Vice-President Salvador Laurel said recently that there are no nuclear weapons in the two military bases.

The spokesperson indicated that they are not asking the immediate removal of the two bases, but not later than 1991 when the military base treaty is to expire.

President Corazon Aquino repeatedly declared that the Philippines will respect the military base treaty, but keep its option open after 1991.

The campaign also decided to stage a mass action on July 4, the Philippine Republic Day or Philippine-American Friendship Day, to press for their demands.

PAKISTANI AIR CHIEF VISITS PRC COUNTERPART

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Wang Hai, commander of the Air Force of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, gave a banquet here tonight in honor of a Pakistan Air Force goodwill mission led by Air Chief Marshal Jamal Ahmad Khan, chief of staff of Pakistan Air Force.

In their toasts, Wang and Jamal praised the friendship and cooperation between the two Air Forces and wished to see continued growth of these ties.

This morning, Wang Hai presided over a ceremony at the headquarters of the PLA Air Force to welcome the Pakistan mission, which arrived yesterday.

AFGHAN AIR FORCE UNDER STRICT SOVIET CONTROL

[Text] Islamabad, July 2 (XINHUA) -- The Afghan Air Force is virtually under the control of the Soviets, according to Afghan pilots who recently surrendered to the resistance forces. Jets of the Afghan Air Force are controlled by Russian radars and if a jet deviates from its target, it is followed and hit by another aircraft, said Afghan helicopter pilot Abdu-Tawab, who surrendered to the Mujahideen (freedom fighters) recently.

Ali Madad, a helicopter pilot of the Afghan Air Force who surrendered to the guerrillas in April this year, also disclosed that some Afghan pilots had been executed for their failure to hit their targets. Air raids are mostly conducted by the Russians because they do not trust Afghan pilots, said Ali Madad. In the Afghan Air Force, he said, the number of Russian personnel is equal to that of the Kabul regime.

Both helicopter pilots made these remarks in interviews published in the latest issue of the monthly bulletin AFGHAN INFORMATION CENTER. An Afghan aircraft engineer captured by the resistance forces recently also said that Afghan military officers are given only minor tasks. "Our duty consisted of minor technical aspects of aircraft, such as checking the starter and electric current. Other important tasks were in the hands of Russian engineers," he said.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON ZHAO ZIYANG'S EUROPE AFRICA TOUR

More on Arrival in Romania

[Excerpts] Bucharest, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Chinese premier Zhao Ziyang flew in here this afternoon to start his five-day official good-will visit to Romania. The special plane carrying Premier Zhao and his party landed at the Otopeni airport at 2:00 p.m. He was given a warm welcome by Romanian party and government officials headed by Premier Dascalescu.

Premier Zhao's visit is regarded here as "a major event in the annals of the relations of friendship, unity and cooperation between the parties and governments of China and Romania." In a commentary, the Romanian news agency hailed the achievements and progress made by the two countries in the all-round cooperation in the fields of economy, science and technology and cooperative production.

After reviewing a guard of honor, Premier Zhao, accompanied by Premier Dascalescu, drove to the Datin Hotel. He is expected to hold talks with Premier Dascalescu, which is scheduled for this afternoon.

Issues Written Statement

OW021342 Beijing XINHUA in English 1333 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Bucharest, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, who flew in here this afternoon, said that he has come to "deepen Sino-Romanian mutual understanding and friendship and further promote the all-round friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries."

In a written statement released at the Otopeni airport upon his arrival, he said that the relations between China and Romania had been very close, especially in recent years, when highest-ranking party and government leaders of the two countries have met annually. "This has given a strong impetus to the steady growth of Sino-Romanian friendly relations and cooperation," he added.

He said that he will have an in-depth exchange of views with Romanian Party General Secretary and President Nicolae Ceausescu, Prime Minister Constantin Dascalescu and other Romanian leaders on international issues of mutual concern and on ways to further develop the bilateral relations. He expressed the hope that his visit will contribute to the growth of Sino-Romanian friendly relations and cooperation and to the maintenance of world peace.

Talks With Romanian Counterpart

[Text] Bucharest, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Chinese and Romanian premiers focussed their talks today on ways and means of strengthening cooperation between their countries in economy, trade, science and technology.

During the official talks held this evening shortly after Premier Zhao Ziyang's arrival here on a five-day official visit, the two leaders had a detailed discussion on the further development of Sino-Romanian economic relations, a Chinese Foreign Ministry official told the press after the talks.

The talks, which lasted more than two hours and were described as "cordial and friendly", covered bilateral relations and international issues of mutual concern. The two leaders briefed each other on the socialist construction of their respective countries and the policies adopted by both governmentse in developing their economies, the official said.

They reviewed with satisfaction the smooth growth of friendly cooperation between the two countries since the visit of Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu to China last October. The Romanian prime minister said his government will make determined efforts to attain the goals set by the leaders of the two countries last October in economic cooperation for 1986-1990.

Premier Zhao Ziyang described the relations between the two parties and countries as "no ordinary". Thanks to the solid foundation, he said, their friendly and cooperative relations will surely develop on a lasting and stable basis in all fields.

Zhao said that the Chinese Communist Party and Government have always attached great importance to the development of economic relations with Romania. China will take all possible measures to implement the agreements signed by the two countries, he said.

The Chinese official said the two premiers were satisfied with the fact that the two countries are identical or close to each other in their views on major current international issues. The Romanian prime minister highly assessed the role played by Chinese in the struggle to safeguard world peace and said effective cooperation between the two countries in the international arena will help safeguard world peace.

The Chinese premier thanks Romania for its support of China's entry into a number of international organizations. He also expressed the hope that Romania would play a bigger role in the settlement of key issues confronting the world.

[Text] Bucharest, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Chinese and Romanian premiers today pledged common efforts to bring the relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries still further. They made the pledge at a banquet here this evening given by Romanian Prime Minister Constantin Dascalescu in honor of visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang.

Zhao Ziyang said that it was the firm policy of the Chinese Communist Party and Government to develop an all-round lasting and stable relationship of cooperation with Romania. Premier Zhao Ziyang, who arrived here this afternoon on the first leg of his six-nation tour of the Balkan-Mediterranean region, said that the Chinese people cherish most dearly the profound friendship they have forged with the Romanian people through the years. He expressed the conviction that common efforts by the two countries are bound to bring such relationship still further.

Romanian Prime Minister Dascalescu described Zhao Ziyang's visit as "an important event in the annals of the relations of close friendship, unity and all-round cooperation between the parties, governments and peoples of the two countries. He said that Romania was making determined efforts to develop the economic, scientific and technological cooperation and the cooperation in production so as to make the People's Republic of China one of the principal partners in Romania's foreign economic relations.

As was stated by Premier Zhao Ziyang, the friendly relations between the two countries have become closer, especially in recent years when there have been frequent exchange of visits between high-ranking party and government officials. According to statistics released by Romania, bilateral trade between the two countries has increased 2.5 times over the past decade and China has become the sixth biggest trading partner of Romania. Their cooperation touches almost every field of endeavour.

Premier Zhao Ziyang paid high tribute to the major achievements made by the Romania people in the economic and social development. "This", he said, "is a source of encouragement to the Chinese people who are comrades-in-arms with the Romanian people." He expressed the sincere wishes for an increasingly prosperous socialist Romania.

The Romanian prime minister also noted that the Romanian people are also very glad to see the outstanding achievements the Chinese people have made in developing the national economy, science and culture and in their all-round socialist modernization drive and wished China greater successes under the guidance of the Chinese Communist Party's policy for development along the socialist road.

Zhao Addresses Banquet

[Text] Bucharest, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Romanian Prime Minister Constantin Dascalescu today called for an end to arms race and for concerted efforts to safeguard world peace.

Speaking at a banquet here this evening given by the Romanian prime minister in honor of the visiting Chinese premier who flew in this afternoon on the first leg of his six-nation tour in the Balkan and Mediterranean region, the two leaders drew attention to the danger of war that is threatening world peace and the security of peace-loving countries. Zhao Ziyang said, however, that "so long as the people of the world unite and make concerted efforts, a new war can be prevented and world peace can be maintained."

He said that both China and Romania are devoting their all-out efforts to building up their respective countries and hence they need an international environment of lasting peace. He reiterated China's foreign policy of independence and peace and its stand of opposing all forms of arms race and hegemonism, which, he said, seriously threaten world peace and security of peace-loving countries. China will never participate in arms race and it will never seek hegemony, he stressed. China is willing to work together with Romania and all other peace-loving countries and people in making every effort to safeguard world peace.

Dascalescu in his speech called it a fundamental task at present to stop arms race so as to prevent a new world war and maintain world peace.

He described the international situation as "worsening" and the danger of a nuclear calamity "growing" as a result of massive stockpiling of destructive weapons. He called for an earliest possible reduction of arms, nuclear arms in the first place, a move that needs extensive participation of all countries and corresponding international supervision, he said.

The Romania prime minister also called for an end to military confrontation in the world, adding that all conflicts between states should be settled through negotiations and by poltical means in the spirit of understanding, cooperation and world peace. The Romanian prime minister said that Romania was striving for a comprehensive solution to the problem of underdevelopment, including the debt issue in some developing countries, and for a new international economic order.

XINHUA Reviews Zhao First Day

["First Day of Premier Zhao Ziyang's Romania Visit Fruitful" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Bucharest, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang spent a fruitful day in Romania Wednesday as he opened his six-nation tour of the Balkan and Mediterranean region. This is Zhao's first official visit to Romania as premier of the State Council. His visit was described by the press here as "an important event in the annals of the friendly and cooperative relations between the parties, governments and peoples of the two countries. Zhao was welcomed by Premier Constantin Dascalescu and other high-ranking Romania officials.

Zhao said in his arrival statement that he came to Romania to enhance mutual understanding and friendship between China and Romania.

The premier's activities on the opening day of the visit were topped off by a two-hour talks with Dascalescu that focused on specific ways to strengthen cooperation between the two countries in economy, trade, science and technology. During the talks, the two leaders reviewed with satisfaction the smooth progress in bilateral relations and expressed their confidence in the future prospects of such relations. Both said their nations are committed to concrete measures to consolidate and develop the achievements arising from the visit to China by Romania President Nicolae Ceausescu in October last year.

The two premiers also said they plan to stengthen their cooperation in international affairs as the two countries share identical or similar views on major international issues. They voiced their determination to put an end to the arms race, urging a speedy reduction of armaments and nuclear weapons in particular, so as to prevent a new world war and maintain world peace.

Premier Zhao, who is also member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, is expected today to meet Nicolae Ceausescu, general secretary of the Romania Communist Party, for in-depth talks on bilateral relations and major international affairs.

POLAND 'INTERESTED' IN NORMALIZING PRC RELATIONS

[Text] Warsaw, July 2 (XINHUA) -- The Polish Government is interested in full normalization of relations with China, Poland's Foreign Minister Marian Orzechowski said today at a press conference during the 10th Polish United Workers' Party Congress. Orzechowski praised China's important role in international affairs, and noted that trade and economic cooperation between Poland and China has been marked by increasing trade volume.

Poland and China have a bright future in developing scientific and cultural ties, said Orzechowski, also an alternate member of the Political Bureau of the Party's Central Committee. He added, "Political dialogue (between the two countries) is going on. It can be expected to continue as both have shown sincerity" for doing so. Noting Poland's interest in furthering ties with China, Orsechowski said this is a process involving both bilateral and global relations.

GORBACHEV MEETS WITH JARUZELSKI, DEPARTS POLAND

[Text] Warsaw, July 1 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet and Polish leaders noted today that the primary task facing their economic cooperation is to "make the transition to more advanced forms of socialist economic integration." The remarks were made today during a meeting between Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and Polish leader Wojciech Jaruzelski, the Polish News Agency PAP reported.

PAP interpreted the "more advanced forms" the leaders referred to as meaning direct mutually beneficial contacts for enterprises, joint companies, and for research, experimental and design teams.

Gorbachev praised the successful debate at the 10th Congress of Poland's ruling United Workers' Party. The Soviet leader said that "decisions made at the top Polish communist forum will further strengthen the United Workers' Party's organizational capability and prestige in society." He added that the party's work will enhance Poland's socio-economic development and bring closer ties between Poland and the Soviet Union.

Jaruzelski stressed that the presence of the Sovet party's delegation at the Congress demonstrates the "fraternal character of relations developed between both parties and nations."

Both leaders discussed current European and world issues, indicating the situations are at an important and decisive period. Jaruzelski and Gorbachev agreed that the proposals of the USSR, Poland and the other socialist Warsaw Treaty countries on nuclear, chemical and conventional weapons are creating a realistic opportunity for checking the buildup of the arms arsenals and radically turning developments toward peace, security and international cooperation.

Gorbachev and the Soviet delegation left Warsaw today for home.

ROMANIAN CP GREETS CPC ON FOUNDING ANNIVERSARY

OW021215 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] The CPC Central Committee received a message of greetings from the Romanian Communist Party [RCP] Central Committee on 27 June on the occasion of the 65th founding anniversary of the CPC.

The message said: Applying the principles of scientific socialism to the specific conditions in China, the CPC has mobilized and guided the people in carrying out penetrating reforms in various facets of economic and social life and achieving the strategic objectives of socialist revolution and construction. Under the CPC leadership, the Chinese working people have scored remarkable achievements in developing and modernizing industry, agriculture, science, and education, and in improving the people's material and spiritual living standards. With its achievements in setting up new systems and its active role in the international arena, the People's Republic of China has made especially important contributions to strengthening the might and prestige of socialism in the world, enhancing peace and security, and promoting international cooperation.

The members of the RCP and the Romanian people set a high value on the close relations of friendshp, unity, and cooperation between the RCP and the CPC and between our two countries and peoples, which have been formed and developed over a long period of time and are firmly based on the principles of mutual respect for independence and national sovereignty, equality, noninterference in each other's internal affairs, and comradely mutual assistance. The RCP and the Romanian people will do everything they can to strengthen their close cooperation with the CPC and the Chinese people, and will, in accordance with the mutual understanding reached at th highest level, further develop the traditional friendly and cooperative relations with the CPC and the Chinese people in various fields to the benefit of the Romanian and Chinese peoples, as well as the common cause of socialism and peace.

In commemorating this glorious holiday, dear comrades, we wish you, our fraternal CPC members and the economic and social development plan formulated by the 12th CPC National Congress and the National Conference of Party Delegates, the socialist construction of the motherland, and the struggle for progress and world peace.

Chen said she was pleased to see Kosova Province has very good relations with China's Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region. "We hope that Kosova and Ningxia will expand their cooperation in all fields," she added. The Yugoslav visitors arrived in China June 27. In the past few days, they had a tour of Ningxia in the northwest.

RENMIN RIBAO ARTICLES STUDIES ARAB PROBLEMS

[Debt -- A Problem Facing Arab World -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Despite its abundance of crude oil and oil dollars, the Arab world is facing the debt problem, the same problem facing the African and Latin American countries, a signed article of the PEOPLE'S DAILY said today.

Statistics show that in 1980, the total Arab world debt was 50 billion dollars and in five years has increased to 120 billion dollars, with 17 countries running debts up to 500 million dollars each. The Arab world debt accounts for 13 percent of the total debt of the world's developing countries. Those countries with the heaviest debt burden are Iraq with 35 billion dollars; Egypt, 29 billion; Morocco, 15 billion; Algeria, 13 billion; and Sudan, 9 billion. Arab ecomomic sources say that the historical cause for such heavy debts are the backward Arab economies whose dependency on a single resource -- oil, has resulted in lopsided economic development.

The debt has been provoked, too, by the consistent increase in the prices of industrial products imported from the developed countries in recent years. To make matters worse, the prices of the Arab world's raw materials and primary products, which are sold to industrialized nations, have decreased annually. Arab economists also point to plummeting oil prices, wars and general unrest in the Arab region as causes of economic woes.

The Arab countries still face the task of erecting a comprehensive, solid and independent economic base. The Gulf countries, for instance, have an abundance of oil and oil dollars, but they lack personnel and other natural resources needed to build an economy with a diversified base. Lack of economic cooperation and coordination also precludes overall regional economic development. Inevitably, those countries with money are short of personnel, while those with plenty of people and sufficient natural resources other than oil have little money. Unitl the Arab states cooperate more fully, they will have a hard time breaking away from their dependence on the developed countries.

Economists in Egypt also point out that the increase in the import of expensive, luxury consumer goods has not only eaten away at the foreign exchange coffers, but it has impeded the development of Arab national industry. To overcome their difficult economic situation, the Arab states are making efforts to develop production and change the irregular structure of their economies. They are now devoting major efforts to increasing agricultural production, to enlarging the varieties of exported commodities, to exporting processed products instead of primary ones, to tightening the control of import of consumer goods and to introducing foreign advanced technology and investment.

Meanwhile, they are attaching importance to the strengthening of mutual economic links. 1986 has witnessed multi-economic cooperation among the member states of their Gulf Cooperation Council. Egypt, Jordan and Iraq are expanding their economic cooperation while increasing their political relations. And Sudan, soon after forming its new government, has made the improvement of its domestic economy a priority. All this indicates that these countries are exploring a correct way to solve their economic problems.

COLOMBIA'S ECONOMY FLOURISHING, DESPITE PROBLEMS

[Summary: Despite Problems, Colombia's Economy Looking Good by Wu Huizhong -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Bogota, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Colombia's economy registered clear signs of recovery in most of its sectors in the first semester of this year, and the situation will be fairly good for the whole year. Government revenues totalled 1.2 billion U.S. dollars in the first six months of 1986, a 68 percent increase over the same period last year.

The country's international reserves are now at 2.3 billion dollars and are expected to total 3.3 billion by the end of the year. In December 1985, international reserves totalled 1.9 billion.

Exports are making great contributions to the improvement of Colombia's economy. As Colombian ex-President Alfonso Lopez put it, Colombian survival depends on its foreign exchange, and getting more foreign exchange depends on exporting its products with a competitive capacity in the international market. Bananas and flowers are exported in addition to the traditional products such as coffee, petroleum and coal. Tourism is another foreign exchange earner.

Since Brazil, the world's number one coffee producer, was forced to decrease its exports due to drought, Colombia has enjoyed a sharp increase in coffee exports in the first five months of this year; exports are up 79 percent over last year. Authorities say coffee exports will earn Colombia 3 billion dollars this year. The country will also export six million tons of coal this year, which is estimated to bring 240 million dollars to the country.

Economic prosperity has slowed down the growth of the cost of living index, which registered 11 percent up to May and will not exceed 22 percent this year. In 1985, the cost of living index was 22.4 percent. Experts here say relative prosperity has come as a result of economic readjustment policies. But the economic perspective is closely linked with the prices of coffee, petroleum and coal on the international markets.

Recently Colombia's mild coffee prices went from 2.25 dollars per pound to less than 1.80 dollars per pound. The stumbling prices of petroleum and coal will also affect Colombia's foreign exchange income this year. Because of the drop of fuel oil prices, the country will lose 340 million dollars.

As in other Latin American countries, the foreign debt burden can only retard economic development, although Colombia's debt burden is relatively small, totalling 1.3 billion. Nonetheless, last year Colombia devoted 36 percent of its exportation income to pay the services of its foreign debts.

Rising urban unemployment also worries Colombian authorities. In the cities of Bogota, Medellin, Cali and Barranquilla the unemployment rate went from 13.1 percent in December 1985 to 14.3 percent in April this year. And the government had calculated the level would decrease due to increased coffee exports.

The current economic situation in Colombia, despite the difficulties, is relatively good in comparison with its neighboring countries.

RENMIN RIBAO ON CORRECTING MISTAKES MADE IN REFORM

["Short commentary": "Mistakes Should Be Corrected; Correction Is Permissible"]

[Text] How the mistakes made by certain comrades in reform should be treated has become the talk of the town for some time. In fact, the answer to this question is quite clear: We must allow people to correct their mistakes. The comrades who have made mistakes should have the courage to correct their mistakes.

Reform is an extremely complicated, mass exploratory undertaking. As there are no precedents to follow, mistakes are unavoidable. In a sense, if you permit reform, you should permit mistakes as well. If you do not allow people to make mistakes, it means that reform is impermissible. It is quite normal for the masses to comment on the mistakes arising from reform. As a leading cadre, however, one should adopt a clear-cut attitude, that is, firmly support reform, allow the comrades engaged in reform to make mistakes and correct their mistakes, and enthusiastically help them correct their mistakes.

Does permission to correct mistakes mean that those who have violated laws and discipline will not be held accountable? Certainly not. Those who have violated laws and committed crimes under the signboard of reform should undoubtedly be punished according to the law. Even those who have done something worthwhile in reform whould be held accountable and punished according to law if they violate party and government discipline and state laws. Within the party, all people are equal before party discipline. In society, all people are equal before the law. There is no exception even for those engaged in reform. We should not confuse the legal measures taken to punish criminal offenses with the attack against reform. While investigating and dealing with illegal offenses, we should not be led by irresponsible, groundless rumors or false accusations, nor should we seize upon minor mistakes and conduct investigations for months or even a year or so without drawing conclusions. This will dampen the enthusiasm of the broad ranks of cadres and masses for reform.

Regarding the comrades who have vigorously plunged into the reform, they should have the courage to carry out reforms, to blaze new trails, and to correct their mistakes. Like courageously blazing new trails and doing pioneering work, the courage to correct mistakes is also necessary in carrying out reforms. Without the courage to correct mistakes, there would be no pioneering work, blazing of new trails, or perfection and development of reform.

DISCIPLINE COMMISSION ON PARTY STYLE, REFORM

[By reporter May Yi]

[Excerpts] Hohhot, 2 Jul (XINHUA) -- The Central Discipline Inspection Commission held a forum from 25 to 29 June in Tongliao City of Nei Monggol to discuss discipline-inspection work in the five provinces, two municipalities, and one autonomous region of north and northeast China. Information and experience with regard to the work of rectifying party style during the first half of this year were exchanged at the forum. Discussions were focused on the relationship between rectification of party style and the work of reform, and plans for discipline-inspection work in the second half of the year were also drawn up.

Han Guang, permanent secretary of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, presided over and addressed the forum. He pointed out: "Rectification of party style should be synchronized with the work of reform.: He pointed out the error of the view that rectification of party style hinders reform by citing many facts he had found through his in-depth investigations in Nei Monggol, Shanxi, Tianjin, and Hebei. He said: We must have good party style to guarantee the successful development of reform work. The purpose of rectifying party style is to remove obstacles to, and do away with interference in, the work of reform and to create healthy social and political enviroments for the development of this work.

Han Guang said: We must support and protect those who have a real intention to institute reforms. We must enthusiastically help them correct mistakes and shortcomings, if any, sum up experience, and draw lessons so that they can carry forward their achievements and overcome their weaknesses. As for those who take the opportunity of reform to carry out unhealthy acts and to violate the law and discipline, it is imperative to investigate and deal with them in a serious manner.

The comrades participating in the forum were unanimous in the view that during the first half of this year party committees at all levels put the work of rectifying party style high on their agenda, thereby bringing about an incipient sense of the whole party paying attention to party style. Very fruitful results were achieved in rectification of party style. The six unhealthy trends in party and government organs were put under effective control, and they were by and large absent in most of these organs. Meanwhile, all localities paid attention to unhealthy practices in various trades and began to take steps to correct them. New breakthroughs were made in dealing with major and important cases. In addition, education in party spirit was carried out in a deeper and more down-to-earth way than ever, while a good start was made in improving the work of enforcing discipline. The comrades said that the work over the past 6 months was only a good beginning, and that a rather arduous task remains to be done in the days to come. It is imperative, they said, to bear in mind the most valuable experience of the whole party paying attention to party style; to make unremitting efforts to grasp the investigation and handling of major and important cases, to conduct education in party spirit on a constant basis as an institutionalized system; and to ensure that genuine results are achieved in improving the work of enforcing discipline.

RENMIN RIBAO Commentator

[Commentator's article: "Rectification of Party Style Should Go Hand in Hand With Reform"]

[Text] The Central Discipline Inspection Commission recently held a forum on the discipline inspection work of eight provinces, regions, and municipalities in North China and the Northeast, summed up and exchanged the situation of and experience in the rectification of party style in the first half of this year, and discussed in particular the relations between the rectification of party style and reforms. Correctly handling relations between the rectification of party style and reforms is an issue which is worthy of our attention at present. Without a good party style, it is impossible to do a good job in reform.

Without a correct understanding of the situation of and the principles and policies for reforms and opening up, it will not be possible to do a good job in the rectification of party style either. The rectification of party style must be simultaneously carried out together with reforms.

The reform of the economic structure which we are carrying out at present is the self-perfection of the socialist structure. It makes progress under the correct guidance of the party's principles and policies and through exploration. Since the beginning of this year, the reform continues to advance steadily on the basis of summing up experience and consolidating the achievements made. There are some localities and enterprises where the reform was carried out relatively early. They are now meeting with some problems as the reform develops in a deep-going manner. There are many reasons for this, but the cause is not the rectification of party style or the correction of unhealthy trends. Reforms are extremely complicated and profound social changes and they are bound to meet many obstacles and much interference. The purpose of rectifying party style is precisely to remove obstacles to and interference with reforms and to create a favorable social and political environment for promoting the development of reforms. On the other hand, through carrying out reforms, further amplifying and perfecting various regulations, stopping up all loopholes in management, and overcoming setbacks which hamper the development of the productive forces, unhealthy trends can be effectively prevented or reduced. Facts have shown that the rectification of party style is in line with reforms. The two things supplement each other and promote each other.

The rectification of party style and the correction of unhealthy trends do not restrict reforms but protect reforms. Unhealthy trends are not brought about by reforms, but some unhealthy trends do indeed emerge in the course of reform. The rectification of party style and the correction of unhealthy trends require serious investigations of, ascertaining the responsibilities of, and solemnly punishing, people who, under the disguise of carrying out reforms, avail themselves of the loopholes in reforms, engage in dishonest practices, abuse their power to seek personal gains, and commit crimes in defiance of the law. They also include taking a clear-cut stand in supporting reforms and enthusiastically helping comrades who have made some mistakes in the course of reform to correct their mistakes and continue to go forward.

An important thing in properly handling the relations between the rectification of party style and reforms is to have a good grasp of policies and draw clear lines of demarcation. We should not give up the handling and investigation of cases which involve crimes and violation of discipline simply because we fear that we might be regarded as people interfering with reforms. Nor should we groundlessly regard setbacks and mistakes in reforms as cases of violation of discipline and investigate them as such, thus treating as unhealthy trends activities which are permitted by policies and causing people to become overly cautious. In short, we should guard against handling complicated problems in an oversimplified manner and should seek truth from facts, make specific analyses on specific problems, resolutely rectify party style, resolutely carry out reforms, and push forward socialist modernization.

LIAOWANG ON SHENYANG MAJOR REFORM EXPERIMENTS

HK030432 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 25, 23 Jun 86 pp 17, 18

[Article by Zhou Baohua and Lin Chen: "The Three Major Reform Experiments in Shenyang"]

[Text] Shenyang is one of the few major cities in China that has been designated as an experimental city in the overall structural reform. Being an experimental city means making breakthroughs and blazing new trails. In the light of the reform program and blueprint worked out at the 3d Plenum of the 12th CPC Central Committee, the decision-makers in Shenyang have proceeded from the actual conditions and actively, prudently, daringly, and scientifically carried out a series of reform experiments closely related to the central task of developing the socialist commodity economy.

Rental Operation

Shenyang is the first city in China to allow individuals to rent and run small industrial enterprises to carry out reform and experiments on a trial basis. Meanwhile, this is also the first project of the numerous reform experiments conducted in Shenyang.

In the latter half of 1984, the Shenyang car industrial company chose two of its subordinate enterprises -- the Shenyang car petroleum pump factory and the Shenyang car axle factory -- as experimental units to be rented and run by individuals. Through procedures like inviting tenders, entering bids, replying to queries, carrying out examinations, and so on, the best renter was determined from among the numerous tenders (in each factory). With the guarantee of a certain amount of personal property and two guarantors and the operational rights acquired through fulfilling legal notarization, the render can become the legal representative of the enterprise.

To become relatively independent commodity producers, enterprises should appropriately separate their right of operation from their right of ownership. This viewpoint has been repeatedly expounded by Chinese theoretical circles. As far as the enterprises are concerned, reform means looking for specific ways to appropriately separate these "two rights." The rental operation can be said to be a more thorough way than many other ways of "separation" for which people are looking.

This pattern of operation has broken through the long-standing traditional practice of the whole people-owned enterprises being directly run by the state and the state of enterprises being subsidiary bodies of government organs. Meanwhile, introducing the legal means into the economic work can legally ensure the interests of the state, enterprises, staff, workers, and renters.

It has been proved by practice that this pattern of rental operation can play an evident role in saving small enterprises that are having a bad time. The Shenyang car petroleum pummp factory and Shenyang car axle factory had had a hard time in production for years. However, after the rental operation in the latter half of 1984, the output values of these two factories increased by 59 percent and 67 percent respectively, their profits increased by 320 and 1,300 percent respectively, and the income of their staff and workers also increased by 50 percent above the first half of the year.

Zhao Xiyou, manager of the Shenyang car industrial company, told reporters, "The rental operation of the industrial enterprises is, in fact, a kind of most stringent director responsibility system. In the past, as no importance was attached to the interests of the operators, it was difficult to mobilize their initiative. However, rental operation can link the interestss of the operators, the state, enterprises, and staff and workers and make directors treat the matters of their factories as carefully as they do the furniture in their own home."

With the deepening and developing of this experiment, the Shenyang City CPC Committee and government promptly summed up their experiences and promulgated the "provisional regulation for the rental operation of small state-run enterprises: in the whole city. At present, this is the first regulation governing the rental operation of enterprises in China. It explicitly points out that this rental operation by individuals is a kind of socialist operational pattern integrating the rental mechanism, the pattern of distribution according to work, and the system of democratic management on the premise of not changing the nature of ownership of enterprises. The bonuses shared by the renters according to the rental contracts are their personal gains from labor and should be protected by the laws of the state. In consideration of the risks involved in the rental operation, it is not appropriate for the renters to make all the income in the year become consumption funds. They should save a part of their income in the enterprises as the rent deposits, so as to strengthen their capability of taking risks. When this rental operation ends, this part of money will still belong to the renters according to the terms in the contracts.

Last year, 33 small industrial enterprises in Shenyang started rental operation. Their total industrial output value increased by 61.5 percent over last year and their total profits went up by 230 percent, which are 4 and 6 times as much as the average growth rates in the whole city. This year, as many as 63 households in the whole city are carrying on rental operation on an individual basis.

Bankruptcy

If it is said that rental operation is to encourage the vitalization of money-losing enterprises by mobilizing the initiative of the operators, then the handling of bankruptcy is a punishment for this kind of enterprise.

While people in China were still contending whether the issue of enterprise bankruptcy existed in a socialist society, Shenyang, however, on the premise of careful investigation and study and the spirit of proceeding from facts, worked out and promulgated last February the "provisional regulations concerning handling the bankruptcy and liquidation of urban collective-owned industrial enterprises" to make the issue of bankruptcy go from theory to practice.

In order to become relatively independent commodity producers and operators, socialist enterprises must resolve the issue that enterprises are only responsible for making profits but not incurring losses and truly assume sole responsibility for their profits and losses. Shenyang's "bankruptcy regulations," which contain 26 clauses, have given full expression to this new concept. They stipulate that an enterprise whose liabilities outweigh its assets, that has been suffering from losses incurred by non-policy mistakes for 2 years running, or whose deficits have exceeded its fixed assets by 80 percent should be counted as coming close to the boundary line of bankruptcy and liquidation.

After a year of consolidation and salvation, if it still does not improve its performance, it should formally declare bankruptcy and all its assets should be used to repay debts. In this case, without exception, all the workers and staff would become job-awaiting workers and staff and live on social relief funds of bankruptcy and liquidation.

On 3 August, in the light of the "bankruptcy regulations," the Shenyang industrial and commercial bureau gave the No 3 farm machinery factory, the hardware factory, and the explosion protection equipment factory in the city a "bankruptcy warning," asking them to carry out consolidation and salvation in a year's time. Giving notice in advance and a deadline shows that Shenyang not only regards the handling of the money-losing enterprise in bankruptcy as a kind of punishment but, more important, as a kind of impetus.

This "yellow-card warning" shocked the whole city. As the way of "everyone eating from the same big pot" is blocked and the workers and staff feel that their personal honor and gain are closely linked with the interests and prosperity of the factories for which they work, the regulations concerning bankruptcy and liquidation thus closely integrate the interests of the workers and staff with those of enterprises and made them unite for the same cause. Therefore, the workers and staff at the No 3 farm machinery factory and the hardware factory were awaken. They strengthened their business management, strove to open up markets, and improved the quality of their products; and soon after, these factories showed signs of benign cycles. Because the explosion prevention equipment factory was in a hopeless state and unable to make a recovery, it declared bankruptcy not long after.

Leaders of the State Council have fully affirmed Shenyang's "bankruptcy regulations." The first large-scale "symposium on the theory and practice concerning the bankruptcy and liquidation of enterprises" was held in mid-June in Shenyang. This reform experiment of Shenyang has submitted an extremely valuable "laboratory report" for reference to the formulation of the Chinese enterprise bankruptcy law.

The Share System

The economy of shares system is also a sizable "forbidden zone" in China. Just as they look upon the rental operation and bankruptcy, quite a few people also tend to regard the shares system as a "patent right" of capitalism. The third major experiment conducted by Shenyang in the economic structural reform is to break through this forbidden zone and mobilize all the economic means to serve socialist construction. Beginning in the latter half of last year, Shenyang made a reform experiment of asset shares in two collective-owned enterprises under the administration of the Bureau of Engineering Industry.

This is a reform of the enterprise ownership structure. The shares of these two experimental enterprises are composed of state shares, collective share, and individual shares. These enterprises are allowed to issue shares to other institutes, enterprises, and individuals. The shareholders jointly run the enterprises, share benefits, and take risks. Enterprises' after-tax profits will be distributed among the shareholders according to the proportion of their shares.

If an operational loss occurs, all the shareholders can not have any bonuses but jointly split the loss according to the proportions of their shares in the total shares of the enterprise. The shares owned by enterprises are uniformly controlled by the people's bank; shares owned by individuals are allowed to be transferred and may also be given away, inherited, and mortgaged within the scope of laws.

After converting their original assets into shares, the Shenyang compressor factory and Shenyang compressor air valve factory, which have been designated as the experimental units, respectively issued 300,000 and 150,000 yuan of individual shares to workers and staff, accounting for 16 percent and 13 percent of the total assets of the enterprises. Thus, we can see that the shares owned by individuals only make up a small part of the total shares of the enterprises; the major parts are still the state shares and collective shares. Therefore, the issue of monopoly held by individuals will not possibly come up and the nature of the enterprises' socialist public ownership will not possibly change.

After implementation of the shares system, the workers and staff became the owners, operators, laborers, and beneficiaries of the enterprises and the initiative and creativeness of the workers and staff were unprecedentedly aroused. Last year, the output value of the small compressor factory and the compressor air valve factory respectively increased by 24.5 percent and 27.5 percent over the previous year and their profits went up by 26.6 percent and 27.5 percent. The bonus and share interests of every 100 yuan of individual shares owned by the workers and staff in the two enterprises were respectively 28.8 yuan and 31.48 yuan.

In March of this year, the Shenyang City Government approved another 19 collective-owned enterprises of the engineering industry and 1 small state-run enterprise as experimental units of the shares system. In light of the experimental results, the relevant departments in Shenyang are now drafting a regulatory document governing the implementation of the shares system in the small enterprises in the whole city.

The ongoing three major reform experiments of rental operation, bankruptcy, and shares system in Shenyang have already shown and are showing great vitality. Of course, being a kind of explorative work, it still has many shortcomings to be further improved. For example, the rental operation of small enterprises is still being experimented with among enterprises that are losing money or on the verge of losing money; is it applicable to money-making enterprises? Besides, can the rental operation be expanded to some larger enterprises? Because most of the renters do not have the necessary cash deposits, notwithstanding that the contracts contain the clauses concerning bankruptcy in lieu of rent and the "regulations" specify that a renter should not convert all his income into consumption funds and must save part of his income in the enterprise as rent deposits, how should we resolve the issue of compensation if bankruptcy occurs in the very first year? How should we "appropriately support and save" enterprises that are on the verge of bankruptcy and in the 1-year-long "salvation period?" The enterprise bankruptcy regulations have not yet drawn a clear demarcation line of saving and supporting these enterprises.

And, after implementation of the shares system, how should we give expression to the principle of distribution according to work within enterprises? Should we and how do we bring individual shares under control? After implementation of the enterprise shares system, how do the party organizations, trade unions, and workers' and staff's representative assembly in the enterprises carry out their work? And so on and so forth. At present, Shenyang is studying and discussing these issues.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES MANAGEMENT OF LAND BY LAW

[Commentator's article: "Properly Manage and Use Land According to the Law"]

[Text] "The law of the PRC on land management" has been promulgated and will go into effect on 1 January 1987. This is the first law adopted by our country on land management. Its guidelines are laid out for treasuring and making proper use of land, protecting cultivated land, saving land used for economic construction, strengthening land management in an unified way by administrative, economic, and legal means, and safeguarding the legitimate rights and interests of land owners and users. The promulgation of the law marked the beginning of a new stage in managing the land of our country by legal means, and has provided a practical legal basis for management and use of the land according to the law, including enforcing punishment for those who occupy and use land at will. As long as we abide by the law and strictly enforce it, the most valuable land resources in our country will certainly be used more rationally.

The average per capita land area in our country accounts for merely about one-third of the world average. Due to poor management and other factors for a long time in the past, cultivated land is ever decreasing in our country. According to incomplete figures, the average per capita arable land area has decreased by nearly 50 percent since the founding of the People's Republic. In recent years, the area of arable land that decreased in a year in some provinces was equivalent to the total area of cultivated land of a medium-sized county. What is worse, the land that decreased in these provinces accounted for a large proportion of good farmland. Recalling the celebrated dictum of William Petty that "labor is the father of wealth and land is the mother of wealth," which Karl Marx appreciated very much, every citizen of our country should increase his vigilance over the present state of affairs in management and the use of land.

The essential factor contributing to the present ever-growing evil trend of indiscriminately occupying and using land is the lack of a complete legal system governing land management. From 1955, the party and the government promulgated a series of rules and regulations governing management and use of land and issued a number of relevant circulars, none of which were integrated and comprehensive in terms of law, thus failing to strike relentless blows at those who occupy and use land at will. With the law on land management promulgated, every citizen of our country should protect and use land in accordance with the law. Leading organs, land management organizations, and judicial departments should strictly enforce the law on all cases of indiscriminately occupying and using land. Defying and roughly enforcing the law is not permissible.

The law reflects a mandatory idea of the state: "It is absolutely necessary to establish a good social order by measn of law." Before "the law of the PRC on land management" is put into effect, all localities should conscientiously publicize the law and enhance the legal sense of all citizens in management and use of land through education. All provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities should establish and improve their organizations for enforcing the law without delay and adopt the relevant measures so as to create more favorable conditions for the enforcement of the law.

XINHUA COMMENTATOR STRESSES VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

[Text] Beijing, 1 Jul (XINHUA) -- Title: Look at Vocational Education from a Strategic Viewpoint -- By XINHUA Commentator

Education is one of the major strategic components in our four-modernization program. Not only is it aimed at training thousands upon thousands of useful people to serve the needs of our cause today, but it also has a bearing on the future of our motherland. Vocational education, an important component of education, is a major task which directly concerns the improvement of quality of our vast number of staffs and workers. Therefore, we must look at vocational education from a strategic viewpoint.

However, some people are not paying sufficient attention to vocational education. Some think that vocational education "does not rank as an important task." The leaders of some departments think that "meeting production targets is the most important part of our work, while vocational training is a less important task," that "a product, unless it qualifies, cannot pass the test, where as the quality of a laborer is not easy to assess," and that "anyone can get a job whether he has been trained or not." These erroneous ideas have to be clarified.

Compared with general education, vocational education is more closely and more directly connected with improving production and developing the economy. Only if our laborers are equipped with modern professional knowledge and technological know-how can we develop production in depth and in breadth. To develop economic construction, we should draw up plans, adopt diversified ways, and set up different standards for training different levels of qualified personnel in the various specialized fields according to established rations. We need not only high-level professionals but also a large number of primary and middle-level technical and managerial personnel, as well as a reserve work force consisting of millions of people who possess knowledge and technical skills in various specialized fields, in addition to basic education. The principal method to meet this requirement is to develop vocational education.

The decade-long turmoil has caused a disproportion among the various categories of personnel in our country. Surveys conducted by the departments concerned in some cities reveal that in many factories the ratio between engineers and technicians is more than five to one, and that some units even have a ratio of none to one. According to estimates of developing countries, for each engineer, there should be 5 technicans and 20 skilled workers. This provides for the highest level of productivity.

In our country, because of a lack of personnel at certain levels, some localities and units are unable to achieve a high usage rate of their equipment and to make full use of their advanced technology and their advanced machinery and equipment.

While going all our to develop vocational education, we may use the method of recruiting trainees instead of recruiting workers and change the practice of training a worker after employing him to training him before employing him. By so doing, we will raise the quality of the reserve work force and create favorable conditions for increasing labor productivity. Practice has proven that this can play a significant role in raising productivity and promoting production.

The change in our country's rural economic structure requires reform of the secondary educational structure, development of vocational education, and the training of agricultural scientists and technicians in the countryside so as to promote the development of the rural commodity economy.

With the development of tertiary industry, the commercial and service trades need scores of competent technical and managerial personnel, as well as a large reserve work force. These people should also be trained through vocational education.

Vocational education has boundless prospects. We should look at this task from a strategic viewpoint and make earnest efforts to solve such problems as operating expenses, teachers, school buildings, and other facilities. We should see to it that education departments coordinate well with personnel-recruiting units and that all quarters fully display their initiative so as to make a real success of vocational education.

LIAOWANG ARTICLE ON CURRENT ECONOMIC SITUATION

HK021526 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION No 26, 30 Jun 86

["Letter From Beijing" by Bao Xin: "How To View the Current Economic Situation" -- written 23 June]

[Text] Dear friend,

In your letter you asked me about the different views of China's economists on the current economic situation. This question has indeed aroused people's attention. The first half of this year is over and economic statistics have not yet been disclosed. But the basic situation of our national economy is quite clear. On the whole, the current economic situation is good and is developing healthily, steadily, and with coordination. In agricultural production, summer grain has been harvested and output is expected to exceed that of last year. China's grain output dropped last year due to a decrease in grain-sown area. Despite our country's sufficient grain reserves, some people were very worried about the situation. In view of this, governments at all levels have paid serious attention to this year's grain production. They have grasped grain production earlier and more meticulously, and have adopted such methods as developing industry to complement agriculture, readjusting the prices of grain alloted by the state, reducing the quantity of grain purchased by contract, and reducing prices of chemical fertilizer to support peasants, thus greatly improving the situation in grain production. If no serious natural disaster occurs this year, a good harvest is expected in this year's grain production.

In industrial production, the growth rate of China's industrial production has dropped, and is expected to stand at about 5 percent for the first half of this year. In other fields, the market is brisk and prices are basically stable; the rural commodity economy is developing steadily; the total foreign trade volume is increasing; and bank savings deposits are on the rise. In short, the general situation of the national economy is good, but some problems still exist. Of all the different views on the current economic situation, the main one concerns the decrease in the growth rate of industrial production. China's industrial production growth rate for the first half of last year was 23 percent, but it stands at about 4 or 5 percent since the beginning of this year. Therfore, some people argue that the sharp drop in the growth rate indicates a "recession" in industrial production and a "downward trend" in the growth rate. Others believe that this drop is an "undulation" in industrial production in the replacement of the old economic system by the new one, and was inevitable. Still others believe that the main cause for the low growth rate is a periodic change in the growth rate of industrial production.

How should we view this question? First, it must be pointed out that the industrial growth rate in the first half of last year was excessive, or "extremely high," which resulted from our failure in macroeconomic control of capital construction and credit. Following a series of urgent measures taken by the state on macroeconomic control, China's industrial growth rate droped month by month in the second hald of last year, to 10.8 percent in December of last year. Second, we must understand that this year's industrial growth rate is not too low on the basis of last year's "extremely high" growth rate. Despite the low industrial growth rate, a relatively high growth rate has been recorded in energy, raw materials, and light and textile industries. Some products were unmarketable or eliminated through competition due to their inferior quality and high prices. Of course, this does not mean that there are not problems in this year's industrial production, nor does its mean that no attention should be paid to the growth rate of industrial production. We must stress the growth rate, and do it in a reasonable way. Judging from the present situation, to achieve the average annual growth rate of 7.5 percent in this year's industrial production, which was set in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, great efforts need to be made.

The focus of current industrial production is economic results. In his "Report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan," Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out: "We must strive for a continuous and relatively high growth rate on the basis of improving economic results and upgrading the quality of our products." At present, the economic results of some enterprises have failed and the quality of some products has dropped. This situation must be thoroughly changed. To properly grasp current industrial production, we must focus our work on improving economic results; combine economic results, growth rate, and staying power; improve business management; continuously upgrade the quality of products; vigorously increase the production of marketable, fine quality, and famous brand products; and do our best to reduce production costs and cut down the consumption of raw materials. The current economic situation indicates that China has made a good start in implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and is also facing many problems. We are marching forward in exploration and we must conduct more study and investigations, continuously sum up experiences to make improvement, and resoultely carry out reforms so as to develop the national economy continuously and steadily.

Yours truly, Bao Xin

INDUSTRIAL NOISE POLLUTION STANDARDS ESTABLISHED

OW021732 Beijing XINHUA in English 1512 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Chinese industrial enterprises must try to limit noise in workshops to less than 90 decibels, under new noise control norms that became effective nationwide Thursday.

This means that 90 percent of factory workers working eight hours a day at a noisy site will no longer suffer deafness, heart trouble or neurasthenia after 30 years. A decibel is the least intensity of sound at which a noise can be heard.

The norms, issued by the State Planning Commission, say that noise-control devices must be installed for any new construction project, or a project under expansion of renovation.

They also set noise standards for facilities within a factory and areas around the factory, including residential areas, commercial centers, cultural and educational areas and sidewalks of trunk roads.

Moreover, the norms specify measures to meet noise standards for industrial firms, such as the selection of factory sites and equipment, design of technology and pipelines, and the distribution of workshops.

A researcher at the Beijing Institute of Labor Protection Studies said, "We'll certainly achieve a big success in fighting noise pollution so long as we make designs according to the new standards." The norms were drawn up by the institute and 13 other units following five years of investigation throughout the country.

TOP CITIES FOR INDUSTRIAL OUTPUT VALUE LISTED

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- China has 17 cities, of which the total industrial output value topped 10 billion yuan each last year, the State Statistics Bureau reported today.

On the basis of the 1980 prices, Shanghai, China's leading industrial center, generated total industrial output value of 65.5 billion yuan last year, ranking first in the country. Beijing and Tianjin occupied the second and third places, respectively.

Other cities included Suzhou, Wuxi, Guangzhou, Shenyang, Wuhan, Hangzhou, Chongqing, Nanjing, Dalian, Ningbo, Yangzhou, Qingdao, Chengdu and Changzhou.

Altogether, 24 cities in China yielded total industrial output value between five billion and 10 billion yuan each in 1985, the bureau said.

Last year saw China's 324 cities generate total industrial output value of 807.76 billion yuan, accounting for 87.3 percent of the nation's total.

ANHUI'S LI GUIXIAN ATTENDS COMMENDATION MEETING

OW011331 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Excerpts] The party committees of the organs directly under the jurisdiction of the Anhui provincial authorities held a grand meeting this afternoon at the Jianghuai Theater to commend the organs' advanced party branches, party groups, and 163 outstanding party members. Since the organs launched a campaign in 1984 to create advanced party branches and party groups, and to strive to become outstanding party members, a large number of party branches and party groups, which strictly observe organizational discipline and have done well in ideological-political work, have come to the fore. In addition, many party members who cherish ideals, observe discipline, boldly participate in reforms, and serve the people wholeheartedly, have also emerged.

Li Guizian, secretary of the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee; Xu Leyi, deputy secretary of the committee; Vice Governor Meng Fulin; Liu Guangcai, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and director of its Organizational Department; (Chen Guanghua), vice chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission; Su Hua, vice chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; and (Li Jiqiang), vice chairman of the Anhui Provincial CPPCC Committee, attended the meeting and presented citations and certificates of merit to the representatives of those commended.

Comrade Xu Leyi addressed the meeting. He said: Directly led by the provincial CPC Committee, organs under the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities bear a special responsibility for improving party work and work style in the whole province. For this reason, they should advance ahead of others. They should further unify the thinking and actions of all party cadres, study and implement the guidelines of the National Conference of Party Delegates and the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress, and make new contributions this year, the first crucial year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Comrade Xu Leyi pointed out: Organs under the direct jurisdiction of the provincial authorities should strive to improve the work style and party conduct within their organizations and set an example in rectifying party style. This is a major and long-term political task confronting the party organizations of these organs. Therefore, they should constantly undertake the work of rectifying party style. They should strive to raise work efficiency in the organs, and to markedly improve their work style by means of rectifying party style and enhancing the party's combat strength.

Responsible comrades of various units of the provincial organs also attended today's meeting.

HAN PEIXIN ATTENDS JIANGSU PARTY STYLE MEETING

OW010520 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Text] A provincial meeting to exchange experiences in the rectification of party style was held in Nanjing from 25 to 29 June. Secretaries of city, county, and district discipline inspection commissions and directors of city offices in charge of economic cases throughout the province attended the meeting, totaling 350 persons.

Han Peixin, Shen Daren, Chen Huanyou, Gu Hao, and other leading comrades attended and addressed the meeting.

At the meeting, Xing Bai, Lu Qi, and Zhang Pinhua transmitted the guidelines of a forum sponsored by the Central Discipline Inspection Commission on discipline inspection, case handling, and the handling of letters from and visits by people. Comrade Xing Bai also made a work report.

Twenty-six units and individuals, including the Chengguang machinery plant and Yangzhong County, made reports on their experiences in this regard. The meeting held: Party committees at various levels across the province have strenthened their leadership over the rectification of party style. The party style has been rectified, starting from leading bodies and cadres at and above the county level. As a result, unhealthy trends have been effectively corrected, and major or serious cases have been investigated and dealt with. In addition, a general checkup on party style has been conducted, and the education on party spirit has been stepped up. Besides, a system of responsibility by leaders in the rectification of party style has been generally instituted. Remarkable results have been achieved in all these regards, which have promoted the sound development of reform and economic construction.

The meeting pointed out: there are still many problems in party style. Party committees at various levels should continue to implement the principle of persistently and seriously grasping the rectification of party style for 2 years. They should firmly and effectively rectify party style in order to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in this regard.

The meeting stressed: In the second half of the year, it is necessary to further rectify party style in leading bodies at and above the county level, especially in provincial-level organs. Continued efforts should be made to investigate and deal with major or serious cases. [passage indistinct] It is necessary to continue the education on party spirit with ideals, purpose, and discipline as its main contents, in order to enable party members to strengthen their party spirit and firmly foster the idea of serving the people wholeheartedly..

JIANGXI HOLDS PARTY RECTIFICATION MEETING 23-27 JUN

OW010002 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Excerpts] A provincial forum of prefectural and city party secretaries on party rectification work was held in Nanchang 23-27 June. The meeting called on party organizations at all levels in Jiangxi to effectively strengthen the leadership over party rectification work for successfully carrying out party rectification at the township level, earnestly unfolding party rectification at the village level, and consolidating and developing the achievements in party rectification as a whole, thereby facilitating a fundamental improvement in party style and further deepening the reform.

Pei Dean, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee and director of its Rural Department, chaired the closing session held on the afternoon of 27 June. Xu Qin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, made a summing-up speech. Attending the meeting were responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee's office for guiding party rectification, all prefectural and city party secretaries, responsible persons of the office for guiding party rectification and investigation groups in all prefectures and cities, and officials from provincial departments concerned, totalling some 250.

The meeting transmitted the instruction of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification and the guidelines of the forum of secretaries of the seven provincial and autonomous regional CPC committees in southern China, analyzed the situation of township-level party rectification in Jiangxi; set clear demands for successfully carrying out the township party rectification; discussed arrangements, tasks, and demands for the village-level party rectification; and clarified the guidelines, principles, policies, focal points, and methods for conducting the village party rectification. The meeting also implemented the guidelines of the national meeting on investigating the three types of persons, reviewed Jiangxi's progress and setbacks in the investigation work, and mapped out the demands and measures for ensuring successful investigatory work. At the same time, the meeting studied measures for further consolidating and developing the fruits of party rectification.

In his speech, Comrade Xu Qin said: So far, 90 percent of Jiangxi's rural townships have basically completed party rectification work. In the course of party rectification, the townships have carried out extensive and in-depth education in ideals, goals, and policies, firmly corrected a few unhealthy practices; and promoted the economic reform with the party rectification, thereby solving problems without disrupting order. However, progress has been uneven in township party rectification in Jiangxi. Therefore, it is necessary to exert efforts to ensure success of the township party rectification by paying close attention to townships where the party rectification work has been lagging behind, solving problems left over from history, earnestly carrying out party rectification in units dispatched by county government to townships, and improving leading bodies of township party organizations.

Comrade Xu Qin said: It is necessary to attach great importance to the village party rectification. As 52 percent of party membership in Jiangxi is in rural areas, it is of immediate significance to do a good job in party rectification at the village level. In unfolding village party rectification, efforts should be concentrated on work in three fields:

First, it is necessary to educate party members.

Second, it is necessary to investigate and handle a number of typical serious cases in rural areas involving party members who abuse power to seek personal gains in violation of law and discipline.

Third, it is necessary to reorganize and beef up leading bodies of village party branches.

At present, it is necessary to continue preparations for the village party rectification, including readjusting and appointing new members of leading bodies of village party branches, party secretaries in particular. It is also necessary to train the publicists and lecturers and do a good job at selected points in order to accumulate experience for carrying out party rectification in rural areas as a whole.

Comrade Xu Qin called on party organizations at all levels to strengthen the leadership over party rectification work by assuming a serious and responsible attitude as well as assigning appropriate personnel to take charge of the work. Currently efforts should be concentrated on strengthening the leadership over the village party rectification by paying a great deal of attention to the work in ideology, ensuring its success with organizational guarantee, giving leadership guidance at different levels, and stressing investigation and study and summing up experience as far as questions on leadership style are concerned. By doing so, we will be able to continuously advance the party rectification work in Jiangxi in a wholesome manner.

SHANDONG RALLY MARKS PARTY FOUNDING ANNIVERSARY

[Text] On the afternoon of 30 June, the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government held a rally at the Zhenzhuguan Auditorium to mark the 65th party founding anniversary and to report on the province's economic situation in the first half of the year and the tentative economic plans for the second half of the year to the retired cadres of the provincial organs and the retired cadres at and above the department and bureau level in Jinan.

Li Changan, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor, gave a speech at the rally. He said: During the first half of this year, we have mainly carried out the following few tasks in line with the plans of the central authorities and the guidelines of the provincial CPC Committee's major points of work for 1986:

1. We have grasped the work of consolidation, digestion, supplement, and improvement in the economic structural reform.

2. We have grasped the work of preventing a big retrogression after a large increase in industrial production and of guaranteeing an appropriate growth rate.

3. We have firmly solved the problems in readjusting the wages of enterprises workers.

4. We have grasped the implementation of the central document No 1, and extensively carried out the second step of rural reform.

5. We have implemented policies and solved the leftover historical problems.

6. We have grasped the township- and town-level party rectification.

7. We have improved the work style of organs.

Based on these tasks, the provincial departments at all levels have gone deep into the reality to conduct extensive investigations and study. They have held rural work conferences, economic work conferences, the seventh plenary session of the fourth provincial CPC Committee, an economic work forum, and the party rectification work meetings. During the past 6 months, through the concerted efforts of all quarters, all fronts and all fields throughout the province have proceeded with their work smoothly and scored remarkable results. Viewed from the general situation, the province's political and economic situations are good. We should attribute these achievements to the efforts of the broad masses of cadres and the people throughout the province to conscientiously implement the various directives of the central authorities, to work vigorously and diligently, and to pioneer the road of advance.

We should also attribute these achievements to the efforts of the retired veteran comrades. In the first place, the present work achievements have been gained on the basis of the former veteran comrades' work. Without yesterday there would not be today. Second, may retired veteran comrades are still concerned about the party's cause. They have gone to the grass roots with indefatigable zeal to conduct investigations and study, undertaken social work on their own initiative, and offered many constructive suggestions to the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government.

Third, the broad masses of veteran comrades have given consideration to the overall situation, safeguarded unity among people in and outside the party and of all quarters, and actively supported comrades working on the first line in an effort to unceasingly consolidate and develop the province's excellent situation.

Comrade Li Changan also gave a report on the work of the second half of the year. He expressed the hope that the retired veteran comrades will continue to show concern for the party's cause, offer more advice and suggestions within their power, and actively contribute to making the people rich and Shandong Province prosperous.

SHANGHAI PARTY RECTIFICATION ENTERS SECOND STAGE

[Text] Second-stage party rectification work in our city has now begun in the second group. Basic-level factories, stores, middle and primary schools, hospitals, town, and township enterprises throughout the city have all begun their party rectification work.

The Shanghai municipal meeting on party rectification work which ended yesterday stressed: Party rectification must ensure and promote reform. Party organizations at all levels throughout the city must have a clear understanding of this guiding ideology for party rectification.

The meeting pointed out: Party rectification at basic-level units should be oriented to raising all party members' party spirit. Reform must be made an important content of education in party spirit. Party rectification should be utilized to reinforce party members' ideological and psychological readiness to cope with reform. In improving party style, the problem of a small number of cadres' abusing power for private gains should be tackled while unhealthy tendencies in industries and trades should also be corrected.

The municipal meeting on party rectification work began on 24 June and lasted for 4 days, sitting for one half day each day. The meeting conveyed and studied the guidelines of the discussion meeting on party rectification work in the six coastal provinces and cities held in Nanjing by the Central Party Rectification Guidance Commission. With Shanghai's practical condition in mind, the meeting discussed and studied how to make party rectification at basic-level units a success and how to consolidate and develop the party rectification results in units where party rectification has concluded. The meeting held: The party rectification task of the whole city is still very heavy and party committees at all levels must by no means relax their efforts. They must creatively accomplish the party rectification task.

["Guangdong Province Issues Shares for Overseas Chinese Investors for the First Time" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Guangzhou, 30 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- With the approval of the State Administration of Exchange Control, as of 1 July, for the first time Guangdong Province will issue throughout the province shares for Overseas Chinese investors. All relatives and family members of Chinese nationals residing abroad who possess foreign currency in cash may subscribe to these shares.

Guangdong is the first province in China to issue shares for Overseas Chinese investors. Earlier, Guangdong Province issued foreign currency denomination shares on two occasions to raise funds for such key construction projects in the province as the Shajiao power plant, Guangzhou-Foshan expressway, Yunfu cement plant, and Shantou sensitive paper plant. The current issue is different from the other two in that the objects of the issue are extended from Overseas Chinese and compatriots in Hong Kong, Macao, and Taiwan to relatives and family members of Chinese nationals living abroad, including family members of compatriots living in Hong Kong, Macao, and Taiwan and returned Overseas Chinese. The time has been shortened and the interest rates have been raised.

It has been learned that the current issue of shares is divided into two kinds, namely, U.S. dollar and Hong Kong dollar denominations. The U.S. dollar denomination shares are fixed at $10 per share, with an annual interest rate of 8 percent for the 1-year period and 9 percent for the 3-year period; the Hong Kong dollar demonination shares are fixed at HK$100 per share, with an annual interest rate of 7 percent for the 1-year period and 8 percent for the 3-year period. The principal and interest of shares subscribed with foreign currency will be guaranteed and paid for in cash in foreign currency. The money can be reinvested but cannot be directly remitted abroad. If there is a genuine need to remit the money abroad, applications should be made to the foreign exchange control departments.

The Guangdong International Trust and Investment Corporation is in charge of issuing shares for Overseas Chinese investors. The company has a registered capital of 600 million yuan and its total assets last year were over 1.2 billion yuan.

350,000 CONTRACT WORKERS EMPLOYED IN GUANGDONG

OW260908 Beijing XINHUA in English 0614 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 26 (XINHUA) -- More than 350,000 contract workers have been employed in Guangdong Province since employment reforms were first introduced there in 1983, today's "PEOPLE'S DAILY" reported.

Guangdong is a pioneer of the contract system, which is now being tried out all over the country.

Provincial authorities decided three years ago that all new employees of state- and collectively-owned businesses above county level would be hired on contracts of varying lengths.

Contract workers enjoy the same labor rights as other workers, and pay into state-run health-care and pension schemes.

The experimental system is designed to break the former "iron rice-bowl" system, under which workers are given jobs for life on fixed incomes, regardless of how well they work.

Under the contract system, businesses can increase or cut labor according to production needs, and employ people on a selective basis. Meanwhile, workers can choose jobs best suited to their abilities.

If a worker is not rehired at the end of a contract, he can draw a living subsidy from the social insurance scheme until he lands a new job.

GUANGXI LEADER URGES IMPROVING BIRTH CONTROL WORK

HK300143 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Excerpts] At the regional conference of prefectural commissioners, mayors, and county governors which concluded on 27 June, Wei Chunshu, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee and chairman of the regional government, spoke on further studying and implementing this year's central document No 13 and doing a good job in birth control work in the region.

He pointed out: Since central document No 13 was relayed to us, the region has made efforts to convey and implement it, but developments are very uneven. He demanded that the leaders at all levels take the lead in studying the document and profoundly appreciate its spiritual essence. On this basis, they should organize the masses to study it and ensure that everyone knows about it.

Comrade Wei Chunshu said: Central document No 13 sums up the situation and basic experiences in birth control work during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, points out the existing problems, and also gives views on further improving birth central work during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The document fully accords with the situation in Guangxi. He said: Although the region has scored a certain degree of success in birth control work in recent years, we still lag behind the country as a whole. The task of surmounting the peak birth period and controlling population growth in Guangxi during the Seventh 5-Year Plan is extremely arduous. The leaders at all levels must attach great importance to this question. They must have a sense of urgency, strengthen leadership, and ceaselessly grasp the work. The propaganda and cultural departments must cooperate closely and use all propaganda media and forms such as the press, radio, television, wall bulletins, and so on to conduct extensive propaganda, to ensure that all the masses understand that there is to be no change in birth control as a basic state strategy; that there is to be no change in the policy of advocating that a couple have only one child; and that there is to be no change in the goal of keeping the country's population below about 1.2 billion by the end of the century.

Through conducting propaganda, we should ensure that the cadres and masses fully realize that practicing birth control and controlling excessive population growth is of great practical significance for invigorating Guangxi, and especially for enabling poor areas to become rich as soon as possible, and hence enhance their awareness of practicing birth control.

Wei Chunshu also demanded that the region vigorously work to implement the document and pay attention to practical results. It is necessary to sum up experiences in connection with reality, find out the weak links, and take effective steps to solve them and to raise birth control work to a new level. At present we must lay particular emphasis on doing a good job in the following respects:

1. Put the organizational structure on a sound basis and strengthen the building of the birth control work force. Prefectures, cities, and counties must put birth control organs on a sound basis as soon as possible.

2. Step up ideological education for the masses. We must further perfect the birth policy. We must strictly grasp the policies in accordance with the central and regional regulations. We must not arbitrarily go beyond the bounds of the policies.

3. Strengthen leadership over backward areas. At present birth control work is developing very unevenly in Guangxi. In particular, the birth rate is high in old revolutionary bases, minority-nationality areas, and remote, mountainous, and poor areas. We must integrate supporting these poor areas with promoting birth control there, to ensure that they can extricate themselves from their passive position as soon as possible.

4. All departments must cooperate closely.

HUNAN MEETING URGES IMPROVING POOR AREAS

HK020151 Changsa Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The provincial CPC Committee and government held a meeting from 26 June to 1 July on work concerning poor areas of the province. The meeting, held in Jishou, further implemented the 1984 circular of the CPC Central Committee and State Council on helping poor areas to achieve transformation as rapidly as possible and the spirit of this year's central document No 1. The meeting proposed that a marked change be achieved in the poor areas within 3 years.

Mao Zhiyong, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Cao Wenju, vice governor and head of the provincial leadership group for economic development in poor areas, made important speeches at the meeting.

The meeting held that successes have been scored in the work of supporting poor areas in recent years, in the wake of the deepening of reform and the implementation of the relevant central policies. We should now pay attention to the fact that the pace of extricating poor areas from poverty and making them rich is not fast. The food and clothing problems of some peasants have not yet been solved. All levels and units must attach great importance to building up the poor areas and strive to bring about a marked change there within 3 years. Such a change should be characterized by the following points: 1) The masses' food and clothing problem should be basically solved. 2) The production conditions should be improved. 3) People's health and cultural standards should be improved.

BEIJING SECRETARY VISITS INDIVIDUAL CATERING TRADER

SK010147 Beijing City Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] On the morning of 19 June, Li Ximing, secretary of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, visited (Shen Xinquan), a self-employed laborer, at his home in Chongwen District, and praised him for doing a good deed for society.

(Shen Xinquan) is head of the (Donghuashipian) individual catering trade association and manager of the (Jishengyongta) chicken house. Last May, he organized members of the individual catering trade association to help 25 pupils of (Donghuashi) primary school eliminate difficulties in having lunches and taking a noon break.

Municipal and district leaders asked (Shen Xinquan) in detail about his working and living conditions and read the books and magazines, about 1,000 in number, he bought for the pupils. Comrade Li Ximing praised him for saving parents a lot of worry. After that, Comrade Li Ximing told comrades of the general office of the municipal CPC Committee who accompanied him on the visit to try to get some books for the children when they returned.

Comrade Li Ximing encouraged (Shen Xinquan) to lead other individual households to deal with business in a civilized manner. (Shen Xinquan) pledged to eliminate various difficulties to set a good example for individual traders.

NEI MONGGOL HOLDS MEETING ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

SK010507 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Excerpts] The regional rural and pastoral party rectification work conference which was held in Hailar City from 25 to 30 June stressed: We should enable rural and pastoral party rectification to promote reform and to facilitate economic development. Through party rectification, party-member cadres should further eliminate their outdated ideas concerning close-typed natural economy and foster a thinking of commodity economy, and the grass-roots party branches should pay attention to changing the appearances of the rural and pastoral areas characterized by poverty and backwardness by developing commodity economy and opening up new ways for seeking wealth through labor.

The rural and pastoral party rectification work began last November. So far, Bayannur and Ulanqab Leagues and Baotou and Wuhai Cities have concluded their party rectification work in succession. Most party rectification units at town, township, and sumu level in these four leagues and cities have finished their party rectification work. The party rectification units at village and gacha level in these leagues and cities are preparing for their party rectification work at present.

Comrades participating in the conference pointed out: Through party rectification, the rural and pastoral areas should make sure that they solve the problems concerning party-member cadres taking advantage of their power to seek private gains and seriously violating the law and discipline. In the course of party rectification, we should persist in the principle of seeking truth from facts and not allow anyone to pass the test without careful and individual screening. We should adopt various measures to solve the problems of different categories. We should emphatically conduct education on politics among party-member cadres and party members committing general mistakes so as to upgrade their understanding of reform and [words indistinct] and to inspire their enthusiasm to guide the masses to seek common wealth.

The participants held: We should regard the strengthening and promotion of unity between the peoples of various nationalities as a key content of the party rectification work, and pay special attention to helping the minority people solve production and living problems.

SHANXI MEETING DISCUSSES CONTRADICTIONS IN PARTY

HK180137 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 17 Jun 86

[Text] The Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee held a study meeting from 10 to 16 June attended by prefectural and city CPC Committee secretaries and responsible comrades of the provincial organs. The participants studied and applied Marxist theory on contradictions within the party. In connection with the reality of work and the state of mind in their own areas and work, they considered and discussed in depth the questions of correctly viewing and solving contradictions within the party and correcting party style. Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Li Ligong made a speech citing his own study experiences.

The participants listed and analyzed volumes of facts and cited them to explain that at present the contradictions that often exist within the party can be classified as 1) contradictions between differing views in work and understanding, and 2) contradictions between individual interests and the interests of the party and people.

They held: Correctly handling contradictions in the party is a major topic in our party building. It is of great significance for strengthening the party's own building, improving and strengthening party leadership, enhancing the political qualities of party-member cadres, and spurring all work, especially the work of straightening out party style and carrying out economic reforms.

Studying the question of how to correctly handle contradictions in the party, and especially in the leadership groups at all levels in the province, the meeting held that it is necessary to pay attention to a number of points at present. In our work and in our understanding, we must persistently seek truth from facts and divide one into two, and oppose subjectivism and one-sidedness. On how to view rights and duties, it is necessary to persevere in building the party to serve the people's interests, in democratic centralism, and in collective leadership with division of responsbilities, and oppose abuse of powers for private purposes, individuals vying for power, and the practice of one person alone having the say.

On the personnel question, we must persistently appoint people to posts on their merits and oppose the practice of appointing them on the strength of acquaintanceship and organizing small cliques. Organizationally, we must shun weakness, uphold party discipline, and oppose liberalism, the practice of seeking good relations with everyone regardless of principles, and lack of organization and discipline.

The meeting also summed up and studied the work of straightening out party style in Shanxi. The participants held that since the 8,000-strong gathering of the central organs, the party organizations at all levels in the province have done a lot of work to straighten out party style, and have initially scored some achievements. A good start has been made.

However, we must not overestimate these achievements, and we must certainly not feel that we can relax now. We must implement the central guideline of seriously tackling the work for 2 years and get a thoroughly good grasp of straightening out party style. At present we must in particular do a good job in the following aspects:

1. We must continue to do a good job in investigating and handling major and important cases. The whole party must be mobilized to fight a general battle [da zongti zhan] for about 1 year to strike down serious economic crime and to deal with the economic cases that occurred during the peak period in the second half of 1984 and the first half of 1985. Apart from economic cases, we must also tackle problems of serious unhealthy trends in personnel work, legal system, and work.

We must eliminate the fear that investigating these cases will affect economic work [words indistinct]. We must resolutely eliminate the weak behavior of a few leading comrades who are afraid of this and that. We just clear away obstructions and interference and grasp the work to the end. Every case that should be handled must be handled.

2. We must further correct unhealthy trends in the leading organs, including those with sectoral characteristics.

3. We must pay attention to getting a good grasp of education in party spirit, style, and discipline.

4. The leading cadres must truly set good examples [words indistinct].

5. We must pay attention to seeking truth from facts [words indistinct]. We must pay particular attention to distinguishing between mistakes in reform and unhealthy trends, and ensure that the tasks of straightening out party style and carrying out economic reform spur each other.

[Text] On 30 June, the newly adjusted People's Armed Forces Committee of the provincial CPC Committee held its first conference to study ways to successfully carry out militia and reserve service work after transferring the People's Armed Forces departments to the local organizational system.

The conference held: At present in carrying out our province's militia and reserve service work, it is imperative to emphasize the training of the People's Armed Forces cadres, organize and mobilize the militia to participate actively in building civilized towns and units, and pay great attention to the activities of supporting the People's Armed Forces through labor, reform of military training of the militia, and the military training of students.

LIAONING: DALIAN CITY CRACKS SERIOUS ECONOMIC CASE

[Excerpts] After 7 months of work, the joint investigation group organized by the province and Dalian City brought to light a serious economic criminal case which has been rare in the province. Some party and government cadres of Dalian City openly supported and shielded the criminal activities of Liu Yaoshan, general manager of the Dalian Beifang Company Limited. People implicated in the case have been strictly dealt with.

Liu Yaoshan formerly worked at and was dismissed from the Dalian Industrial and Mining Vehicle Plant. In 1962, he joined counterrevolutionary cliques on two occasions, plotting to steal guns and hijack ships to flee abroad. When his plot was uncovered, he was sentenced to 10 years of imprisonment. In July 1984, he took advantage of reform and enlivening the economy, defrauded the industrial and commercial administrative department of a business license by submitting a false report on possession of 300,000 yuan of capital, and established the Dalian Beifang Company Limited. When he obtained information that halotungsten [lu wu 7767 7005] bulbs sell well in domestic markets, he sent others to the Dalian waste material recycling company to buy 305,950 halotungsten bulbs scrapped by the Liaoning Provincial Machinery Equipment Import and Export Corporation at a price of 0.1 yuan each in the name of purchasing "lamp base" [deng di ba 3597 5530 1572]. He then palmed off the bulbs as "export goods transferred to the domestic market," and sold them for 2 to 4 yuan each. He sold a total of 282,200 worthless halotungsten bulbs to get 902,700 yuan, reaping a huge profit of 872,100 yuan.

In order to secure a shield for his criminal activities, Liu Yaoshan used more than 100,000 yuan to bribe, drawing in, corrupting and buying over cadres of state organs and enterprises. According to investigations, 34 party members and cadres (with 14 at and above the section level) were implicated in this serious case. Of them, 24 took bribes or gifts from Liu Yaoshan. For example, Liu Yaoshan arranged jobs for the wife and daughter, who was on sick leave, of Xie Jincheng, director of the Shahekou District judicial bureau of Dalian City.

In August 1984 when the Shahekou District office of the industrial and commercial bank discovered and investigated Liu Yaoshan's illegal sales of worthless halotungsten bulbs for a huge profit, Liu Yaoshan asked Xie Jincheng for legal protection. Xie said: "After the establishment of the district legal advisory office, I will send the most prestigious lawyer to serve as your perennial legal adviser." On 13 September of the same year, the district legal advisory office was established, and signed an agreement with the company on the same day, sending retired cadre Zhai Hongxu to serve as perennial legal adviser to the company. Later, Xie Jincheng again hired retired bureau-level cadre Liang Sheng and section-level cadre Mu Quanfeng as perennial legal advisers to the Yucai Industrial Company under the Beifang Company. Under the direction of Xie Jincheng, they used their lawful status as legal advisers to conduct a series of activities to support and shield Lie Yaoshan's crimes. They ordered Zhai Hongxu to carry out investigations to counter the investigations of the district office of the industrial and commercial bank to absolve Liu Yaoshan. They asked Liu Xuyou, chief of the enterprise registration section of the Shahekou District Industrial and Commercial Administrative Bureau of Dalian City, to issue false certificates and accounts to cover up Liu Yaoshan's crimes, and filed a lawsuit for Liu Yaoshan to counter the investigations. They sent 7 letters, 5 telegrams and 2 plaints of accusations in the name of Liu Yaoshan to the CPC Central Committee, the State Council, and relevant provincial, city and district leading organs and leading comrades, and sent people to appeal to higher authorities on 30 occasions, doing their utmost to distort the facts to absolve Liu Yaoshan from blame and support his criminal activities.

After the case was exposed, the Dalian City CPC Committee announced the decisions on handling of the persons concerned at a citywide conference on rectifying party style. Liu Yaoshan, Xie Jincheng, and Liu Xuyou were arrested according to law. Wang Shaonan, deputy manager of the Beifang Company, and Wang Jinming, chief for the registration of enterprises with the exclusive foreign investment of the Dalian City Industrial and Commerical Administrative Bureau, were placed on probation within the party and were dismissed from their administrative posts. Party and administrative discipline was also taken against other persons involved. The city CPC Committee also used this as a typical case to conduct education on party spirit, party style, and party discipline among party members and cadres in order to improve party style and deepen the building of the spiritual civilization.

LABOR CONTRACT SYSTEM WORKS WELL IN SHENYANG

[Text] Shenyang, June 28 (XINHUA) -- When 21-year-old Diao Yonghong worked in the Shenyang textile factory here for just six months, she got a raise in salary. She now gets a basic salary of 52 yuan, and 20 to 30 yuan bonus a month. She is one of 886 new workers employed by the factory in line with the labor contract system which was first tried out in China in 1983.

The labor contract system enables enterprises to increase or cut labor according to production, and employ people on a selective basis. The workers can also choose their own careers to bring their talents into fuller play.

A local labor official said the new employment system has overcome the drawback of the old one, which was known as the "iron rice bowl" system, giving each worker a fixed wage in a certain period disregarding his work.

Diao Yonghong said she had found her future in the factory. She said the new system spurred the enthusiasm for work of the new workers.

An official of the Shenyang textile factory said the new contract workers had all worked well, and some of them were honored as model workers.

The new employment system is being introduced in all the state-run enterprises in Shenyang, capital of northeastern China's Liaoning Province.

Now, the city has over 60,000 contract workers, 95 percent of the total workers employed recently.

Shenyang first introduced the labor contract system in some commercial and industrial departments and then spread it to state-run enterprises.

The introduction of the labor contract system is a big reform of the employment system in state-run enterprises.

At present, China has 3.5 million contract workers.

In Shenyang, all the contract workers have been recruited from unemployed young people through unified exams. The contract labor system is also applied to technical school graduates and young people who have taken over the work posts of their retired parents.

The local labor official said contract workers enjoy the same rights and treatment as regular workers. They can extend their terms of work when their contracts have expired.

GANSU PARTY MEETING OUTLINES PROVINCE'S WORK TASKS

HK020125 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] An enlarged meeting of the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee was held in Lanzhou from 26 June to 1 July. The meeting focused on studying the important instructions delivered by Comrades Hu Yaobang and Tian Jiyun during their mid-May inspection of Gansu, and made arrangements for work in the second half of the year.

The participating comrades unanimously held that Gansu has scored success in work in recent years and a relatively stable political environment has formed. However, we must also realize that we are still facing many problems, the strides we are taking in reform are not great, and there are not many ways of extricating ourselves from poverty and getting rich. In our future work, we must base our efforts on reality, do well in implementing the spirit of Comrade Hu Yaobang's instructions, and do our work creatively. The whole province must concentrate efforts on doing everything possible to fulfill the task of ensuring 8 percent and striving for 10 percent economic growth, thus taking the first stride in the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

In agricultural production, we must continue to carry out rational readjustment of the production structure, develop diversification and industrial crops, and practice intensive farming. The province's grain production should reach or exceed last year's figure.

In industry, we must continue to implement the principle of consolidation, digestion, replenishment, and improvement, strive to improve product quality, increase output of goods that sell well, and further improve enterprise economic results.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Li Ziqi spoke at the meeting. He pointed out: When organizing the masses to develop rural commodity economy, we must boldly break away from old and traditional concepts. The leaders at all levels must further improve work style. They must get a good grasp of carrying out projects that have been accurately identified, and get good results from them. We must be skilled in translating the party's policy decision and intentions into the spontaneous actions of the masses, and mobilize the millions of households to eliminate poverty and get rich.

We must create an atmosphere of harmony and concord, and throughout the province form an excellent situation of studying the spirit of Comrade Hu Yaobang's instructions, discussing and formulating schemes for eliminating poverty and getting rich, and working all out for the four modernizations.

Jia Zhijie, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor; Hou Zongbin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; and Liu Bing, chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, also spoke at the meeting. Present at the meeting were responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, Advisory Commission, Discipline Inspection Commission, People's Congress Standing Committee, government, CPPCC, and Military District, and of the CPC committees and groups of the organs of the provincial CPC Committee and government; and secretaries of prefectural and city CPC committees.

SONG HANLIANG ATTENDS XINJIANG NATIONALITIES MEETING

HK020449 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Excerpts] A regional academic discussion meeting on the Marxist theory of nationalities opened in Urumqi this morning. This is the first discussion meeting on the theory of nationalities since the founding of the autonomous region. In conjunction with the realities of China and Xinjiang, the meeting will study the law of the development of the Marxist theory of nationalities, the law of the development of the problems of nationalities, and the basic principle of solving the problems of nationalities and sum up the practical experiences of our country in solving the problems of nationalities.

The theory workers attending the discussion meeting have come from all places and departments throughout Xinjiang. Of these workers, some are Uighurs, Hans, Kazakhs, Huis, Mongolians, Sibos, and Manchus. Leading comrades of the regional party, government, and Army, including Song Hanliang, Janabil, Amudong Niyazi, attended the meeting.

Regional CPC Committee Secretary Song Hanliang spoke at the meeting. He said: Our Xinjiang is a region in which many nationalities live in compact communities. This history and current state require us to do nationality work well and to intensify the study of the theory of nationalities. While doing all our work well, we must first do a good job in national unity.

Song Hanliang said: To intensify the study of the theory of nationalities is a long-term, complicated, and arduous task. We must realize that it is important work. To further do well in studying the theory of nationalities, in the light of Xinjiang realities, we must grasp the key subjects firmly and well. We must stress the study of the new characteristics and new method of nationality work for the new period and scientifically answer the new problems arising in our practical work.

Those invited to this discussion meeting include experts, scholars, and theory workers in the problems of nationalities of the State Nationalities Affairs Commisison, Central Party School, China People's University, Central Institute of Nationalities, Guangdong, Guangxi, Yunnan, and Ningxia.

XINJIANG MEETING NOTES INDUSTRIAL DEFICIENCIES

HK110215 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 10 Jun 86

[Excerpts] A production control conference held today by the regional economics commission pointed out that although a good momentum of all-round growth appeared in the region's industrial and communications production in May, the requirements of the plan for rate of progress were still not met.

This year the region's industrial and communications performance has not been good enough in fulfilling the required rate of progress, improving quality, reducing material input, and raising economic results. During May, regional party and government leaders took responsible comrades of the economics commission and of the financial, banking, and material supply departments to work on the spot at more than 20 enterprises, focusing on solving problems in production. The region's industrial output value in May rose by 7.46 percent over April. Output value of enterprises covered by the budget rose by 20.68 percent. Income from their product sales rose by 13.94 percent, and their tax and profit rose by 53.13 percent. Growth rates of light and heavy industry started to develop in a coordinated way.

Tuohuti Shabier, vice chairman of the regional government, pointed out at the meeting that although the regions' industrial output increasd in May, the year's output value plan had only been 35.3 percent fulfilled by the end of the month, thus failing to fulfill the required rate of progress. There has been no fundamental turn for the better in unstable product quality. Material input has continued to rise. Stockpiles of certain products have increased instead of declining. The number of enterprises runnning at a loss and the total losses have increased compared with the same period last year. The leaders at all levels and the enterprises must attach great importance to these problems.

Tuohuti Shabier demanded that the departments in charge and the enterprises focus on three matters: 1) Under the premise of improving economic results, maintain an apppropriate growth rate. It is particularly important to increase output of best-selling goods needed in the markets. 2) Actively clear the circulation channels and do every everything possible to open up new sales outlets. 3) The enterprises must regard as their main goals improving product quality and reducing material input.

TAIPEI PAPER CRITICIZES U.S. TRADE POLICY

[Text] Taipei, July 1 (CNA) -- A newspaper in Taipei has expressed hopes that the United States will understand the nature of its trade problems with the Republic of China [ROC] and adopt a more rational attitude in resolving these problems.

In recent years, the U.S. has incessantly brought up many touchy problems in its trade consultations with this nation and forced this nation to accept its conditions, the CHINA DAILY NEWS said in an editorial today. The ROC Government has unconditionally accepted some of the conditions set by the U.S. while holding its position on some other trade issues, the paper said. In its trade talks with other countries such as Japan, South Korea, Singapore and other Western nations, the U.S. has never been so critical and harsh as it has toward this nation, it noted.

While pursuing its global interests, the U.S. sometimes can do nothing when some of its major trade partners refuse to accept its conditions, the paper said. Moreover, some countries have even suggested taking retaliatory actions against the U.S. if their exports to the U.S. are restricted, it said. Of course, the people of this nation will not be so unreasonable as to totally deny U.S. efforts to reduce its huge trade deficits, but in talking with this nation, the U.S. seems to be very ignorant about how much this nation has done to balance its trade with the U.S., it said.

The paper cited the talks on the car export ratio requirements as an example to explain that the U.S. lacks a clear understanding of the nation's efforts in this regard, saying that the U.S. seems to be trying to play up this issue in order to force this nation to accept its conditions. And therefore, it is very natural for the people here to have the impression that the U.S. is trying to intervene in the nation's domestic affairs.

The U.S. should understand that its policy is one of the major reasons that its huge trade deficits with this nation can not be reduced within a short time. For instance, it has been forcing this nation to buy its products which are not needed here while refusing to sell what this nation really wants. Only when the U.S. changes its attitude and policy will the two nations be able to resolve their trade problems, the paper said.

PRIME MINISTER CONCLUDES 3-DAY VISIT

[Text] Taipei, June 30 (CNA) -- Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew left for Manila Monday morning with his wife and an entourage of 11 Singapore Government officials to continue its Asian-Pacific tour. Ending a three-day visit in Taipei, the prime minister boarded a China Airlines flight, which took off from the Chiang Kai-shek International Airport for Manila at 10:55 a.m. Ranking Chinese Government officials, including Premier Yu Kuo-hwa and Foreign Minister Chu Fu-sung, were on hand at the airport to bid farewell. Premier Yu met his Singaporean counterpart at the Grand Hotel in Taipei and accompanied Lee and his wife to the airport.

Lee arrived here from Seoul last Saturday afternoon. President Chiang Ching-kuo, an old acquaintance of Prime Minister Lee, greeted his Singaporean guests at the airport.

LU PING COMMENTS ON PARTY POLITICS IN HONG KONG

HK021111 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 2 Jul 86 p 1

[Report: "Lu Ping Told Reporters in Shenzhen This Morning That It Is Inadviseble for Hong Kong To Engage in Party Politics"]

[Text] In an interview with Hong Kong reporters in Shenzhen this morning, Lu Ping, secretary general of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office of the State Council, said that he personally believes that it is inadvisable for Hong Kong to engage in party politics, as it will be harmful to Hong Kong's stability.

At their request, this morning Lu Ping met dozens of reporters who are now in Shenzhen to cover a meeting of the political system group of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region Basic Law Drafting Committee.

Lu Ping said that regarding whether future laws will forbid political parties, this should be discussed by the people. Lu Ping also said that as the administration by the ministerial system will inevitably result in party politics, he also disapproves of the ministerial system. Furthermore, the ministerial system runs counter to the Sino-British Joint Declaration on the question of Hong Kong. Lu Ping was a member of the Chinese delegation to the Sino-British talks.

Lu Ping believes that the most difficult part in drafting the Basic Law deals with the political system, as Hong Kong people themselves have differing opinions. The main problem is how to explain the provision that the executive authorities will be accountable to the legislature. When reporters asked him to explain this provision, he replied that this should be explained by both Chinese and British parties and should not be explained by him unilaterally. He said that both China and Britain have a common understanding on this, and it is advisabld for both parties to openly explain it in the future.

On the use of land revenue, Lu Ping said that explanations of the relevant stipulations in the Sino-British Joint Declaration should be made by the Sino-British Land Committee. He personally believes that using the land revenue to invest in order to maintain its value does not run counter to the Joint Declaration.

He said that the revenue is now controlled by Chinese representatives, and the Chinese side will act in line with being responsible for Hong Kong people and the government of the future Hong Kong Special Administrative Region. The important thing is to maintain its value free from the influence of inflation and to select the least risky way of investment.

Lu Ping continued that the future land revenue consultation committee must be composed of Hong Kong people and chaired by Hong Kong people.

On the definition of local residents, Lu Ping drew three circles. The large circle is Hong Kong residents, both permanent and temporary. The middle circle is all local residents with the right of permanent abode and permanent identity cards, both Chinese and foreigners. They have the right to vote and to stand for election. The small circle is the Chinese among local residents, and they have the right to elect NPC deputies and be elected NPC deputies.

As for the definition of local residents, Lu Ping said that this needs to be discussed.

Lu Ping said that it is inappropriate to equate direct elections with democracy, and democracy is not simply a question of several elections.

He said that many problems, such as the political system, travel documents, land title deeds, and laws should be solved during the transitional period. He believes that now there are many channels for China and Britain to exchange their views, so the transition from pre-1997 to post-1997 will be smooth.

As for the interests of the original residents of the New Territories, he believes that consideration should be given to traditions, and it is impossible to suddently make radical changes. However, he believes that the provision on this problem in the draft structure of the Basic Law is not conclusive, and this problem will be discussed again in the future.

THEORETICIAN WANG FUOSHUI ON 'DOUBLE-HUNDRED' POLICY

HK301314 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 28 Jun 86 p 5

["Special Dispatch From Shanhai": "The Double-Hundred Principle Can Hardly Be Implemented Without the Guarantee of the Legal System"]

[Text] In Shanhai, theoretician Wang Ruoshui recently said: "China has always had all kinds of 'labels' but it lacks an indispensable 'lable' -- violating the Constitution." He held that, in publicizing the legal system, it is first necessary to hold aloft the banner of the Constitution and, in discussing the "double-hundred" principle, we cannot depart from the Constitution.

When delivering an academic report to Shanhai theoretical and press circles, Wang Ruoshui raised many original views which attracted widespread attention.

The theoretician approved the following viewpoint raised by some people; The "double-hundred" principle can hardly be genuinely implemented without the guarantee of the legal system. In an interview with this reporter, he said: Three decades ago, on behalf of the CPC Central Committee, Lu Dingyi delivered a report on "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend." However, the process of implementing the "double-hundred" principle was full of reversals in the later period and it was very difficult to implement the principle. The principal reason for this lies in the fact that the line of the CPC was wrong for a time, but it also had something to do with the blunted sense of the Constitution on the part of the public in general. The constitutions of 1954 and 1982 stipulated "freedom of creation" and "freedom of speech," but people "seemed not to attach importance to them." It was not until last year that the literature and art circles hailed the "freedom of creation." "The stipulations of the Constitution seemed to be forgotten."

Wang Ruoshui emphatically said: "The Constitution is the foundation of the state and a great program for building our country. All activities of the state and society are subject to the restrictions of the Constitution. Therefore, by acting according to the Constitution, safeguarding the Constitution, and curbing violations of the Constitution, we can genuinely guarantee the implementation of the 'double-hundred' principle. Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: 'It is necessary to institutionalize and codify democracy into laws so that this system and laws will not change because of changes in leaders or in the views and attention of leaders.' We should all exert ourselves to achieve this."

In discussing the social project of univeralizing legal knowledge, Wang Ruoshui said: "The people are the masters of the state. The rights of the master should be protected by the Constitution and the laws. The ultimate aim of universalizing legal knowledge is not only to make the people know the laws and abide by them, but, what is more important, to arouse in them a sense of rights and of being the masters of the state. An important reason for the tragedy of the Great Cultural Revolution is that the people neither fully realized nor exercised their rights. A state president elected according to the Constitution was abolished by a decision on 'dismissing a person from all his posts inside and outside the party' and the Constitution was turned into a mere scrap of paper by a '16 May circula ' We should conscientiously learn from this profound historical lesson. Therefore, we should 'never forget' the 'Great Cultural Revolution.' Only by 'never forgetting' it can we prevent a repetition of this tragedy and promote socialist democracy and the development of the legal system."

Wang Ruoshui said in conclusion: "The reform in our country is developing in depth in all directions. To adapt the superstructure to the changing economic base, it is necessary for the theoretical and academic circles to make an in-depth self-examination and these experiments are the rights given to us by the Constitution and, therefore, our bounden duty."

HONG KONG REACTS TO INCREASING CONCERN OVER DAYA BAY

HK290327 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA SUNDAY MORNING POST in English 29 Jun 86 p 1

[By Ann Quon]

[Excerpt] The Government has again reacted swiftly to escalating public concern over the Daya Bay Nuclear Power Plant by suddenly extending the forthcoming trip of one of its top officials overseas to include several European countries.

The Secretary for Economic Service, Mr John Yaxley, originally only scheduled to visit England, has had to change his plans to include France and Belgium. He is scheduled to leave the territory on July 8 and will now return on July 20. The change in travel plans comes amid official concern over growing public opposition to the proposed Daya Bay plant, which is to be situated less than 70 km from Hong Kong.

In what is seen as an attempt to show that it is a caring and responsive government, Mr Yaxley will be deployed to learn as much as he can about the safety measures adopted by these countries. His study also help the Hong Kong Government prepare for what is threatening to turn into a full-scale public battle.

"I think it is helpful for the people of Hong Kong to know that there is someone finding out details of places which are in a similar situation to us," Mr Yaxley said yesterday.

High on his list will be visits to plants similar in design to the one proposed for Daya Bay. This weekend he will shortlist European plants which have pressurized water reactors and are near heavily populated areas.

Daya Bay will have two 900 megawatt pressurized water reactors, considered the most advanced in nuclear technology.

Mr Yaxley has already earmarked the nuclear plant near Antwerp, Belgium as a focal point of his visit. It is within 10 km of Antwerp which has a population of almost a million. However, he has ruled out the possibility of visiting Chernobyl, the scene of the worst disaster in nuclear history.

One of his major concerns when meeting nuclear experts will be to grill them on all aspects of safety. The thinking is that while the Hong Kong Government is not directly responsible for the safety measures planned for Daya Bay, it should equip itself with as much knowledge as possible in the face of growing questions from the public.

Mr Yaxley will also study the contingency plans developed by cities near these plants so Hong Kong can prepare its own evacuation programme in the event of a nuclear disaster.

This will be independent of the study currently being done by the UK Atomic Energy Authority based in Harwell, England, which Mr Yaxley plans to visit. The authority has been commissioned to assess the probability of different types of accidents at Daya Bay and their impact on Hong Kong. The study will also provide guidelines for a contingency plan.

However, those guidelines are expected to fall short of any full-scale evacuation plan. As a result, Mr Yaxley will also visit those authorities expected to provide emergency suport in the event of any nuclear incident, including fires services and police authorities.

Although the administration is confident that the Daya Bay plant will be safe, they nevertheless feel these early steps must be taken to ensure that Hong Kong will be ready in the unlikely event of a mishap.

While in England, Mr Yaxley will also visit the nuclear powered station near Bristol, as well as meet officials from various nuclear agencies, including the Department of Energy, the Central Electricity Generating Board, and the United Kingdom Nuclear Instalation Corporation.

The visit is part of a new more aggressive role the Hong Kong Government feels it must take at a time when there is a crisis of confidence about the safety and commercial viability of nuclear power.

PRC JOURNAL ON WESTERN EUROPE, U.S.-SOVIET RIVALRY

HK010101 Beijing GUOJI WENTI YANJIU No 2, 13 Apr 86 pp 27-32

[Article by Qian Nengxin: "Position and Role of Western Europe in U.S.-Soviet Rivalry" -- first paragraph printed in boldface]

[Text] Both the United States and the Soviet Union take the control of Europe as the final goal of their contention on this continent. Fundamentally speaking, the contradictions between Western Europe on one side and the United States and the Soviet Union on the other can never be eliminated. Under the new situation where the United States and the Soviet Union have entered into dialogue while continuing the confrontation, a basic policy that Western Europe may possibly adopt to deal with the situation is to further expedite the relaxation of relations between the United States and the Soviet Union as well as relations between East and West, to do its best to restrain the development of the U.S.-Soviet arms race, and to exercise its independent and positive role in this effort. In the future, the position and role of Western Europe will be determined by the strengthening of its power and the progress of the alliance of various countries. Judging from the trend of historical development, Western Europe, which is a pole in the multipolar world, will further play a positive role in opposing the arms race and preserving world peace.

Since World War II, Europe has been the cockpit of the contention between the two superpowers. Over the past 60 years or so having gone through several stages of cold war, detente, and intense confrontation, the European situation has changed a great deal. After the Reagan administration proposed the Strategic Defense Initiative, the United States and the Soviet Union readjusted their respective tactics, and since then, both sides have been in a period of dialogue and confrontation. In this new situation, Western Europe is in a very delicate and complicated position. Now its greatest problem is how to readjust its relations with the United States and the Soviet Union in light of the situation in order to seek security and interests for itself and to exercise its specific role.

1. The Question of Security

The question of security has always been the most important one in the relationship between Western Europe on one side and the United States and the Soviet Union on the other.

Since the Reagan administration proposed the Strategic Defense Initiative the following new characteristics have appeared in U.S.-Soviet relations:

1. The arms race between the sides has been upgraded. Apart form all kinds of nuclear weapons and conventional weapons, the United States and the Soviet Union have stressed the development of outer space weapons in their contention for military superiority. There are indications that this contention will last for a long time (about 10 to 20 years or even longer) and consume large sums of money and will of course greatly alter the military strategy and tactical ideology of both sides.

2. An unprecedented peace offensive has appeared. At the beginning of this year, to counter the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, the Soviet Union put forth a disarmament proposal on complete destruction of nuclear weapons throughout the world in three stages over the next 15 years.

This is the first overall and systematic nuclear disarmanent proposal the Soviet Union has made for many years. Later the United States made a counterproposal. The possible development of the disarmanent talks between the United States and the Soviet Union in various spheres, which is an auxiliary measures for the arms race, will inevitably have a bearing on the international situation as a whole, and Europe is the first to be affected.

Western Europe is very worried about the new round of the arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union. Mindful of its own interests, Western Europe hopes that a strategic balance between the military strength of both countries can be attained at a lower level. Only thus can it have more room for maneuver between the two countries, increase the safety coefficient, and strengthen its independent position. The Reagan administration intends to act in accordance with its existing policies in the outer space arms race. But the Soviet Union will not be content to fall behind. While raising obstacles for the United states, it has also adopted and will continue to adopt relevant countermeasures. Therefore, Western Europe is unable to stay aloof from the matter. At present, in response to U.S. demands, some West European countries have, in varying degrees, joined the Strategic Defense Initiative (in order to deal with the United States and to gain substantial benefits). However, this does not mean that Western Europe is following the United States and has joined the outer space arms race. In the future, in the course of studying, producing on a trial basis, and deploying U.S. outer space weapons, the basic conflict of interests between Western Europe and the United States will certainly become more an more obvious. Moreover, with the upgrading of the U.S.-Soviet arms race, Western Europe will certainly devleop and enhance its defense force in order to preserve its own safety and position. Thus, The contradictions between Western Europe and the United States, and the Soviet Union, the contradictions among various West European countries, and the contradictions within West European countries will naturally be aggravated.

Western Europe is also apprehensive of the possible changes in NATO military strategy. Since a "balance in nuclear terror" between the United States and the Soviet Union was achieved, Western Europe has been relatively safe on the question of defense. Although for many years, it has had various doubts about NATO's "flexible reaction strategy," chiefly for fear that the U.S. military protection will become more and more unreliable with the strengthening of the Soviet military force and changes in the relative strengths of the United States and the Soviet Union, there have been no substantial changes in its basic position. However, after the United States proposed the Strategic Defense Initiative it immediately felt that once the United States realizes its plan and gains the initiative in both strategic offense and defense, the "flexible reaction strategy" will inevitably collapse. Then, Western Europe could be in a difficult position. It will have to either rely on the United States to a greater extent and lose it original position or "disengage" from the U.S. defense and be faced with the great military pressure of the Soviet Union. Although all this will not happen at present or in the near future, people in West European political and military circles have yet to take precautions.

Western Europe is full of misgivings about the USSR peace offensive and the U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks. The resumption of the U.S.-Soviet talks has relaxed relations between East and West. This conforms to the interests of Western Europe and is welcomed by it. However, on some essential problems such as how the U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks will develop and what kind of agreement should be reached, Western Europe is full of misgivings. Judging by its own experience, it is extremely apprehensive that the two superpowers may reach an agreement that will harm the interests of their respective allies in order to satisfy their own needs.

On the question of reducing the strategic nuclear weapons of both sides and reducing their conventional armed forces in Eastern and Western Europe, there also exist similar sensitive spheres concerning the immediate interests of Western Europe. Toward the disarmament proposal for the Soviet Union on complete destruction of nuclear weapons, in principle, Western Europe feels it unsuitable to oppose it, but it is clear about the Soviet Union's real purpose -- that is, to break up relations between Europe and the United States and to restructure the development of Western Europe's defense force. In particular, concerning the Soviet proposal on freezing the French and British nuclear forces in the next 5 years, while both the United States and the Soviet Union are still in possession of large quantities of nuclear weapons, Britain and France feel unable to accept this under any circumstances.

For many years, a basic West European policy on the matter of defense has been "defense plus detente means security." No substantial changes in this policy are likley now or in the future. In the immediate postwar period, Western Europe relied entirely on the United States in the matter of defense. Beginning from the 1960's, with the increase of its own strength, a proposition on "two pillars" was raised within NATO but in face of the powerful military strength of the Soviet Union, it still cannot dispense with U.S. "nuclear protection." Threfore, in seeking the most favorable "point of balance" for its own security, Western Europe has continued to adopt the following three policies: Maintaining U.S. military protection, developing its own defense force within certain limits,and ameliorating confrontations between the United States and the Soviet Union as well as between the two large military groups of East and West. This reflects the important and sensitive military position of Western Europe and also exposes its weakness. The recent development of the so-called "new de Gaullism" is an expression of how Western Europe is seeking to increase its strength and independence. The restoration of the West European alliance and the strengthening of military cooperation in Western Europe also reflect this trend. Despite all this, the current effort of Western Europe in this respect still cannot cope with the new situation of the U.S.-Soviet contention. How it will improve its situation remains to be seen.

2. Relations Between Eastern and Western Europe

Another prominent problem in the relations between Western Europe on one side and the United States and the Soviet Union on the other is the question of ties between Eastern and Western Europe.

In the period of relaxation during the 1970's, relations between Eastern and Western Europe greatly improved in the political, economic and cultural fields as well as in the exchange of personnel. In the political field, with the participation and support of the United States and the Soviet Union, and with Brandt's "Eastern Policy" and the final act of the Helsinki Conference on security and cooperation in Europe, Eastern and Western Europe officially recognized the postwar status of Europe, and with this as a prerequisite, established a principle for development of political relations between both sides. On the question of Germany, which is the most sensititive in the European situation, the two Germanies also signed a "basic treaty," symbolizing that a big advance had been made on the "road to normalization." Even greater development was achieved in the economic relations of both sides. From the early 1970's to the early 1980's, total trade volume of Eastern and Western Europe increased by more than 200 percent. At the beginning of the 1980's, as U.S.-Soviet relations deteriorated again, a tense situation of confrontation reappeared in Europe.

However, even in this situation, the relations between Eastern and Western Europe still remained relatively normal. There were frequent contacts between the political figures of both sides. Moreover, the leaders of the two Germanies put forth a proposition on "responsible community." At that time, some U.S. journals called this strange situation in Europe a "small detente in the cold war between East and West." At present, while the United States and the Soviet Union are engaged in a new round of the arms race, there are indications that this objective situation of reaching unanimity between Eastern and Western Europe will be further developed. The common ground for both sides is that they all oppose the upgrading of the U.S.-Soviet arms race and hope to maintain and promote relaxation and develop political and economic relations and they are all afraid that the leaders of their respective alliances may strengthen control over and restrain the independence of the allied countries.

For Western Europe, its relations with Eastern Europe occupy a particular important position in its foreign policy. It holds that the postwar "Yalta pattern" has resulted in the separation of Europe and the confrontation between the two major military groups and placed both Western and Eastern Europe under the control of the two superpowers. In order to seek an independent position for itself, Western Europe must win over Eastern Europe and weaken Soviet control over Eastern Europe so as to reduce and nullify the Soviet threat and weaken U.S. control over Western Europe. The idea of "a Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals" and the policy of "relaxation, understanding, and cooperation" put forth by de Gaulle in the 1960's was the earliest expression of this strategic scheme. However, due to the immaturity of the objective conditions at that time, de Gaulle's wishes could not be realized. Since then, Brandt, Schmidt, and Giscard d'Estaing, as well as the current political leaders of Western Europe have all inherited this De Gaullist thinking in varying degrees, except that their tactics are more mature and flexible. They have attached greater importance to actual results and strived for a "slow stream" in the development of political, economic, and other relations between Eastern and Western Europe. At the same time, they have also done their best to avoid upsetting the United States and the Soviet Union too much. Western Europe has been using this tactic quite successfully.

In developing its relations with Eastern Europe, Western Europe first met obstacles created by the Soviet Union. The latter, seeing that it might lose control over Eastern Europe after the "Czechoslovak incident" and the "Polish incident," has tried hard to restrict the development of relations between Eastern and Western Europe in political, economic, and other fields. In the political field, it has placed restrictions on the contacts between the leaders on both sides and has even flagrantly obstructed East European leaders' visits to West European countries. In military affairs, it has made use of the tense situation in the previous stage and increased and renewed its military equipment in some East European countries. In the economic field, it has been trying to bring the economic relations between Eastern and Western Europe into the orbit of the Council of Mutual Economic Assistance. To this end, it has even changed its tactics and recognized the EFC as a political entity in international contacts. But it still insists that the economic contacts between Eastern and Western Europe should be permitted by CEMA, so as to enhance its control.

The development of relations between Eastern and Western Europe has also been restrained by the United States. Although in principle, the United States does not oppose Western Europe's infiltration into Eastern Europe in order to weaken the Soviet control over its sphere of influence, it requires that this infiltration should not break the existing pattern in Europe, for fear that it may lose control over Western Europe.

This U.S. attitude is reflected by its brutal interference in the gas and steel tube trade between Western Europe and the Soviet Union and its effort to compel Western Europe to join the economic blockade against Poland and to restrain the contacts between the two Germanies.

Under pressure from the United States and the Soviet Union, Western Europe has to be cautious in developing its relations with Eastern Europe. However, judging from the current situation, since Western Europe has various favorable conditions in this respect and since both Western and Eastern Europe have some common interests in the political and economic fields, the United States and the Soviet Union will find it difficult to obstruct the development of these relations.

3. The Question of Relations With the Third World

The development of relations between Western Europe and the Third World and the U.S.-Soviet contention in the Third World have given birth to intricate and complex contradictions.

There has been marked progress in the relations between Western Europe and the Third World since the 1960's. In order to resist the global contention between the United States and the Soviet Union, Western Europe and the Third World have to rely on each other. They also need each other's help in the economic field. In particular, the signing and development of the Lome Agreement has brought Western Europe, in varying degrees, into relatively close economic and political contact with more than 60 countries in the Third World.

There are great differences between Western Europe and the United States on the attitude toward the Third World. The United States has to contend with the Soviet Union for strategic places and spheres of influence in the Third World to ensure that its strategic passageways are not impeded and the supply of strategic materials and raw materials is stable. Since the Reagan administration came to power, the United States has adopted even stronger measures and violently counterattacked the Soviet Union in many Third World hot spots, including Central and South America, Africa, the Middle East, and Northeast Asia. In the economic field, the Reagan administration has adopted a high-handed policy to combat the anti-hegemonist struggle of the Third World countries in this field. The above-mentioned U.S. policies have aggravated the turbulent situation of the Third World and exacerbated its economic difficulties. Although there are some similarities between Western Europe's policy toward the Third World and that of the United States (restraining Soviet expansion in that area and shifting economic crisis onto the Third World), there are also some great differences. Western Europe hold that the main problem for the Third World today is the problem of economic development (including heavy foreign debts, African famine, and the fall in prices of raw materials and primary products). For this reason, Western industrial countries should make certain concessions and compromises so as to help the Third World develop its economy. Thus, the political situation there will also become more stable. This is not only conducive to restraining Soviet expansion, but also to the economic growth of the West. Many theories and slogans put forward by West European political and academic circles, such as "the South is an engine for the economic growth of the North," "mutual reliance between North and South," and "without North-South cooperaton, the current economic crisis cannot be overcome," all serve the policy. The United States is very angry with this. It criticized Western Europe for taking advantage of the contradictions between the United States and the Third World to benefit itself (the policy of Western Europe does attempt to preserve its original spheres of influence in the Third World). Kissinger said; "What Western Europe is doing in the Third World is aimed at benefiting itself at the expense of the United States." He proposed that both Western Europe and the United States should work out a common strategy to deal with matters concerning the Soviet Union and the Third World.

But Western Europe emphasizes that it should play a different role in the Third World and opposes conducting armed intervention against the Third World (however, once the immediate interests of West European countries are concerned, they will also resort to force without the least hesitation against the Third World countries, such as the open support by the European Community for Britain in its war with Argentina on the question of the Malvinas Islands). It also opposes extending East-West conflict to North-South relations, holding that it is harmful to restraining Soviet expansion in the Third World.

The attitude of Western Europe in opposing Soviet expansion in the Third World is very clear. The Soviet expansion in the Southern part of Africa and the Horn of Africa in the second half of the 1970's and the Vietnamese aggression in Cambodia supported by the Soviet Union as well as the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in the late 1970's and early 1980's were all resisted and opposed by West European countries and the European Community.

Although on the North-South Question, West European countries have played some negative roles, generally speaking, they are positive factors in resisting the U.S.-Soviet contention and expansion in the Third World.

4. The Question of Economic Development

In the U.S.-Soviet contention, whether Western Europe can improve its position and whether it can play a greater role, a decisive factor is whether its economic strength can be enhanced.

In the 1950's and 1960's, Western Europe was in a period of rapid development -- the speed of its development had been unprecedented in the history of capitalist economic development (the annual economic growth rate was as high as 5 to 6 percent). After it was extricated from an extremely weak situation in the initial postwar period, its strength as a whole was close to the United States and stronger than the Soviet Union.

Since the early 1970's, having been heavily affected by the two most serious periodical economic crisis after the war and the two oil price rises, the economic strength of Western Europe has been weakened. At the same time, its reform of the economic structure has encountered great obstacles. It started the new technical revolution comparatively late and has not adopted effective measures in this field. Serious inflation has not been controlled for a long time and the unemployment rate has been increasing year by year. In addition, it has been negatively influenced by the U.S. "three highs" policy. As a result, its economic has long had the problem of stagnation and low growth rate.

In this period, there has been a dramatic change in the relative economic strengths of Western Europe, the United States and the Soviet Union: The economic position of Western Europe has been relatively weakened while that of the United States has been strengthened; and the Soviet economy has entered a hard period of low growth due to the influence of various international and external factors. This change in the economic situation has sharpened the contradictions between Western Europe and the United States in the economic field and affected to a certain extent the position of the Soviet Union as a traditional market for Western Europe.

The West European economy began to take a turn for the better after 1985. It is expected that in the next 2 or 3 years, this trend will continue to develop and the economic growth rate may be slightly increased. Great fluctuations in the inflation rate are unlikely -- it has already been markedly reduced -- and the serious unemployment situation is not likely to go on deteriorating.

Looking into the future, it can be expected that a turning point will appear in the 1990's in the West European economy as more and more achievements will be made in the reform of its economic structure and the new technical revolution (development of various West European countries is uneven, but they can promote each other). By that time, the economic growth rate of Western Europe will be increased (reaching about 4 percent, but it will be difficult to regain the high growth rate of the 1950's and 1960's). However, due to the heavy burden of the arms race and other restrictions, the United States and the Soviet Union will have difficulty raising their economic growth rates. Thus, it is quite possible that there will again be some changes favorable to Western Europe in the balance of economic strength. Once this happens, Western Europe will naturally be in a more favorable position in its relations with the United States and the Soviet Union.

5. The Question of West European Alliance

In the past as well as for some time to come, the strengthening of the West European alliance is another important matter for raising the position of Western Europe in East-West relations and in resisting U.S.-Soviet contention.

The successive establishment of the European Coal and Steel Community, the EEC, and the European Atomic Energy Community in the 1950's and their development on a tortuous road over the past 30 years or so have laid a sound basis for the West European alliance, which already has a considerable scope and force. The number of member states of the European Community has increased from 6 to 12. In the economic field, it has developed from a customs union and a common agricultural policy to the establishment of the European monetary system and cooperation in the field of scientific research. There has also been a comparatively great progress in political defense cooperation and in adopting coordinated policies, especially "speaking in the same voice" on some major diplomatic policies.

Since the beginning of the 1980's, the West European alliance has been faced with serious tests and challenges. Internally, for various reasons such as the long-term stagnation in the West European economy and the imbalance in economic development of various countries, the contradictions between various member states of the the European Community have been sharpened. They have been arguing over problems concerning the agricultural policy and budgetmaking for a long time, and the progress of the alliance has slowed down. Externally, since the U.S.-Soviet contention has sharpened and the European situation has been further intensified. Western Europe has been put into a more turbulent and unsafe situation. If it does not accelerate the alliance in the political field and in defense affairs, it will possibly disintegrate and lose its current position. In the economic field, since it lags behind Japan and the United States in respect of economic growth rate and the new technical revolution, its international economic position and competitiveness may possibly be further weakened. Under the above-mentioned internal and external pressures and challenges (especially those outside), there has been spectacular progress in the West European alliance over the past year or so. The cooperation in defense affairs with West Germany and France as the main body has been strengthened, the "Eureka Plan" for advanced technological research and cooperation has been passed, and some important measures for improving the community's voting system and carrying out the enriched common market plan (realizing free circulation of commodities, funds, labor, and services by 1992) have been adopted. These are concrete expressions of this progress. Although there will be all kinds of difficulties for the implementation of these measures, and some of them may not even be implemented, at least this shows the determination of Western Europe in its effort to extricate itself from its predicament and to meet the challenge.

On the question of West European alliance, the United States and the Soviet Union have their own assessments. In the political report delivered at the 27th CPSU National Congress held recently, the Soviet Union formally acknowledged in theory that the United States, Europe, and Japan are three centers of the capitalist force, showing that it has to face up to the strength of the West European alliance. While increasing its political and military pressure on Western Europe, the Soviet Union has also tactically made use of the contradictions between Western Europe and the United States, trying to win over the former and isolate and attack the latter with concentrated strength. At the same time, it has sown dissension among various West European countries and made use of the fact that France and Britain are afraid of and on the alert against the strengthening of West German power to obstruct the progress of West European alliance. The United States, however, adopts a policy of making use of and placing restrictions on the alliance of Western Europe. It hopes that the joint force of Western Europe will play a role of resisting Soviet expansion in Europe as well as in certain areas of the Third World, so as to lighten its burdens in global contention with the Soviet Union. But it also places restrictions on the alliance in defense and economic affairs so as to enhance its control over Europe. In particular, since Western Europe is a powerful rival of the United States in the economic field, it has adopted more unscrupulous measures to obstruct the economic alliance of Western Europe (such as using both hard and soft tactics and making use of the special relations between Britain and the United States and West Germany's dependence on the United States in defense affairs).

There are altogether more than 20 nationally independent countries in Western Europe, each has its own policies and is different in position and strength. Thus, the course of the alliance will naturally be slow and full of difficulties. In the political and economic fields as well as in monetary and defense affairs, the contradictions and obstacles within Western Europe are often expressed by the conflict of "narrow nationalism," but in foreign policy, they are often expressed by the different stands between the "Atlantic faction" and the "European faction." Judging from the course it has taken in the past 20 years or so, the orientation of development of the West European alliance can only be the strengthening of cooperation and coordination in various fields under the condition of maintaining the sovereignty of various member states, rather than following the road of transnational entity. An important reason for the continuous development of the West European alliance in the past and in the future, apart from its internal needs, is the extenal pressure, especially the U.S.-Soviet contention, which plays the role of promoting this alliance.

6. Some Conclusions

To sum up, it may be appropriate for us to make the following judgments on the relations between Western Europe on one side and the United States and the Soviet Union on the other:

1. In the foreseeable future, Western Europe will continue to be the cockpit of U.S.-Soviet contention. This is decided by two factors. First, the economic and technical forces of Western Europe play an important role in the U.S.-Soviet contention; and second, both the United States and the Soviet Union can take advantage of the current degree of West European alliance. The United States makes use of the Soviet threat to control Western Europe, and the Soviet Union makes use of the U.S. control to sow dissension between Western Europe and the United States. Of course, in this complex struggle, the two countries may win or lose some points in a certain period or on a certain question, but they will never end their contention.

The contradiction between Western Europe on one side and the United States and the Soviet Union on the other is different in nature. The contradiction between Western Europe and the United States originated from control and anticontrol, while that between Western Europe and the Soviet Union originated from threat and antithreat. Although these contradictions are different in nature, they are all difficult to overcome. This is determined by the basic policies of the two countries toward Western Europe.

2. Under the new situation of the U.S.-Soviet contention, there are difficulties, but opportunities as well, for the development of Western Europe. A basic policy Western Europe may adopt to deal with the new situation is to further expedite the relaxation of relations between the United States and the Soviet Union as well as development of the U.S.-Soviet arms race, and to give play to its independent and positive role in this effort. Essentially speaking, in future development, Western Europe still needs to be alert to Soviet attempts to break up the alliance between Europe and the United States by means of strong military pressure and to restrain the development of West European independent forces. However, its struggle to resist the United States' wilful acts in the course of the arms race and for more right to speak on the strategy against the Soviet Union seems to be developing more vigorously.

3. Through its development over the decades since the war, Western Europe has become an important force to contend with in international affairs. In a situation where U.S.-Soviet contention is becoming more and more acute, it is also a force for maintaining world peace and stability. In the future, the position and role of Western Europe will still be determined by the strengthening of its power and the progress of the alliance of various countries. Judging from the trend of historical development, Western Europe, which is a pole in a multipolar world, will further play a positive role in opposing the arms race and preserving world peace.

JAPAN, USSR REACH AGREEMENT ON GRAVE VISITS

[Text] Tokyo, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Japan and the Soviet Union today reached an agreement on reciprocal visits without visas by family members to ancestral graves in each other's country. The agreement will enable Japanese to resume for the first time since 1975 visits to their family graves on the northern islands occupied by the Soviet Union after World War II.

According to a report by the JIJI NEWS AGENCY, the accord was reached at a meeting this morning by Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe and new Soviet Ambassador to Japan Nikolay Solovyev. Under the agreement, effective August this year, nationals from the two countries making grave visits need only bear their identity cards.

It was reported early in May, when Abe visited Moscow, that the two countries had agreed to negotiate the resumption of Japanese visits to the ancestral graves on the northern islands, off Japan's main island of Hokkaido. Former Japanese islanders visited the Soviet-held islands between 1964 and 1975, bearing identity cards issued by the Japanese Government. But in 1976, Moscow announced that Japanese wanting to visit these islands would need visas, leading to the suspension of such visits.

At today's meeting, the new Soviet ambassador also handed Abe a letter from Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone. Abe said after the meeting that Gorbachev's letter expressed enthusiasm toward Nakasone's invitation to visit Japan.

REAGAN AWARDS LIBERTY MEDALS TO CHINESE AMERICANS

[Text] New York, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Architect I.M. Pei and industrialist An Wang, two Americans of Chinese origin, were awarded the "medals of liberty" by U.S. President Ronald Reagan this evening. Pei and Wang are the first two Chinese-Americans to be awarded the bronze-cost medals, one of the most prestigious honors in this nation.

At a grand opening ceremony to mark a four-day centennial celebration of the statue of Liberty on Governors Island, two kms southeast of Manhattan, Pei and Wang, together with ten other naturalized U.S. citizens, were honored for having "made substantial contribution to the United States." Astronaut Franklin Chang-diaz, psychologist Kenneth Clark, entertainer Bob Hope, statesman Henry Kissinger, journalist James Reston, among others, were chose to be the first 12 recipients of the Medal of Liberty awards from an initial list of 200 recommendations.

Pei, a native of Canton, has left his architectural mark on buildings from New York to Hawaii. The 69-year-old architect arrived in the United States 50 years ago and became a U.S. citizen 19 years later. His architectural designs vary from the simple grave of Senator Robert F. Kennedy at the Arlington National Cemetery to the sprawling Jacob K. Javits Convention Center in New York City and the renovated Louvre, the foremost French art museum in Pris.

Wang, 65, nicknamed by the U.S. news media as "the computer genius," was born in Shanghai and came to this country in 1945. He earned his master's degree and Ph.D. at Harvard University within three years and founded the Wang Laboratories in Boston in 1951, a business that has made him one of America's wealthiest men and most generous philanthropists. Wang, whose company had sales of 2.35 billion U.S. dollars in the most recent fiscal year, introduced a desktop computer in 1965 that revolutionized the industry. His company has now become a leading worldwide supplier of integrated computer systems, including texts, data, image and voice processing, as well as telecommunications and networking.

PRC FLAG FLIES AT U.S. INDEPENDENCE DAY PARADE

[Text] Washington, July 4 (XINHUA) -- The five-star red flag of the People's Republic of China today made its debut in commemoration festivities of the 210th anniversary of the U.S. independence -- the first such appearance since the people's republic established diplomatic relations with the United States.

More than 400 Chinese Americans and Overseas Chinese from Washington, D.C. and New York participated in today's Independence Day parade along the Constitution Avenue, south of the White House. Dressed in traditional Chinese styles, several dozens of them waved the national flags of the People's Republic of China and the United States. Some Chinese American youths performed the traditional Chinese "lion dance" to loud applause from bystanders. An old Chinese American told XINHUA he was delighted to see the five-star red flats in the parade. Some Chinese students studying in the United States joined in today's parade.

NORTH, SOUTH KOREA 'POSITIVE' TO IOC PROPOSALS

["Both Parties of Korea Respond Positively Towards IOC Proposals" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Geneva, July 3 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea and South Korea expressed "positive" responses towards the IOC proposals of staging a couple of the 1988 Olympic events in the DPR Korea, according to an IOC communique published today.

During the 3rd reunion meeting held June 10-11 between both parties of Korea, the International Olympic Committee proposed that DPR Korea hold two complete events of table tennis and archery, part of some other events and the Olympic cultural festival. But the IOC is still expecting a clarification as to the interpretation of the reply from the DPR Korea before IOC goes ahead to make detailed plans for the joint-hosting of the 1988 Olympic games.

SOVIET NAVAL, AIR UNITS ARRIVE IN DPRK

[TExt] Beijing, 4 Jul (XINHUA) -- According to a Korean central television station report on the evening of 4 July, a 3-vessel naval squadron, including the heavy antisubmarine cruiser "Minsk," arrived at the Korean port of Wonsan for a visit on 4 July. The squadron is commanded by Sidorov, commander of the Soviet Far East Fleet.

On the same day, a squadron of 12 MiG-23 aircraft commanderd by Soviet Far East Military District Air Force Commander Bulankin also arrived in Korea.

The television report said that the Soviet Pacific Fleet Squadron and the Air Force squadron have arrived in Korea to take part in activities to mark the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Korean-Soviet treaty of friendship, cooperation, and mutual assistance.

U.S. RECONNAISSANCE PLANE REPORTED IN DPRK AIR SPACE

[Text] Pyongyang, July 4 (XINHUA) -- A U.S. high-altitude reconnaissance plane flew into the sky above the territorial waters east of Kosong of DPRK at around 16:00 yesterday, the local press reported today.

The U.S. conducted such spy flights 15 times in June, the report said.

This shows that the United States has no intention of easing tension on the Korean peninsula.

NAKASONE CLAIMS LANDSLIDE ELECTION VICTORY

OW070756 Beijing XINHUA in English 0746 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, July 7 (XINHUA) -- Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) claimed a landslide parliamentary majority, its largest in 26 years, in Japan's elections Sunday. The victory practically assured Nakasone of a third term in office.

The national television station NHK reported the LDP, which has held power since 1955, won 300 seats in the 512-member House of Representatives, or the lower house, with seven seats yet to decided. That margin reflects a 51-seat gain over its current strength and will surpass the 296-seat majority the LDP won in the November 1960 elections.

There had been little doubt about a victory for the LDP in the House of Councillors, or upper house, where half of the 252 seats were put on the ballot. This was only the second twin parliamentary election in post-war Japan.

The overwhelming win is crucial to whether Nakasone will try to remain in office beyond October, when he is required by the party to retire as LDP president. The LDP president's job carries with it the prime minister's position because of the party's parliamentary majority.

The biggest loser in the election was the Japan Socialist Party, winning only 82 seats.

Final official returns won't be announced until Tuesday. An estimated 61 million of Japan's 86 million eligible voters cast ballots on Sunday.

TIAN JIYUN MEETS JAPANESE BUSINESS EXECUTIVE

OW031100 Beijing XINHUA in English 1042 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Tian Jiyun today called for expanding Sino-Japanese economic and technological cooperation. "It is high time now for China and Japan to explore new channels of cooperation in the economic and technological fields," said Tian at a meeting here with Yotaro Iida, president of Japan's Mitsubishi Heavy Industries Ltd. and vice-president of the Japan-Asia Exchange Association, and his party.

Japan is superior in terms of technology, capital, and technical equipment, the vice-premier said, while China with its rich natural resources, labor force and huge market, has its own advantages. These advantages combined would offer great potentials for cooperation between the two countries, he said.

The vice-premier spoke highly of Iida's dedication to Sino-Japanese friendship and economic cooperation.

Iida said his company wishes to expand cooperation with China in the field of power-generating equipment and other areas and is ready to offer any help that China needs in its modernization drive.

BANK OFFICIAL ON SUPPORTING HONG KONG'S INDUSTRY

HK021346 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 1104 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Article by Lin Guangzhao, deputy director of Hong Kong and Macao Management Office of the Bank of China: "Promote Industrial Development and Hong Kong's Economic Prosperity"]

[Text] Hong Kong, 30 Jun (XINHUA) — Since Hong Kong's industry recovered, from the late fifties onward, it has occupied an increasingly important position in the development of Hong Kong's economy. At present industry has become the foundation of Hong Kong's diversifed economic structure. It has provided Hong Kong inhabitants with ample employment opportunities and it is a customer of tertiary industry. Meanwhile, it is also the main source of Hong Kong's wealth. In the development of Hong Kong's economy toward diversification and internationalization, industry has played an extremely important role. The rise or fall of industry is also a decisive factor determining whether Hong Kong can continue to maintain its economic prosperity.

A comprehensive analysis of Hong Kong's recent industrial situation shows that while industry has developed in a sustained and steady manner, it is confronted with the following hidden troubles: First, textiles and garments, Hong Kong's leading industry, are now being threatened by the increasing trade protectionism in the United States; second, Hong Kong's industry will have to bear greater pressure from competition in the international market because its production costs are relatively higher than those of neighboring areas; third, medium-term investment in Hong Kong's industry is now at a standstill due to the influence of unstable economic factors in Western markets.

These hidden troubles are the questions that deserve attention in the short and medium term development of Hong Kong's industry. They are also crucial matters related to Hong Kong's economic prosperity in the future.

In order to remove the above obstacles and promote the development of industry in light of Hong Kong's actual circumstances, it is necessary to first rely on the unremitting efforts of industrial circles. Meanwhile, the support of the Hong Kong Government and the cooperation of various circles are also indispensable.

Industrial Circles Should Make Greater Efforts

A review of history shows that the development of Hong Kong's industry has never been smooth. With the efforts made by industrial circles, Hong Kong has made improvements in both advanced equipment and application of advanced techniques and technologies. Along with the trend of market development, Hong Kong's product mix and trade structure are also being diversified. Apart from acquiring great prestige in the international market, the export of many Hong Kong products also ranks first compared with similar products of other countries.

Hence, the key to achieving greater progress in Hong Kong's industry still lies in the unremitting efforts of industrial circles. Confronted with the new challenges, Hong Kong's industrial circles should work unremittingly and make greater efforts in the following aspects:

First, continue to maintain and further develop the strong points of Hong Kong's industry. Hong Kong's industry has expanded amid long-term competition in the international market. With the arduous efforts made by the industrial circles, an industrial system and operational methods suited to Hong Kong's environment and competition in the international market have taken shape. In addition, Hong Kong has acquired the strong points of the adaptability of its industry and the relatively high technological level of its workers. In the days to come, these strong points must be maintained and brought into full play.

Second, on the basis of the existing industrial structure, it is necessary to diversify and improve the quality of products so as to consolidate Hong Kong's traditional export markets and open up new export markets.

Third, it is necessary to strengthen cooperation with foreign and Chinese industries and to open up new industrial fields. Foreign investment in Hong Kong, which is tending to increase, will inevitably promote the development of Hong Kong's industry. Regarding cooperation with China's industry, Hong Kong's industrial circles should, in connection with its high levels of production and management, have quick access to market information, and other strong points, make the most of China's solid industrial foundation, manpower, land, abundant natural resources, and other strong points, strengthen multilateral cooperation, help supply each other's needs, and jointly exploit new industrial fields.

Fourth, it is necessary to increase medium- and long-term investment in industry with foresight. In order to maintain the competitiveness of Hong Kong's industry, Hong Kong should diversify and improve the quality of its products. In order to exploit new industrial fields, Hong Kong's industrial circles should meet the new needs of industrial science and technology and market development, and increase investment in equipment and technology. We must never be discouraged because of the effect of cycles and intermittent protectionism of the Western economy or worry about Hong Kong's future. Practice over the years has proved that Hong Kong's industry has actually expanded amid the storms and waves, and the rise and fall of the Western economy, and that Hong Kong's industrialists can overcome all kinds of difficulties with their indomitable spirit and adaptability. Looking ahead, the future of Hong Kong is bright. Both the Chinese and British Governments have been responsible and serious in implementing the "Joint Declaration." With the joint efforts of the Chinese and British Governments, Hong Kong inhabitants' travel documents, Hong Kong's membership in the GATT, and the question of land have all been appropriately solved, thus creating favorable conditions for the further development of Hong Kong's. industry. In the days to come, the problems concerning Hong Kong's economy will also be appropriately solved one by one. As a result, there is no reason whatsoever for industrial circles to be anxious. They should seize the investment opportunity and lay a solid foundation for their own undertakings as well as Hong Kong's prosperity and stability in the future.

The Hong Kong Government Should Take Vigorous Measures To Support and Promote Hong Kong's Industry

Government support is a vital factor for industrial development. Although the Hong Kong Government has pursued an "active non-interference" economic policy for a long time, it has given indirect support in policies and basic facilities to industrial development as a whole, in exploiting overseas markets, and in encouraging foreign investment.

As a matter of fact, the Hong Kong Government has done a great deal of work over the years in basic facilities, exploiting land for industrial use, industrial education, and pre-employment training. The functional role of the government organs, including the Industry Department and the Trade Department, and of the Hong Kong Productivity Council and Trade Development Council in supporting industry and promoting trade has increased with each passing day. In view of the important position of industrial development in Hong Kong's economy as a whole, we hope that the Hong Kong Government will make greater efforts to support and promote the development of industry, thus creating a fine environment favorable to foreign and local investment in industry.

Industrial, Commercial, and Other Circles Should Cooperate Closely With Each Other

Industry, as the foundation of Hong Kong's diversified economic structure, and other trades are interrelated. Therefore, industrial, commercial, and other circles should help and coordinate with each other and make concerted efforts to maintain Hong Kong's economic prosperity.

Financial circles should be concerned with the development of industry and provide industrial circles with better services. Although the banks' financial support to industry has increased annually, the growth rate is still limited. By the end of 1985, bank loans to the manufacturing industry accounted for only 8.3 pecent of the total loans granted. There are many reasons for the low growth rate of loans granted to industry, of which scattered trades, drastic changes in a large number of small factories, and loose management of small enterprises are the problems the banks frequently encounter when granting credit. For this reason, it is absolutely necessary for the banks and industrial circles to enhance mutual understanding.

The Bank of China group has always given vigorous financial support to Hong Kong's industrial enterprises. In 1983, the Bank of China group drafted a plan on further increasing loans to Hong Kong's industry. The focus of the plan was: First, expand business in import and export bills and installment credit for factory building and equipment purchases so as to help manufacturers start undertakings replace equipment, import advanced technology, and accelerate business operation. Second, provide medium and small factories with various credit services, including discounted bills, granting of loans, and promptly offering circulating funds for their operation. The interest rates for industrial loans were preferential and lower than ordinary loans, and the repayment period could be extended to over 20 years. In addition, the procedures for industrial loans were also simplified. The Bank of China group's plan for increasing industrial loans has been well-received by local manufacturers. Over the past 3 years, industrial loans granted by the Bank of China group have increased at an annual average rate in the double digits. In the years to come, the Bank of China group will continue to keep abreast of Hong Kong's industrial development, provide industrial circles with better banking services, and make contributions to Hong Kong's prosperity and stability.

AFGHAN DIPLOMAT SAID TO SEEK ASYLUM IN FRG

[Test] Islamabad, July 4 (XINHUA) — Acting Afghan Consul-General in Karachi Baz Mohammad Rehyab [spelling of name as received] has left the city with his family to seek asylum in Federal Germany, the PAKISTAN TIMES reported today. The paper quoted a foreign office spokesman as saying that investigations have shown that Rehyab left Karachi "voluntarily" for Frankfurt by the German airline Lufthansa flight-663 on June 26.

Rehyab and his family were founded disappeared on June 24. Before his disappearance, Rehyab was busy selling his furniture in Karachi. The paper also quoted diplomatic sources here as saying that the facts of the case have clearly established the absurdity of the allegations made by an Afghan diplomat in Karachi that Rehyab had been kidnapped and was being held in drugged condition in Karachi.

The sources said he had received an order in May recalling him back to Kabul and he feared that his life would be in danger if he returns. Rehyab was posted in Karachi last year. The sources held that his defection showed the lack of support for the Kabul regime.

AFGHAN RESISTANCE REPELS SOVIET-KABUL ATTACK

[Text] Islamabad, July 5 (XINHUA) -- The Afghan Mujahideen (freedom fighters) have repulsed an attack by Soviet-Kabul troops in the eastern Afghan province of Paktia, Mujahideen sources said today.

The sources said that the Soviet-Kabul troops attacked the positions of the Muslim guerrillas around Khost area for four consecutive days starting June 27. During the fighting, two military vehicles of the attacking force were blown up by mines, and 16 Kabul soldiers joined the guerrillas.

The AGENCY AFGHAN PRESS (AAP) reported today that in the southeastern Afghan province of Zabul, a group of resistance fighters attacked with rockets a Soviet-Kabul military convoy on June 24, killing or wounding 20 Soviet-Kabul troops. During the fighting, the guerrillas also destroyed a helicopter and damaged another, the AAP said. In Ghazni Province, north of Zabul, the guerrillas raided a security post at the Ghazni airport on June 22, during which four Soviet troops were killed and an officer was captured, said the AAP.

The AAP also said that in an operation in the southern province of Helmand, the guerrillas destroyed a military camp on June 19, killing or wounding some 50 Soviet-Kabul troops. Equipped with rockets and light guns, the guerrillas stormed the camp near Nawa town on the night of June 18 and continued the operation till the next morning, during which three Soviet tanks were destroyed. On the resistance side, however, 17 members were killed during the operation, according to AAP.

In the northeastern province of Badakhshan bordering the Soviet Union, the guerrillas destroyed with rocket fire a Soviet motorboat in Amu River on June 14, killing seven Soviet troops. The next day, the AAP added, Soviet planes bombed the rural localities in the area, killing several civilians.

PORTUGUESE HERITAGE IN MACAO TO BE PRESERVED

AU021955 Paris AFP in English 1945 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Lisbon, July 2 (AFP) -- The future of Macao's Protuguese heritage is assured, the territory's governor said Wednesday, outlining progress in talks to transfer Macao to Chinese control.

Joaquim Pinto Machado, in Lisbon to brief President Mario Soares after the first two-day session in Beijing on transfer negotiations, said: "The Chinese authorities have declared in the clearest manner their intention to acknowledge and preserve the Portuguese heritage" in Macao. He said in the second round of talks, the two sides would touch on the practicalities of that intention.

insisting that Portugal did not want to turn Macao into a museum, Mr Pinto Machado said the Portuguese Government had shown its willingness to overcome the hurdles, particularly in the fields of culture and education. The "clear desire for cooperation shown by all those concerned with the future of Macao" boded well for the rest of the talks, he said.

Both Lisbon and Beijing regard Macao as being Chinese territory currently under Portuguese administration. There is no deadline for an administrative handover.

EC COMMISSION PRESIDENT DELORS CONTINUES VISIT

Discussions with Li Peng

OW021210 Beijing XINHUA in English 1146 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Li Peng listed three ways of furthering economic relations between China and Western Europe at a meeting here today with Jacques Delors, president of the European Community Commission.

First, Western Europe imports more Chinese products. Second, Western European industiral countries provide loans on favorable terms to China. Third, Western European industrialists come to China to set up enterprises run independently or jointly.

The Chinese vice-premier said that providing loans on favorable terms is beneficial to both China and Western Europe, and China handles loans with great care and always takes into account her ability to repay.

China, in turn, will provide more favorable conditions to joint-venture companies in China and guarantee a reasonable profit of foreign investors. China can offer competitive labor prices, land prices and raw materials, Li said.

Li expressed his conviction that economic, trade, and technical cooperation between China, Western Europe, and the European Community would make bigger progress.

Delors, a financial expert, gave his analysis on oil prices and the economic situation f the European Community.

During the two-and-half hour meeting, Delors also asked Li Peng's impression of his recent visit to four European countries in the company of Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang.

Li said that he was most impressed with the importance Western Europe attaches to developing relations with China. China also places great importance on its relationship with Western Europe. The European Community is a strong economic and political entity whose unity will play an important role in safeguarding world peace, Li said.

Talks With Song Jian

[Text] Beijing, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Song Jian, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Science and Technology Commission, met here tonight Jacques Delors, president of the commission of the European Community (EC), Mrs Delors and their party.

Song said that China and the EC have maintained fruitful scientific and technological cooperation for six years. Such cooperation has served as a bridge between China and the EC in their economic cooperation.

Both Song and Delors expressed the wish to develop cooperation between China and the EC in the areas of nuclear energy, petroleum, coal and bio-enginering.

Song hosted a dinner for Delors and his party after the meeting.

Delors and his party toured Great Wall and the Ming tombs this afternoon.

Meets Zheng Tuobin

Deng Xiaoping Meets, Stresses Peace

[Texxt] Beijing, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Senior leader Deng Xiaoping said today China and Europe "share common views in many fields" -- especially the need for peace -- and "have no conflict of interests."

Deng, chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Advisory Commisson, spoke at a meeting here with Jacques Delors, president of the European Community's Executive Commission. "China and Europe both want peace," he said "They safeguard peace and prevent war."

According to Deng, this common interest in peace is the "basis for developing political and economic relations between China and Europe," for which there are "broad prospects." Deng said China views Europe -- including Eastern Europe -- as a force for peace.

Deng said prospects for peace will be enhanced by a "united and powerful" Europe that pursues an "independent foreign policy." Deng recalled that Europe has experienced two world wars and as a result is particularly sensitive to the danger of a third world war. In that, he said, Europe was like China, which he said seeks a long period of international peace to develop itself.

Since China is on the side of peace, "Every step China takes to develop itself scores another point for the security of the world," said Deng. "Only if the developing countries continue to progress can peace be guaranteed."

Delors said he hoped relations between the European Community and China will become a "model of equality and effective cooperation" between developed and developing countries. Delors said Europe supported China's development, adding that "Europe has watched China's progress closely and with sympathy." He said the 12 nations of the European Community are determined to join together.

FRG'S KOHL CALLS FOR SUPERPOWER DISARMAMENT PACT

[Text] Bonn, July 2 (XINHUA) -- Federal German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said an agreement to reduce conventional weapons and medium-range missiles between the twc superpowers -- the United States and Soviet Union -- is of utmost concern to his country.

In a televised speech tonight, Kohl said the disarmament proposals advanced recently by the Soviet Union as "positive" and "worth attention." He said the superpowers are "on the move" and he is hopeful that a second U.S.-Soviet summit will be held in Washington this fall or early winter.

Kohl said he believes the United States and the Soviet Union eventually reach an agreement on chemical weapons. But, he stated that Germans deem it urgent to have an accord on cutting back conventional arms and medium-range missiles.

LIAOWANG ON HU YAOBANG'S VISIT TO WESTERN EUROPE

HK021259 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 26, 30 Jun 86 p 30

["Special dispatch from Rome" by Yang Yuanhua": "A New Chapter of Friendship and Cooperation Between China and Western Europe"]

[Text] From 9 to 23 June, General Secretarey Hu Yaobang paid a 15-day official visit to Britain, the FRG, France, and Italy. It was a short but highly successful visit.

The visit shows that China attaches great importance to maintaining and developing long-term and stable cooperation with West European countries. It has completely achieved the desired objective of "increasing understanding, strengthening friendship, expanding cooperation, and safeguard peace," thus adding a new chapter of friendship and cooperation to relations between China and Western Europe. West European sources said that the first visit to Western Europe by the General Secretary of the CPC was "an event of historic significance" and that its significance goes beyond the scope of Western Europe.

They also said that the visit not only involved current friendship and cooperation but also set its sights on the future by passing the torch of friendship and cooperation from one generation to another and making a positive contribution to safeguarding world peace and common development.

Situated on either end of the Eurasian Continent, West European countries and China are Occidental and Oriental countries with ancient civilizations. More than 1,800 hundred years ago, West European countries had friendly exchanges with China. The present visit has enabled Chinese leaders to learn on the spot the splendid civilizations created by the European people in the past, to see their tremendous achievements in modern culture, science, and technology, and to appreciate the profound friendship for the Chinese people cherished by the West European people.

When General Secretary Hu stepped on the soil of each of the four West European countries, he received a grand welcome. Wherever he went, he was enthusiastically welcomed by people from all walks of life and the masses. During his visit, General Secretary Hu and his party held cordial and friendly talks with the leaders of the four governments and the leaders of the Italian, French, and British Communist Parties, as well as with the leaders of the opposition parties and entrepreneurs in the four countries on the two most fundamental issues in the contemporary world -- peace and development -- and on the development of bilateral relations. Although separated from one another by a long distance and although our cultures, languages, and habits are different, both parties can make energetic efforts to relax international tension and to promote common development on the basis of mutual trust and cooperation.

Europe is the cradle of the modern industrial revolution. It has made major contributions to human civilization and remains one of the most developed areas in the world in the fields of economics, culture, and science today. However, Europe was unfortunately the source of two world wars, in which the people suffered great calamities. Today it is still an area fraught with worldwide conflicts. This dual historical feature has placed Europe in an especially important position in contemporary international affairs and in the question of peace and development, which is vital to the destiny and future of mankind.

Western Europe has experienced many vicissitudes, but is now in its prime, growing and flourishing. This shows that the industrious and intelligent West European people have not only a glorious history but also a splendid future. The West European countries and peoples long for peace. They do not want to let the frightful disasters of war repeat themselves in Europe. They want to develop the economy and to bring about prosperity. The people of Western Europe do not want to let others decide their survival or fate. They want to unite to deal with the challenges facing them. This alliance is in the interests of the people of Western Europe and is conducive to world peace and stability. During this visit, General Secretary Hu and his party supported European alliance and hoped to see the Western European alliance become powerful. Western Europe also hopes to see China become prosperous and powerful. Both sides hope they will get along well with each other and engage in close cooperation from one generation to another.

During his visit, Hu Yaobang delivered an important speech entitled "A Key to Understanding the Future Trends of China" and a speech entitled "China Seeks To Develop Long-term Economic Cooperation With Europe." At his meeting with the cadres of the Italian Communist Party, he also delivered an important speech on principles for dealing with the relationship between one party and another.

On numerous occasions, he delivered speeches on strengthening friendship and cooperation between China and Western Europe and on the question of peace and development. These speeches were highly appraised by people in the West European political and economic circles. After listening to General Secretary Hu Yaobang's speeches, they said that China's independent foreign policy of peace and its optimistic views on the world's future have "strengthened their confidence" and that the fact that China adheres to its long-term policy of opening up has made them "feel more at ease."

Both China and European countries oppose the arms race between the superpowers and stand for independence. In dealing with the relationships between countries and between political parties and groups, they favor implementing the principles of independence, complete equality, mutual respect, and non-interference.

Some farsighted politicians in Western Europe have pointed out: The age of a polarized world has passed. World affairs should not be monopolized by one or two superpowers. It is necessary to approach from a long-term point of view the question of common development and of strengthening cooperative relationships.

Both the governing and opposition parties held identical views on the question of strengthening friendship and cooperation with China. They attached great importance to and showed concern about China's policy of invigorating the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world. They spoke highly of this policy, saying that it is "good news" and is conducive to the stability and development of the world.

General Secretary Hu said: China, which pursues an independent foreign policy of peace, and Europe, which wants to be master of its own destiny and to strengthen alliance, will certainly be able to make increasingly greater contributions to world peace and stability.

On the question of common development, from a long-term point of view and from the angle of safeguarding world stability and promoting common development, China favors helping Third World countries to develop their economies. It holds that, out of their own interests, the developed countries should also discharge their duty in this field and make more active contributions. People in the West European political and economic circles expressed their approval of and support for these views.

In recent years, gratifying progress has been made in the fields of politics, economies, trade, and technological cooperation between China and West European countries. Both sides expressed their satisfaction over this. The Chinese side hopes that West European countries will reduce China's trade deficits and promote the exports of Western Europe by expanding their imports so that the economic and trade relationship of cooperation between both sides will develop more smoothly and in a more coordinated manner. These views also received the approval of people in economic circles.

General Secretary Hu's visit to the four West European states was highly successful. We firmly believe that in the coming years the friendship and cooperation between China and Western Europe will develop steadily and more closely, thus making a greater contribution to world peace and stability and to common development.

Zhao, Romanian Premier at Banquet

[By reporters Ying Qian and Xie Guohua]

[Text] Bucharest, 2 Jul (XINHUA) — Constantin Dascalescu, member of the Political Executive Committee of the Romanian Communist Party [RCP] Central Committee and prime minister of the Romanian Government, held a grand banquet in Bucharest this evening to warmly welcome Zhao Ziyang, member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and premier of the PRC State Council.

Premier Zhao arrived here this afternoon on a special plane to begin his 5-day official friendly visit.

Prime Minister Dascalescu and Premier Zhao Ziyang delivered ebullient speeches at the banquet, lauding the close friendship, militant unity, and the peoples of the two countries.

In his speech, Prime Minister Dascalescu extended a warm welcome to Premier Zhao. he said: "This visit marks an important moment in the close friendship, militant unity, and all-round cooperation between the parties, the governments, and the peoples of the two countries."

Dascalescu expressed the conviction that Premier Zhao's current visit, his upcoming meeting with Comrade Ceausescu, as well as the understanding to be reached between the premiers of the two countries "will certainly bring about new developments in Romanian-Chinese relations. This conforms to the mutual interests of the friendly peoples of the two countries, and to the interest of socialism as well as world peace and understanding."

Dascalescu said: When Comrades Nicolae Ceausescu and Elena Ceausescu visited China in October 1985, Romania and China reached important agreements on expanding and intensifying the overall relations from 1986 to 1990. "In accordance with these agreements, we have developed mutually beneficial economic, scientific, and technical cooperation, and have made resolute effors to expand cooperation in production so that the PRC will become a major partner in Romania's economic relations with foreign countries." He said: The Romanian and the Chinese Governments have great responsibilities for promoting the understanding reached at the summit meeting.

Dascalescu said: The Romanian people pay attention to the great Chinese people's outstanding achievements in economic construction, scientific and cultural development, as well as their efforts to achieve all-round socialist modernization for the whole nation. They are very happy about this and extend their warm congratulations. He wished the Chinese people new and greater achievements in implementing the CPC policy concerning the development of the nation along the socialist path.

Dascalescu said: At present the Romanian people closely rally around the RCP and its General Secretary Comrade Ceausescu, and go all out to persistently implement the historic resolutions of the 13th RCP Congress and stipulations in the 8th 5-Year Plan. The fulfillment of these resolutions and stipulations is a guarantee that Romania will enter a higher level of economic development.

Dascalescu emphatically pointed out: Romania and China have identical or very similar stands toward major international issues at present. This is a firm foundation on which to continue to strengthen and develop international cooperation between the two countries. He reiterated Romania's consistent stand of stopping the arms race, preventing world war, and safeguarding peace. He emphasized: "Romania and Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu resolutely strive to realize disarmament, nuclear disarmament in particular, as soon as possible, and to achieve a comprehensive disarmament program for thoroughly eliminating nuclear and chemical weapons by the year 2000. Romania holds that the realization of disarmament should have the participation of all countries and have corresponding international supervision."

In his speech Zhao Ziyang thanked Comrades Ceausescu and Dascalescu for their warm invitation and hospitality. He said: "Today I am very happy to bring with me the cordial regards and the best wishes from the 1 billion Chinese people, and visit our old friend, the fraternal Romanian People." He said: "In Romania I will have the opportunity to witness the important achievements scored by the Romanian people under the leadership of the RCP headed by Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu in building socialism through self-reliance, as well as the achievement in all aspects of economic and social development." He said: "The Chinese and the Romanian peoples are intimate comrades in arms. Each and every achievement scored by the Romanian people gives us delight and encouragement. We sincerely hope that socialist Romania will become more prosperous and stronger. This conforms to the interests of the Romanian people and is favorable to peace and the socialist cause."

Zhao Ziyang said: Under the CPC leadership, the Chinese people are working hard to achieve socialist modernization of the motherland. "Through its efforts in recent years, China has made all-round and steady economic progress, and has raised the people's living standards. In the next few decades, through the continuous efforts of generations to come, we plan to make China approach the level of the developed countries."

Zhao Ziyang reiterated that China pursues an independent and peaceful foreign policy. China is opposed to and will never take part in arms race. China resolutely opposes all forms of hegemonism and will not seek hegemony itself. He emphatically pointed out: "Both China and Romania are engaging in national construction. They need a long period of peaceful international environment." "China is willing to join Romania and all peace-loving countries and peoples in safeguarding world peace." He said: "The arms race and hegemonism constitute a threat to world peace and security of all countries and imply the danger of war." He was convinced that with the united efforts of the people of the whole world, war can be prevented, and world peace can be safeguarded.

Zhao Ziyang said: "Traditional friendship and cooperative relations exist between the parties, governments, and peoples of China and Romania." "The Chinese people treasure the profound friendship with the Romanian people built over a long period of time. It is a firm policy of the Chinese party and Government to develop long-term, all-round and stable friendship and cooperative relations with Romania." He believed that Sino-Romanian friendship and cooperative relations will constantly develop.

After the speeches by the two premiers, the hosts and the guests toasted the health of the party and state leaders of the two countries and the constant development and consolidation of friendship, unity, and cooperation between the parties, governments, and peoples of the two countries.

Today's banquet was held at the Victory Hall. A cordial and friendly atmosphere permeated the banquet from beginning to end.

Attending the banquet were Ion Dinca and Gheorghe Oprea, first deputy prime miniters of the Romanian Government; Nicolae Constantin and Ludovic Fazekas, deputy prime minisers; Alexandru Necula, minister of electric machinery and electronics industry; Traian Pop, vice minister of foreign affairs; Paula Prioteasa, vice minister of foreign trade and international economic cooperation; Lucian Dragut, secretary general of the Council of Ministers; Lucian Dragut, secretary general of the Council of Ministers; and Angelo Miculescu, Romanian ambassador to China.

Also attending the banquet were major members of Premier Zhao Ziyang's entourage in the visit to Romania, Lu Dong, minister in charge of the State Economic Commisson: Qian Qichen, vice minister of foreign affairs; Wang Pinqing, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Bao Tong, vice minister in charge of the State Commission for Restructuring Economic System; and Yu Hongliang, Chinese ambassador to Romania.

Meets With Ceausescu

[Text] Bucharest, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Nicolae Casusescu, general secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and president of the Socialist Republic of Romania, met with visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang this morning.

Zhao, also member of the Standing Committee of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee Political Bureau, and his Romanian host exchanged views on bilateral relations and international issues.

Zhao conveyed the best regards to Ceausescu from senior Chinese party and government leaders Hu Yaobang, Deng xiaoping and Li Xiannian, while President Ceausescu wished them good health and greater successes in leading the Chinese People in their socialist construction, according to Chinese sources.

Zhao told Ceausescu that Chinese party and government leaders are expecting him and his wife Elena Ceausescu to visit China again. Ceausescu replied, "It's time for comrades Hu Yaobang and Li Xiannian to revisit Romania." "As comrade Deng Xiaoping said he would no longer go abroad, I will not compel him to come," he smiled.

This is Zhao's first official visit to Romania as Chinese premier. He came to the country as a member of a Chinese delegation several years ago when he was party secretary of Sichuan Province. The Chinese premier arrived here yesterday afternoon on an offical good-will visit.

After the meeting, Ceausescu and Zhao receded to official talks. Romania is the first stop of Zhao's current tour, which also will take him to Yugoslavia, Greece, Spain, Turkey and Tunisia.

Pays Tribute to Romanian Heroes

[By reporter Xie Guohua]

[Text] Bucharest, 4 July (XINHUA) -- At a little past 0800 today, visiting Premier Zhao Ziyang of the State Council of China braved a fine drizzle at Liberty Park located in the center of Bucharest to respectfully lay a floral wreath at the "Monument to the Heroes of the Struggle for the Liberty of the People and of the Motherland and for Socialism."

The wreath was made of red carnations and green cypress branches. Its red ribbon carried the following inscription: "Eternal glory to the heroes who laid down their lives for the liberty of the people of Romania and the independence of their motherland and for the cause of socialism!"

Accompanied by Ion Dinka, first deputy prime minister; (T. Bopu), vice minister of foreign affairs; and others of the Government of Romania, Premier Zhao presented the wreath and paid silent tribute to the monument amid the strains of solemn music.

Premier Zhao and those in attendance also visited the tombs of G. Gheorghiu-Dej, Groza, and Parhon, the late party and state leaders of Romania. This was then followed by a ride to Fetesti, which is known as the center of automobile industry, for a visit.

Visits Farm 3 July

[Text] Bucharest, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Following three hours of talks with Romanian Leader Nicolae Ceausescu, visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang came to the suburbs of Bucharest as guest of a state farm this afternoon.

This is the second day of the premier's visit to the Socialist Republic of Romania.

The farm, "December 30", named after the Republic Day of the Socialist Republic of Romania, is a principal supplier of milk, meat, fruits, vegetables, poultry and eggs and other farm and side-line produce to the Romanian capital. As the premier and his party arrived at the farm in the southern suburbs of Bucharest, the farm's cadres turned out in full force to give the Chinese guests a warm welcome.

Technical director of the farm Palincaqi Teodor gave the guests a detailed account of the production, management and life of the farm. He told them that the farm has 17 sub-farms with 3,200 hectares of land and 2,500 workers. It not only produces farm and side-line products but also does processing. Apart from meeting the needs of the capital, it exports part of the products to a number of countries in Europe.

Premier Zhao showed keen interest in the management of the farm. When told that each sub-farm practises self-financing and the farm workers do not "eat from the same big pot", the premier smiled with satisfaction. At the pig farm, the premier asked about its cost and accounting. When he was told that it was very profitable and the economic results were good, the premier praised the farm workers for their contributions to Romania's socialist construction.

Meets With Dascalescu 3 July

[By reporters Ying Qian and Zheng Jian]

[Text] Bucharest, 2 Jul (XINHUA) — Zhao Ziyang, member of the Standing Committee of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau and premier of the State Council, held official talks in the "Victory Building" here this evening with Constantin Dascalescu, member of the Political Executive Committee of the Romanian Communist Party Central Committee and prime minister of the Romanian Government. They briefed each other on the socialist construction of their respective countries and the policies adopted to develop their economies, studied the current state and future prospects of the development of their bilateral relations of friendship and cooperation, and exchanged views on international issues of mutual concern.

Ma Yuzhen, director of the Information Department of the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs, told these reporters that the talks were held in a cordial and friendly atmosphere and lasted 2 hours and 20 minutes.

During the talks, the two premiers reviewed with satisfaction the smooth growth of the friendly and cooperative relations between the two countries since the visit of Romanian President Ceausescu to China last October. They also carried out detailed discussions on ways and means to further promote the cooperation between the two countries in the fields of economy and trade, as well as science and technology and made some positive proposals in this regard.

Dascalescu stressed that the Romanian party and government and President Ceausescu attaches great importance to Sino-Romanian relations and values highly the continuous development of the friendship and cooperation between the two countries. The Romanian Government, he said, will make determined efforts to fulfill the tasks and attain the goals set by the leaders of the two countries last October for developing their economic cooperation during 1986-90.

Zhao Ziyang stressed in the talks that the friendly relations between the two parties and the two countries of China and Romania are certainly not ordinary, and that such relations, because of their firm foundation, are bound to develop in a protracted, steady, and comprehensive way. Zhao Ziyang pointed out: Sino-Romanian economic ties are a major component part of the comprehensive friendly and cooperative relations between the two countries. The Chinese party and government have always attached great importance and paid earnest attention to the development of economic relations with Romania. China will take a positive attitude and adopt all necessary measures to implement in all seriousness the agreements signed by the two countries.

The two premiers noted with satisfaction the fact that China and Romania are identical or close to each other in their stands toward the major issues facing the world today.

Dascalescu said: Romania is pursuing a peaceful policy. It is opposed to arms race, stands for disarmament, and demands the establishment of a new international economic order. Romania also assesses highly China's immense role in the struggle to safeguard world peace. The effective cooperation between Romania and China in the international arena will surely make a positive contribution to safeguarding world peace.

Touching on international issues, Zhao Ziyang said: China and Romania are identical or similar in their assessment of the international situation and in their stands toward major international questions. In the past few years, they have made new progress in their cooperation in the international arena and in international affairs. China values highly the positive role played by Romania in the international arena and heartily hopes that Romania will make still greater contributions to the settlement of major contemporary international issues.

Attending the talks on the Chinese side were Lu Dong, minister in charge of the State Economic Commission; Qian Qichen, vice minister of foreign affairs; Wang Pinqing, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Bao Tong, vice minister of the State Commission for Restructuring the Economic System; and Yu Hongliang, Chinese ambassador to Romania.

Attending the talks on the Romanian side were Ion Dinca, first deputy premier minister; Alexandru Necula, minister of electrotechnical industry; Traian Pop, deputy minister of foreign affairs; Paula Prioteasa, deputy minister of foreign trade and international economic cooperation; Lucian Dragut, secretary-general of the Council of Ministers; and Angelo Miculescu, Romanian ambassador to China.

The talks were followed by a grand banquet hosted by Dascalescu in honor of Zhao Ziyang and his entourage.

Zhao, Ceausescu Continue Talks

OW051434 Beijing XINHUA in English 1422 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Text] Bucharest, July 5 (XINHUA) -- Romania Leader Nicolae Ceausescu and visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang this morning held their second round of talks, centering mainly on bilateral relations, trade and economic matters in particular.

The talks were held in a house of the lakeside of Anagov in the northern suburbs of the capital city right after the Chinese premier flew back from a tour of Craiova some 250 milometers west of Bucharest.

A Chinese Foreign Ministry official told the press after the talks that in an in-depth exchange of views, the Chinese premier reiterated the firm policy of the Chinese Communist Party and Government to develop and strengthen cooperation with Romania in the economic, trade and technological fields.

The recent years have witnessed a considerable growth in trade between the two countries. Under the three agreements signed during Ceaususcu's visit to Beijing last October, the total volume of trade turnover for 1986-90 will rise to 14 billion Swiss Francs.

Zhao said the primary task for the two countries at present is to make joint efforts to fulfill this goal in bilateral trade.

Ceausescu pointed out that the potential for expanding economic, trade and technological cooperation is very great and the important thing to do is to improve the quality of products. He called for the establishment of direct links between enterprises of the two countries.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry official said the two leaders are satisfied with what he called the excellent relations between their two countries in various fields. They were also said to have studied some specific measures proposed for increased cooperation. They were seen walking on the lawn in front of the house, having a tete-a-tete for about ten minutes before their chief aides joined them in the official talks. At the end of talks, Ceausescu accompanied the Chinese premier on a boat trip on the picturesque lake. Then he invited the Chinese guest to a luncheon.

Zhao, who arrived in Romania on July 2 for a five-day official visit, held his first round of talks with Ceausescu last Thursday.

Tours Dolj Area Plants

OW050020 Beijing XINHUA in English 2358 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text[Craiova, July 4 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today was taken to see some of Romania's outstanding achievements in economic development through a tour of Dolj County, some 100 kilometers west of Bucharest.

Impressive to the Chinese leader is the success of the Isalnita glasshouse, a 204-hectare farm in the suburbs of Craiova, the county seat, which grows vegetables and fruits, mostly for export to other European countries. He showed keen interest in the management of the farm while walking some distance in the cucumber and tomato fields. When told that by using the heat discharged from a power plant not far away for vegetable growing all the year round the farm is able to save half the energy cost, the premier said, "what we have seen here today is inspiring indeed. After returning home, we should also study how to make good use of the unused heat from power plants." He asked the farm manager to pass on the experience and techniques to Chinese exports when they come here sometime in the near future.

He also visited the "Electroputere" plant in Craiova, Romania's largest manufacturer of electrical and diesel locomotives. China is one of the plant's customers. At the end of the visit, the premier said that he though it necessary to give an enterprise some freedom to decide on the use of foreign exchange it earns for the country through export of its products.

Communique Issued on Relations

[Text] Bucharest, July 6 (XINHUA) -- China and Romania today pledged determined efforts to strengthen their friendly and cooperative relations in all fields.

This was stated in a press communique issued here at the end of a five-day official goodwill visit by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang. During his stay in Romania, the Chinese premier, who is also member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met twice with Nicolae Ceausescu, general secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and president of the Socialist Republic of Romania, and held official talks with his Romanian counterpart Constantin Dascalescu.

The communique indicates that both parties are satisfied with the smooth development of the traditional ties of close friendship, cooperation and unity between the Chinese and Romanian parties, the two countries and peoples. This relationship is based on the principles of full respect for national independence and sovereignty, complete equality of rights, non-interference in each other's internal affairs and comradely assistance of mutual benefit, it points out.

On international affairs, which were the main topic in Zhao's talks with Ceausescu, the two countries shared "identical or very similar" views on major current world issues, says the communique.

Both China and Romania are concerned about the tension emerging in the international life, and agree that the continuation of arms expansion and the deployment of new-type nuclear weapons in Europe will increase the danger of a new world war.

The two leaders reaffirm that their countries will continue to work with the people of other countries for an end to the arms race immediately, to bring about universal disarmament, first of all, nuclear disarmament, and to get rid of the policy that allows violation of other countries' sovereignty, interference in their internal affairs and the use or threat of force against others, the communique notes.

They draw attention to the urgency of solving the debt and other economic problems facing the developing countries, eliminating underdevelopment and establishing a new international economic order based on full equality and fairness between states.

The communique stresses that China and Romania call for participation of small and medium-sized, non-aligned and developing countries in the international life and a bigger role by them in the settlement of major international issues. They hope that the summit of non-aligned countries to be held in Zimbabawe later this year will help reinforce their unity and their weight in the search for solutions to the complicated problems of the world.

The talks between the Chinese and Romanian premiers, the communique continues, centered on bilateral trade and economic issues. They asked the economic departments of both countries to tap potentials, study new ways and means for a stable increase in trade and economic cooperation on a long-term and mutually beneficial basis.

Premier Zhao, on behalf of the Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang and Chairman Li Xiannian and his own name, invited Ceausescu to visit China again. He also invited Premier Dascalescu to pay an official visit to Beijing. The communique says the invitations have been accepted with pleasure.

[Text] Belgrade, Jul;y 3 (XINHUA) -- Yugoslavia regards Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's upcoming visit as of particular significance, a Yugoslav Foreign Ministry Spokesman said today.

In an interview with the Yugoslav News Agency TANJUG, Spokesman Aleksandar Stanic said the Chinese Premier's visit, which begins July 6, is a continuation of the political dialogue at the highest-level between the two countries.

He added that during the visit, leaders of the two countries will exchange views on the major issues relating to the social and eocnomic development in their respective countries, and will explore new areas to promote bilateral economic cooperation.

In a complicated world situation where peace and security are threatened, the exchange of views between leaders of the two countries will be conducive to the maintenance of world peace, Stanic said.

HU YAOBANG MEETS ZAMBIAN PARTY DELEGATION

OW041400 Beijing XINHUA in English 1340 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 4 (XINHUA) — Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Communist Party of China (CPC), reiterated today China's unswerving support for the just struggle of the South African people for an end to the policy of radical discrimination. Hu said this at a meeting with a delegation from the Zambian United National Independence Party (ZUNIP), led by General Secretary A. G. Zulu, here this afternoon.

He said that the Chinese Government and people resolutely oppose the cruel racist rule of the South African authorities and their policy of racial discrimination.

To struggle against reactionary forces, Hu pointed out, it is best to have greater unity and as many sympathizers as possible because nothing can be accomplished with few friends.

Zulu thanked the CPC and the Chinese Government and people for their support for the national liberation movements in South Africa and Namibia. He said that the situation in South Africa is explosive and the South African authorities have failed in their attempt to control the situation.

Hu expressed satisfaction with the development of relations between the two countries. He said that the Chinese people are full of friendly feelings toward the Zambian people. "Our assistance to you is limited because what we have in mind is beyond our capability. But we'll do what we can," he added.

Zulu thanked China for its aid to Zambia and paid tribute to relations between the two countries. Hu hosted a dinner for the visitors after the meeting.

[Text] Beijing, July 5 (XINHUA) -- Bo Yibo, vice-chairman of the Central Advisory Commission of the Chinese Communist Party, met with Pedro Margolles Villanueva, director-general of the PRENSA LATINA from Cuba, and his party here this morning.

The PRENSA LATINA singed an agreement of cooperation with the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY in 1960. The purpose of Villaneuva's current visit to China is to resume and develop its agency's friendly relations and cooperate with XINHUA and to sign a new agreement on news exchange between the two news agencies.

U.S. REPLACES COMMANDER, AMBASSADOR TO HONDURAS

[Text] Managua, July 4 (XINHUA) -- The United States has decided to change the commanding officer of its troops stationed in Honduras, according to reports from Tegucigalpa.

The reports quoted Honduran official sources as saying today that Colonel William Comee, Commander of the U.S. troops in the country, has to leave his post although he has served for only one year as head of the U.S. military contingent in Honduras.

Meanwhile, the U.S. Government announced June 30 that it will replace Ambassador John Ferch in Honduras despite the fact that he had been in the post for less than a year.

News reports also speculated that Ferch was removed because Washington was unhappy with his performance and that the former Ambassador liked neither the Hondurans nor the Nicaraguan anti-government "contras", who have a military bases in Honduras. Observers here believe that Ferch will be replaced by a diplomat more skillfully in handingling military affairs so that Honduras can play a more active role in helping the United Staes in its fight against the Sandinista government of Nicragua.

CONTRAS KILL CIVILIANS; NICARAGUA BLAMES U.S.

[Text] Managua, July 4 (XINHUA) -- Groups of "contras" yesterday attacked an inter-city bus and a passenger boat, causing death to 33 people including 12 children. The Nicaraguan Defense Ministry, in a communique published here said the passenger bus was travelling along "the Cuabocay" route when it hit a mine placed by the "contras" about 180 kms to the north of Manauga.

The raid killed 32 civilians, including 12 children and 12 women, the communique said. On the same day, another group of "contras" attacked a passenger boat with machine-gun, rifle, and RPG-7 rocket fire when it was travelling between "the Rama" and "Blufields" on the Nicaraguan Atlantic coast. One person got killed and seven wouded as a result. According to an official source, the Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry was preparing a none of protest in which it blames the U.S. Government for the death of Nicaraguan civilians in the hands of "contras." The Reagan administration's request for 100 million dollars in additional aid to the Nicaraguan rebels was approved by Congress recently.

RENMINBI EXCHANGE RATE LOWERED BY 15.8 PERCENT

[Text] Beijing, July 5 (XINHUA) — Chen Muhua, state councillor and governor of the People's Bank of China, announced here today that the exchange rate for the Chinese currency (renminbi) vis a vis foreign currencies will drop by 15.8 percent as of today.

"That is to say, 100 U.S. dollars, which used to equal 320 yuan, are now worth 370.36 yuan," she explained. The corresponding and appropriate adjustment of the exchange rate of the renminbi to currencies of other countries is a necessary and normal business step, she asserted.

Chen made these remarks at a meeting with a delegation from the International Monetary Fund (IMF) — here for annual consultations at the invitation of the People's Bank — led by IMF Asian Department Director P. Narvekar, here this afternoon.

Along with the development of China's economic restructuring and its commodity economy, Chen said that China has made domestic price adjustments. It is quite normal to adjust the exchange rate in accordance with the changes in prices on the domestic as well as the international market, she said.

Chen added that to encourage exports and balance foreign income and outlay, it is necessary to make appropriate adjustments in the exchange rate.

Chen also said that the State Council recently decided to make the People's Bank of China the sole authority in charge of borrowing from foreign countries.

The 1986 consultation between China and the IMF is being held from June 23 to July 9.

QIAO SHI ADDRESSES LAWYERS' CONGRESS 5 JULY

OW060606 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1343 GMT 5 Jul 86

[By reporter Chen Yan]

[Text] Beijing, 5 Jul (XINHUA) -- The National Congress of Lawyers, the first of its kind in China since the founding of the People's Republic, opened at the Great Hall of the People in Beijing this morning. The congress marks a new stage of development of China's lawyer system.

Comrades Ulanhu, Xi Zhongxun, Yang Shangkun, Chen Pixian, Song Renqiong, Peng Chong, Rong Yiren, Zheng Tianxiang, Yang Yichen, Kang Keqing, Qian Changzhao and Wang Guangying attended the meeting to extend their greetings. Qiao Shi, member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, vice premier of the State council, and secretary of the Central Political and Legal Commission, extended his warm greetings throughout the country on behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council.

Qiao Shi said in his speech: Over the past few years, lawyers have been playing an increasingly greater role in upholding socialist democracy and the legal system; in promoting reform, opening to the outside world, and economic invigoration and construction; in protecting citizens' legal rights and interests and severely punishing serious economic and other criminals according to the law; and in publicizing the legal system, improving relations among the people, and stepping up the building of the spiritual civilization. Facts show that it is very necessary to perfect the lawyer system, build a contingent of lawyers and strengthen the work of lawyers in China. The legal system cannot be perfected without a perfect lawyer system.

Qiao Shi pointed out: Our lawyer system must be a socialist lawyer system with Chinese characteristics in conformity with our national conditions. In this respect, we do not have a model to follow, and we have to constantly probe, study and sum up experience in the course of practice, and gradually develop and perfect the lawyer system. He emphasized: This fundamental character decides that our lawyers must unconditionally place themselves under the party and state leadership, faithfully serve the fundamental interests of the party, the state and the people, and work for the development of socialist democracy, for the perfection of their socialist legal system, and for the building of socialist material and spiritual civilizations.

Qiao Shi pointed out: To uphold the four basic principles should be the basic guiding principle for the work of our lawyers. Only under this guiding principle can we ensure that our lawyers adhere to a correct political orientation in work, constantly improve the quality of lawyers politically and professionally, and enhance their ability to work for the party and the state and to serve the people.

On the relationship between lawyers and the public security and procuratorial organs and people's courts, Qiao Shi said in his speech: Our lawyer system is an organic part of the socialist legal system. Fundamentally speaking, the work of our lawyers is united with the work of public security and procuratorial organs and people's courts. Their objective is the same -- to act strictly according to the law on the basis of facts to defend the dignity of the PRC Constitution, other laws and the socialist legal system. Under this premise, they coordinate, supplement and restrict each other.

Qiao Shi said: Lawyers must be upright and honest in performing their duties, value the interests of the party, the state and the people above everything else, uphold truth and correct mistakes as soon as they occur. Lawyers should never violate the interests of the state and the collectives and the dignity of the law merely for the sake of their clients. Nor should they yield to certain persons' power and influence and fail to seek truth from facts, argue strongly on just grounds, and speak impartially to defend the legitimate rights and interests of the state, collectives and citizens.

Qiao Shi said that while certain progress has been made in the work of lawyers in China, basically speaking the lawyer system is still in its infancy and in need of universal attention and support from all quarters. He urged the party committees, governments and political and legal departments at all levels to understand fully the importance and role of the work of lawyers in the course of perfecting the socialist legal system, and attach further importance to and support the work of lawyers.

He urged them to resolutely deal with the illegal act of obstructing lawyers from performing their legal duties and even persecuting the lawyers, and to firmly protect the rights and interests of lawyers. He called on them to create the necessary working conditions for lawyers and solve the lawyers' difficulties in work and life. He also expected the lawyers in China to understand profoundly their glorious duties as the people's lawyers; love their work; painstakingly study Marxism, Mao Zedong Thought, the party's policies and the laws of the state; strive to improve their knowledge and working ability; make more outstanding achievements in work; and win further trust and respect from the whole society.

Zhou Yu, minister of justice, delivered an opening speech at the meeting, in which he pointed out that lawyers are important and indispensable to economic construction and to the development of the legal system.

Present at today's meeting were Liu Fuzhi, deputy secretary [fu shu ji 0479 2579 6068] and secretary-general [mi shu zhang 4434 2579 7022] of the Central Political and Legal Commission; Wang Hanbin, secretary-general of the NPC Standing Committee and chairman of the Legislative Affairs Commission of the NPC Standing Committee; Ruan Chongwu, minister of state security; responsible persons of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, the municipal government and other departments concerned; some 150 representatives of lawyers from 29 provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities; and some 80 non-voting participants from the judicial departments at all levels.

The congress received congratulatory messages from the Supreme People's Court, the Supreme People's Procuratorate, the Ministry of Public Security, and the Chinese Law Society.

HU YAOBANG, OTHER LEADERS ATTEND LEGAL SYSTEM COURSE

[Report: "Hu Yaobang and Other High-Ranking CPC Leaders Attend Legal System Course" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 3 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Led by Hu Yaobang, some high-ranking CPC leaders today attended a legal system course in Zhongnanhai.

Before the course began, Hu Qili, secretary of the CPC Central Committee's Secretariat, delivered a short speech. He said: Not long ago, after hearing a report on rectifying the party style and correcting unhealthy tendencies of the Standing Committee of the Central Committee's Political Bureau, Deng Xiaoping pointed out that although rectification of party style is not a focal point, as far as the overall situation is concerned, we should pay close attention to and strengthen the legal system. It is important to solve the problem of education, and educating people is a fundamental problem.

Hu Qili said: Some leaders are not attending a course. This is one of the measures the central authorities have adopted to strengthen the legal system. He continued: By studying the legal system, the leading cadres can facilitate the popularization of legal knowledge and educate and encourage all party members to abide by the law and do things in accordance with it. In addition, this can also facilitate the four modernizations and the smooth implementation of the reforms.

Today, Hu Yaobang, Fang Yi, Tian Jiyun, Li Peng, Hu Qiaomu, Hu Qili, Yao Yilin, Chen Muhua, Chen Pixian, Hao Jianxiu, Wang Zhaoguo, and others earnestly attended the legal system class.

Sun Guohua, an associate professor at China People's University, delivered the first lecture, entitled "Marx's Theory of the Role of Law." It is reported that in principle, there will be a class each month in Zhongnanhai.

RENMIN RIBAO MARKS ANNIVERSARY OF FORMAT CHANGE

[Article by RENMIN RIBAO Editorial Department: "Our Wish — To Readers on the Occasion of the 30th Anniversary of RENMIN RIBAO Changing Its Format"]

[Text] With the approval of the party Central Committee, RENMIN RIBAO changed its format and began to issue eight pages on 1 July 30 years ago and published an editorial entitled "To Readers," which stated clearly that "RENMIN RIBAO is a newspaper of the party and it is also a newspaper of the people" and put forward a plan for improving the newspaper. The main contents of this plan were to expand the scope of reports, initiate free discussions, and improve the style of writing. The change of format at that time was carried out after the socialist transformation of the ownership of the means of production was basically completed in our country and under a new situation in which economic construction became the focus of the work of the whole party and the whole country. It was a successful exploration in how to properly run the newspaper of a ruling proletarian party. It was considered as another greatly significant reform in the history of the party's newspapers following the change of format of JIEFANG RIBAO in Yanan in 1942, and was well received by the readers.

Today we are opening up a new situation in all aspects of socialist modernization. The waves of reform are sweeping across the country, covering economic, political, cultural, and all other fields. As a carrier of social public opinion and a means for collecting information from all quarters and playing the most powerful music of our time, newspapers are even more aware of this. In order to meet the needs of the situation of comprehensive reforms, our newspapers must also regard themselves as a component part of the entire reform — an overall, comprehensive, and dynamic social systems project. While publicizing reforms, newspapers must make corresponding reforms in their own work. The staff members and workers of this newspaper are telling readers of our wish to reform the newspaper in the hope that they will make comments and criticism.

"The party's journalism undertaking is the mouthpiece of the party. Naturally, it is also the mouthpiece of the people's government under the leadership of the party. At the same time, it is also the people's own mouthpiece." This is a complete and clear inference drawn by Comrade Hu Yaobang in his talk "On the Party's Journalism Work." He also pointed out: "The party's journalism undertaking should fully develop its role as the mouthpiece of the party. This of course includes the role of transmitting instructions from higher authorities to lower levels and making the situation at lower levels known to the higher authorities, the role of strengthening the ties between the party and the people and reflecting the demands of the people, and the role of satisfying the people's needs in obtaining information."

What Comrade Hu Yaobang said is the guide for us to do a good job in running the party's newspapers and is also an explicit summary of the main aspects of the reform in the work of newspapers. The aim of the reforms to be carried out in RENMIN RIBAO is to better manifest and display the nature and functions of a newspaper of the central organ of the party.

Reforms and opening up are rapidly changing the face of our country. As far as the work of newspapers is concerned, great changes have taken place in the situation as compared even with that several years ago. We need not compare with the situation 30 years ago. The broad masses of readers have greater needs than ever before in obtaining from the newspapers new information, new things, and new problems in various fields, as well as the views of the party Central Committee toward these new things and new problems. They have greater needs than ever before in obtaining from the newspapers new concepts, new knowledge, and new technology needed for modernization. They have greater needs than ever before in exchanging views and experience in the newspapers. They have greater needs than ever before to learn from the newspapers new things that occur in the world. At present there are thousands of domestic newspapers and periodicals, and broadcasting and television have become increasingly more popular. Under these circumstances, how RENMIN RIBAO, as a newspaper of the party's central organ, should give play to its strong points, satisfy the needs of the readers to the greatest extent, and create its own characteristics in contents and form so that the readers will find it readable, trustworthy, and intimate and really regard it as their helpful and bosom friend, is the problem which we are determined to solve in the course of exploration and reforms.

There is no ready model for reforming newspapers. It is necessary for us to explore continuously. The only way we can do so is to carry out reforms step by step. It is impossible for us to announce a certain date on which our newspaper will take on an entirely new look before the readers. We will do solid work and make unremitting efforts to make our newspaper better serve the readers, reforms, and modernization. In order to obtain help and advice from our readers, we will organize a sampling survey concerning the reform of the newspaper in order to solicit opinions extensively. We hope that readers involved in the survey will give us their support and cooperation. We hope that more readers will put forward their criticism and proposals regarding the contents, layout, printing, and delivery of the newspaper. We will improve our work based on the readers' opinions.

"Our newspaper is called RENMIN RIBAO. This means that it is the people's public weapon and public property. The masses of the people are its masters. Only by relying on the masses of the people can we run our newspaper well." This is a passage from the concluding remarks of our newspaper's editorial "To Readers" published 30 years ago. Today we want to offer it to our readers again and use it to encourage ourselves.

LIAOWANG URGES PROPAGANDA IN MARXIST CULTURAL THEORY

HK060317 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0151 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 6 Jul (XINHUA) — The latest edition of LIAOWANG magazine, to be published tomorrow, carries a commentator's article pointing out that while spurring the development of literature and art in China, it is very important to step up propaganda and education in Marxist theory on literature and art.

The magazine's view is based on the current state of literature and art in China. The article holds that the following is the current state of literature and art in the country: Rich and varied contemporary real life has not yet been extensively and profoundly expressed in China's literature and art works; and a normal discussion atmosphere of free airing of views and contention between a hundred schools has not yet formed in literature and art criticism. In particular, certain people have displayed certain degrees of coldness and lack of attention regarding the fiery realities of the four modernizations and the reforms; some people are enthusiastically engaged in preaching abstract individualism and social pessimism that pokes fun at everything and harbors doubts over all social progress, and they even play up people's sexual instincts in isolation, stripped of social content; certain vulgar styles are imitated in literature and art creation and performance; vulgar reading matter spread to a disastrous extent for a time, hitting hard at the healthy development of serious literature and art, and so on.

The commentator's article points out that many successes have been recorded in the development of China's literature and art in recent years, but if the situation described above fails to draw attention, the possibility remains of producing bad social effects.

The article says that neglect of propaganda and education in Marxist theory on literature and art in recent years is an important reason for the emergence of the undesirable phenomena noted above.

On stepping up propaganda and education in Marxist theory on literature and art, the article particularly emphasizes that it is essential to resolve problems of whom literature and art should serve, of the relationship between freedom of creation and social responsibility, and the relationship between literature and art creation and social life. The article says that today we should precisely serve the highest interests of our nation and people -- accomplishing socialist modernization and enhancing the masses' spiritual realm. This is determined by the socialist nature of our literature and art.

Discussing the social responsibilities of writers, the article points out that so long as writers' works enter society they will produce social benefit of various kinds. The writers cannot evade their responsibility for this. On the other hand, there is no such thing as absolute, unconditional, and abstract freedom in creation. Writers can only attain true freedom in creation on the basis of taking a correct view of social life.

WENZHAI BAO VIEWS PROBLEMS IN PROPAGANDA WORK

[Report summarized from 11 June ZHONGGUO BACKAN BAO [CHINA PRESS and PUBLICATIONS JOURNAL]: "Problems in Propaganda on Issues in Daily Life"]

[Text] According to a survey, readers hold the following opinions on the propaganda on issues in daily life: 1) The levels of consumption mentioned in the propaganda are relatively too far above the actual levels in our country.

For example, some newspapers and journals say too much about the arrangement of modern furniture, about the decoration of "nurseries," and about a piano being a "necessity" for a family. This excessively premature propaganda will lose its attraction for most of our readers. 2) The understanding of "modern life" fails to take into account all of its aspects. One practice is to restrict propaganda to readers of the urban high-income stratum. The propaganda gives the impression: It seems that one does not know modern lifestyle if one is not particular about one's food, clothes, residence, articles of daily use, and the ways in which to play. It seems that the reform of our lifestyle can take no account of our country's cultural and historical tradition and copies Western lifestyles. The other practice is that it seems that modern life is only embodied in material consumption; therefore, little is mendionted about spiritual consumption in life, even less is guidance given in this area. 3) The propaganda fails to give sufficient, correct, and convincing guidance on the problems in our lives. Some of it gives naturalist reports and narration about cases that have occurred in families and problems in sexual life. It thus lowers its taste and even yields a negative propaganda effect. Some propaganda, such as that on the issue of female "virginity" gives too much emphasis to it because it fails to eliminate feudal morality. This yields a bad effect. Some of the propaganda focuses on issues in the lives of youths and old people and fails to mention much abut the issues in the lives of middle-age people.

REMAIN RIBAO SCORES TOURING AT PUBLIC EXPENSE

["Letter" from the office of Jinan Railway Public Security Section: "The Wind of 'Going on Tours at Public Expense' Blows Again"]

[Text] Dear Comrades,

Since the summer set in, some cadres, workers and students have been on holiday. They have gone sightseeing here and there, and this trend is becoming more common. For a time, the daily volume of tourist at Jinan and Taian railway stations amounted to as many as 16,000, accounting for more than half of these stations' gross volume of passengers. Most of them were young people who came from factories, enterprises, shops, and schools, and who went on tours at public exense.

The practice of going on tours at public expense has not only directly affected production and study, as well as intensifying the strain on railway transportation, but has also disturbed public security. On 16 April, a group of eight people, the staff of Dashiqiao hardware, chemical industry products, communicatiom, and electrial appliances shop in Zhengzhou City, including young salesman Sun Longjian, boarded the No 493 train and travelled to Taian. Since they occupied more seats than they were entitled to, they argued with other passengers on the matter. When passenger Duan Hongjiang and two other people criticized their act of occupying more seats than they were entitled to, Sun Longjian stabbed Duan to death with a hunting knife and seriously wounded the other two people. This is just one of the many incidents of this kind which have taken place on trains.

It is very necessary and correct that the central authorities have formulated regulations on banning acts of going on tours at public expense. We should resolutely ban this tendency. However, some units have not resolutely implemented the central authorities' regulations.

Some of them even continue to support this kind of activity by allowing time and providing financial support. It is hoped that all units concerned will seriously implement the central authorities' regulations on banning acts of going on tours at public expense, will adopt effective measures, and will resolutely check the unhealthy tendency of going on tours at public expense.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Gong on Tours at Public Expense Is Strictly Forbidden"]

[Text] Since the summer set in, some localities and units have openly violated regulations of the CPC Central Committee and State Council on banning acts of going on tours at public expense. Instead, they have opened wide the door for their workers to go on tours at public expense, thereby developing this unhealthy tendency and giving a bad impression to the masses. We must resolutely check this kind of malpractice.

The central authorities have issued repeated injunctions on banning the act of going on tours at public expense. At the end of last year, the CPC Central Committee office and the State Council office issued a circular on solving several problems concerning the work style of organs. One of the problems is the tendency in which party and government cadres go on tours at public expense. The circular also clearly stated that all meetings held by associations, societies, and research institutes must not choose their venues in tourist cities or at tourist spots. Also, nobody is allowed to go on tours at public expense following the conclusion of the meetings. Whenever a person goes on a tour at public expense with the excuse of visiting and studying, we should handle the case by following the principle that "whoever proposes the idea should be responsible for the cost" and "whoever approves it should be responsible for paying the bills." All public funds spend should be recovered. Also, corresponding disciplinary measures should be taken against the people involved in serious cases.

Over the past 6 months and more, party government organs at all levels have seriously implemented the regulations on strictly banning acts of going on tours at public expense. They have taken the lead in improving the work style and promoted a fundamental turn for the better in both party style and the general mood of society. They have therefore been praised by the masses. However, judging from the situation reported by the office of Jinan railway public security section, there are some party and government organs, particularly some grass-root units, which turn a deaf ear to the spirit of the central authorities' guidance. They stick to their old practice and offer conditions in terms of time and financial support for going on tours at public expense, so that the tendency of "going on tours at public expense" has prevailed for a long time.

The fact that the staff of state organs go on tours at public expense has not only increased state expenditure but also brought heavy burdens to some localities, particularly the tourist areas and special zones. Furthermore, it has intensified the strain on transport action, adversely affecting people's normal work and study. In some cases, it has also seriously harmed public security and social order and has corrupted the general mood of society, which is unfavorable to our current reforms and the four modernizations. Therefore, all departments and units concerned must attach great importance to the matter.

By following the principle that "whoever proposes the idea should be responsible for the cost, and whoever approves it should be responsible for paying the bills," they should resolutely ban all acts of going on tours at public expense. We should take economic measures against those who are responsible for organizing and supporting acts of going on tours at public expense. In addition, we should take disciplinary measures against those involved in serious cases.

Our country is still not a rich one. There is strain in the supply of energy resources and transport. All departments and units should try their best to operate in an economical way, and allocate limited capital to areas which are necessary in building the socialist modernizations. Party and government organs at all levels, all mass organizations, and all grass-roots units must organize cadres and the masses to seriously study the relevant regulations from the central authorities, so that everyone will fully understand the necessity and importance of the work of resolutely banning acts of going on tours at public expense; and so as to encourage the workers to continue to carry forward the spirit of struggling hard and to make contributions to building the four modernizations.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES FREEDOM IN SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY

[Editorial: "Give Scientific and Technological Workers a Free Hand in Carrying Out Great Plans"]

[Text] The Third National Congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology was successfully held. Over 2,000 representatives gathered together and discussed their great plans for invigorating scientific circles and making contributions to the four modernizations. The congress was marked by unity, democracy, and the brightness of intelligence. It was so held in such a lively manner that its atmosphere lived up to its theme: Mobilizing the scientists and technicians throughout the country and uniting them so as to contribute their wisdom to realizing the Seventh 5-Year Plan. By mastering modern science and technology, we shall add wings to the future vigorous development of the Chinese nation. Reforms of the economic structure, as well as of the scientific and technological structures, will pave the way for invigorating China's science and technology. Now is the time when the scientific and technological workers can fully display their abilities!

Following the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the method of "respecting knowledge and qualified personnel," which was greatly advocated by the CPC Central Committee, has become the prevailing practice. The whole society understands in great depth the significance of science and technology in the realization of the four modernizations. The major tasks faced by the scientific and technological front at present are: to spare no effort in promoting reforms in the scientific and technological structures, and to unswervingly make things serve economc construction so as to struggle for quadrupling the annual gross industrial and agricultural output value by the turn of the century. Science and technology are the important resources for building modern material civilization, as well as one of China's foundation stones for building socialist spiritual civilization. Thus, playing their riles in building the two civilizations is a glorious historical mission presently undertaken by all scientific and technological workers.

The quality of nation's science and culture reflects that nation's level of spiritual civilization. The Chinese nation is a great nation. But we cannot but realize that in our national spirit, there are still such backward elements as small-scale agricultural production thinking and other outmoded traditional concepts. They are the great enemy of our current modernizations. Also, they are the products of China's long-term feudalistic rule in the past, and they breed and develop in areas where science, technology, and productive forces are in a backward state. Spriritual force as well as material force is needed to smash the trammels of small-scale agricultural production thinking, and problems will eventually be solved by developing the productive forces. But this cannot be separated from the power of science, be it because of spiritual or material factors. The replacement of outdated thinking cannot be separated from arming our minds with scientific and technological knowledge. To popularize scientific and technological knowledge among cadres and the masses is an historical task in promoting reforms and the building of spriritual and material civilization. This task falls first on the shoulders of millions of ordinary Chinese scientists and technicians, as well as members of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology.

At the Second National Congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, Comrade Hu Yaobang said: "The reason scientists can become what they are is because they strictly follow the scientific spirit, that is they seek truth from facts, make innovations, oppose acts of indulging in exaggeration, and oppose conservative acts." This is the spirit urgently needed at present in our reforms and the four modernizations. Not having a high level of development in science and technology or in their popularization is a backward state. Not having a scientific spirit is also a kind of backward state. Our scientists must focus their work on tackling tough issues and popularizing scientific and technological knowledge. They must also regard as their own work the popularization of scientific thinking. Party and government cadres at all levels must take scientists as their examples, and learn their spirit of studying science and technology so as to spread the spirit across the whole of society.

In order to fully display their abilities, scientific and technological workers need a democratic and harmonious academic environment created by the party organizations and governments at all levels. One of the keys to achieving this rests with the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend, which is the only correct guideline for developing science. Judging from the history of science, the development of all scientific departments is related to the contention of different views. The collision, enhancing, and merging of different academic viewpoints and thinking are the cradle of wisdom and the fertile soil for developing innovations. There are no forbidden areas in science. In the academic field, people should be free to air any point of view, criticize any point of view, and reply to criticism. This is protected by the construction. Scientific and research work must be carefully carried out, but the academic atmosphere of scientific and technological circles must be very democratic. In the area of academic contention, we should allow criticism and replies to criticism, including criticism and replies to criticism between teachers and students. It is forbidden to adopt the practice in which we resort to administrative means to suppress, discriminate against, and hit at those who hold different academic viewpoints. The contention among a hundred schools of thought needs no judge, and the practice of making the minority subordinate to the majority, or making the lower level subordinate to the upper level does not work here.

No party or government leader must intervene at will in academic disputes, still less support one academic point of view by administrative means while opposing another. As a channel for the party and government to contact and unite people with technical expertise, the Association for Science and Technology is duty-bound to help leaders at all levels implement the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend. Party committees and governments at all levels must learn how to rely on the organizations under the Association for Science and Technology for carrying out the relevant work.

Science and technology in comtemporary times play a more important role in the process of making decisions at various levels. Therefore, in the course of making decisions, particularly important decisions on major scientific and technological projects, economic construction and, social development, we must listen to the viewpoints of scientists. On the other hand, scientific and technological workers should actively propose ways and means by acting in the manner of being master of their own affairs.

The CPC Central Committee once clearly pointed out: "The Association for Science and Technology is an organization of scientific and technological workers. Its importance is the same as that of trade unions, CYL, women's federation, and the federation of literary and art circles. In the course of achieving our four modernizations, the work of scientific and technological circles is of particular importance." Over the years, the Association for Science and Technology has played an important role in organizing and unifying scientific and technological workers, promoting academic exchanges between China and overseas, promoting the brisk development of the work of popularizing scientific and technological knowledge, promoting the vigorous development of scientific and technological consultation services, and building the socialist spiritual and material civilizations. At present, under the new circumstances in which we are carrying out reforms and the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the party and people across the country have pinned high hopes on the Association for Science and Technology, hoping that the association will use the creative work to promote and develop science and technology, to promote the popularization of science and technology, to train and cultivate scientifically and technologically qualified personnel, and to unite all scientific and technological workers across the country. They also hope that the association will go all out, fully display its abilities, and carry out great plans!

SHANDONG COUNTY MEASURES BOOST AFFORESTATION

[Report by Jiang Yuntao and He Changzheng: "Peasants in Shandong's Rushan County Profit From Contracting for Forestland Cultivation"]

[Text] In line with the actual conditions in the area, Shandong's Rushan County has adopted various measures to compensate peasants who contract for forestland. In this way, it has succeeded in solving the problem of contracting over 100,000 mu of barren hills and desolate beaches to peasants who refused to accept them before.

Early last year, the leaders of the Rushan County CPC Committee and government discovered that 108,000 mu of the 600,000 mu of forestland throughout the country was still unattended.

The reason was that some peasants thought it more profitable to engage in other businesses than in afforestation projects because forestry production took a long time and yielded slow returns. However hard the village authorities tried to mobilize them, they were still unwilling to contract for the forestland.

Through investigation, the county leaders discovered that Dagushan village in Dagushan township was confronted with the heavy task of planting trees on its 509 mu of hillocks in the spring of 1984. However, Lin Shutan and four other peasant households rushed to contract for the job. The reason was that, bearing the interests of the peasants in mind, the village cadres adopted a method of making economic compensation. Besides appropriately reducing the portions they should turn over to the state, the village authorities also assigned them 21 mu of cultivated land near the hills for diversified undertakings without collecting any contributions from them, because this land consituted their principal source of income in the immediate future. Last year, these households had a total income of over 4,600 yuan, averaging 920 yuan per household. Since their livelihood was guaranteed and since they had funds to purchase saplings, fertilizer, insecticides, and production tools, they were enthusiastic about tree planting. In 1 year they succeeded in digging more than 30,000 tree holes on barren hills and planted trees on more than 300 mu of land.

The practice of Dagushan village of helping forestland contractors increase their income in the immediate future and of using this income to support their long-term undertakings inspired the leaders of the country, who popularized this experience throughout the country. In the course of applying this experience, the various localities adopted different measures in light of their own conditions. They either paid the contributions of the contractors with funds from village enterprises; supplied saplings, fertilizers, and insecticide free; or assigned some cultivated land near the hills, freshwater areas, orchards, or mulberry plots so that the contractors could increase their income through diversified undertakings. Meanwhile, the village authorities also supplied technical and other services. Through implementation of these measures, the 108,000 mu of barren hills and desolate beaches were soon contracted by the peasants. Of the more than 4,800 households contracting for the cultivation of forestland, more than 50 have moved to the mountains. They were very enthusiastic about tree planting. Last year, more than 12 million trees were planted throughout the country, topping all previous records. Of this total, 3.85 million trees were planted on 108,000 mu of barren hills. In the spring of this year, half a million more trees were planted on these barren hills. While tending the trees, quite a few households made full use of the forestland to develop diversified understakings. They fed cows and sheep with grass, planted medicinal herbs in unoccupied land, or raised silkworms on the hills. Last year, 82 households had an income of more than 3,000 yuan each from forestry and diversified undertakings.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Supporting the Peasants in Planting Trees on Barren Hills"]

[Text] Implementing a completely relaxed policy is an essential condition for speeding the afforestation of barren hills.

It is necessary to encourage free planting on barren hills, no matter who does that or what measures are adopted. Even if it is operated by private individuals, it should not be restricted because it is also beneficial to the state and the people if the trees grow well. Naturally, relaxation of controls does not mean complete abandonment. We should not think that relaxation of controls will necessarily bring about invigoration and that invigoration will necessarily be a good thing, as if the barren hills can easily be planted with trees as soon as they are contracted or assigned to the peasants. The fact that more than 100,000 mu of barren hills in Rushan County, Shandong Province, were unattended to for a time is clear proof of this. In some localities, although private hills and responsibility for hills have been assigned to people, the hills are still barren and their outlook has not changed. This state of affairs deserves our close study.

Forestry yields long-term results. It takes a long time to attain results, and the period of capital turnover is fairly long. If we invest 10 yuan in other departments, it will probably make several turnovers in 1 year; if we invest the money in forestry, it will probably make a turnover in 1 or several decades. That is why peasants are not interested in planting trees on barren hills, which need large investments and yield slow returns. Moreover, many of the barren hills are situated in areas in which the economy has been backward for a long time and in which the peasants have not satisfactorily resolved the problem of food and clothing. How can they have the necessary financial resources to invest in barren hills? In some other places, the barren hills are poor in soil and are some distance from the peasants' houses; arrangements for saplings and technical and other services needed by the peasants are not properly made. Under such circumstances, it is no use talking about relaxation of controls without taking any corresponding measures.

Peasants should have some remuneration for investing in tree plantinga on barren hills. This is a justifiable demand and is a question that should be resolved following the relaxation of controls over barren hills. That is to say, we should adopt effective measures to support in various ways the peasants in planting trees on barren hills. This includes state support in the form of credits, allowances, etc, as well as various effectiveness methods of compensation as adopted by Rushan County in light of its actual conditions. Conditions in different places are different, and their methods are also different. The important thing is that leaders at all levels and the forestry and other relevant departments should follow the guiding idea of developing afforestation to make the people rich, show concern for the peasants in every way, and support them in planting trees on barren hills.

BEIJING PROFESSOR ON CONCEPT OF VALUE

[Article by Guo Jiakuan, selected from ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO of 27 Jun: "Reforms Require a New Concept of Value -- Interview With Professor Li Yining, Chairman of the Economic Management Department of the Beijing University"]

[Text] Professor Li had explicit economic views and clear-cut arguments on reforms.

"Failure in price reform would probably lead to failure in economic reform, but success in economic reform would not necessarily be attributed to success in price reform but to success in ownership system reform.

This is because the purpose of price reform is to create an environment suited to the development of the commodity economy, whereas ownership system reform involves the interests and responsibility of enterprises and laborers as well as the problem of stimulating the labor force. This is the fundamental thing to be resolved in economic reform. The purpose of ownership system reform is to establish enterprises assuming sole responsibility for their own profits and losses, that is, enterprises that can be held responsible for all the consequences arising from their losses. In addition, profits and losses should be symmetric. Bankruptcy of enterprises is an inevitably result of the role of the law of value in the commodity economy. For the national economy, it is a good rather than bad thing if enterprises go bankrupt due to improper management.

"The socialist economy should first be a commodity economy and then a planned commodity economy. The regulative role of the market can help achieve a balance between supply and demand, but there are limits to this role. Therefore, it is necessary for the government to regulate. However, unlike in the past, we should not think that the government can control everything. Regulation by market mechanism is necessary because the strength of the government is inadequate. The government should take account of the regulation by market mechanism while bringing its regulative role into play. Its regulative role should be scientific and highly efficient. If planned management is subjective and unscientific, we would rather not have it; and if the government's regultive role is inefficient and confusing, we would rather not have it."

"What has the development of economic reform demanded for us?"

"The most important point is a change in the concept of value. For a long time, clan mentality and egalitarianism among small producers in China plus the system of "everybody eating from the same big pot" and "everybody having an iron rice bowl" have injected many wrong ideas on the concept of value into the people, naturally, including young people. Take the concept of employment as an example. Previously, people always thought that only becoming state cadres or working in state-run enterprises could be called real employment; it seemed a little disreputable to work in collective enterprises, and running individual enterprises could not be called employment. I know that there are shops called "shops of job-awaiting youth." This is the reflection of such a concept, which is quite ridiculous. Young people should establish this mentality: So long as one relies on this labor to obtain earnings for a living, this is employment. The concept of consumption should also be changed. Consumption that does not exceed the limits of one's income, be it consumption for high-grade commodities, should not be regarded as extravagance. Practicing thrift refers to the rational use of limited resources. Take the concept of competition as another example. People have for a long time taken competition as a terrible thing of capitalism. In fact, competition is a factor promoting progress and development. The result of consumption is either the improvement of both sides or the elimination of either side. The superior will win; the inferior will lose. The great arena for socialist economic activities should be provided to newly emerging enterprises that have vitality and competitiveness. Another example is the concept of equality. Due to the obstinate influence by the concept of value on traditional Chinese culture, egalitarianism in the small-peasant economy has been regarded as equality.

Without discarding this mentality, there can be no correct concept of competition, some people will be jealous of "those who become better off ahead of others," and enterprises will engage in endless arguments about unfairness in their income. All this will finally lead to a drop in productivity and to mass poverty. Equality under the socialist commodity economy should be equality of opportunities for producers, who are the masters of production materials, and should be distribution of income according to the amount of work under the condition of the current level of the productive forces. Now, the bankruptcy of enterprises and labor employment system reform have been put on the agenda. If the concept of value remains unchanged, it will be pounded by the waves of reforms, and we will not be able to make correct judgments on economic activities.

"The nucleus of the concept of value on traditional Eastern culture is clam mentality and egalitarianism of small producers, whereas the nucleus of the concept of value of modern Western culture is individualism. These two are contradictory to each other. We will not take our choice among the two but will explore and seek a new concept of value suited to socialist theories and principles. This new concept of value should embody the following four principles: 1) Correctly handling the relationship between the long-term and immediate interests of laborers; 2) correctly handling the relationship between interests of a small number of laborers and the entire laborers; 3) correctly handling the relationship between individual creative spirit and collective will; and 4) being able to keep pace with new situations brought about by commodity economy and market competitions. In this sense, the change in the concept of value is a revolution more profound than economic structural reform."

Before I left, Professor Li added, half jokingly: "Some of my viewpoints may be 'heterodox.' But these are the results of my long-term study of China's economic reform. Only through contention, can economics strive. Am I right?"

RENMIN RIBAO ON MARKET OF MEANS OF PRODUCTION

[Article by Li Kaixin: "Probing the Issue of Developing the Market of the Means of Production"]

[Text] In the "Report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan," Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out: During the Seventh 5-Year Period, the main contents of the reform of the economic structure consist of three aspects, one of which is to further develop the socialist commodity market and gradually perfect the market system. This requires we not only continue to expand the market of consumer goods but also gradually reduce the variety and number of the means of production under the state unified distribution and allocation, and continuously expand the market of the means of production. To develop the market of the means of production has become the major task of the reform of the structure of the material and equipment administration. How is the actual situation in the development of the market of the means of production? What problems should be solved in order to further develop the market of the means of production? This article will probe these questions.

How To Look at the Development of the Market of the Means of Production

To maintain a good balance between supply and demand is of vital importance to the development of a planned market of the means of production and the perfection of the market system.

If the supply of various kinds of materials always falls short of demand or there is always a short supply of goods, it will be difficult to build a really open and unified market of the means of production. The open and unified market mentioned here should be a market in which the goods in circulation are not distributed by the administrative departments but are freely traded; that is, a market free from administrative compartmentaliation.

Since last year, the state has adopted a series of forceful measures in order to resolve the problem of the total social demand exceeding the total social supply; the open market of some important goods has gradually developed. However, at present, the total social demand still exceeds the total social supply and the supply of many goods still falls short of the demand. This situation has affected the development of the market of the means of production. In order to prevent huge economic losses and extensive social repercussions, it is quite correct to adopt the method of gradually easing up the contradictions and fulfilling the task of realizing the overall balance between supply and demand within this year and next year. Therefore, all sides should make concerted efforts, strengthen and improve the Macroeconomic control, try to realize the total balance between the supply and demand of various important goods, and create a good environment for the development of the market of the means of production.

Generally speaking, the total social balance between supply and demand determines the balance between various kinds of goods. However, because of a large variety of means of production and because of the situation concerning the supply and demand of different means of production in different, when the total social demand still exceeds the total social supply as far as some important materials and equipment are concerned, to adopt the method of broadening sources of income and reducing expenditure will also probably help to realize the balance between supply and demand and benefit the market development. Here, I will discuss the situation regarding the market of timber, the market of coal, and the market of steel products respectively.

Before 1980, there was more demand for timber than for any other good in our country. Since 1981, through increasing import, stressing the sparing use of substitutes, carrying out comprehensive utilization, properly relaxing the policy towards forest regions of selling one's products through one's own channels, readjusting and relaxing control on timber prices (raising the prices of timber under the state unified distribution scheme and relaxing control on the prices of timber outside the state unified distribution scheme), and properly arranging the resources put into the market, the timber market has remained relatively stable. Even in 1984 and 1985, when the total social demand got out of control, there were no big fluctuations in the timber market. Timber prices remained basically stable. Customers could buy timber at the market price at any time and could choose the kind of timber they wanted. Because this type of open market has existed for several years, the role of market mechanism has gradually been brought into play so that the structure of social stock has gradually been rationalized. In 1985, the stock volume of the production units, the capital construction units, and the supply institutions decreased while the stock volume of the production units, capital construction units, and supply institutions in the total social stock volume dropped from 54.9 percent o 50.8 percent while the proportion of the stock volume of the goods and markets departments in the total social stock volume increased from 22.2 percent to 24.9 percent in December 1985.

This situation was extremely conducive to invigorating the circulation of timber, guaranteeing the supply, and stabilizing the market.

Before 1983, there had been a short supply of coal in our country. Over the past 2 years, we have readjusted the prices of coal under the state unified distribution scheme; implemented the contract system covering output, profits, losses; and investment in coalmines under the state unified distribution system; raised the prices and put negotiated prices on the above-quota coal in different proportions; relaxed control on the prices of coal produced by local mines; raised the transportation fees; properly arranged the planned railroad transportation and raised the prices of the railroad transportation outside the plan; made appropriate arrangements for highway transportation; and increased the coal production and can transportation volume. As a result, we have achieved marked results in economizing on coal. Since the second half of 1984, the coal supply to the coal-consuming areas has been greatly relaxed and the market coal prices have dropped so that the consumers now have more choices in choosing the variety and quality of coal as well as the coal-supplying areas. This is conducive to improving the product quality of the coalmines, improving the services of the coal operators, and rationalizing the flow of coal.

As far as steel products are concerned, in 1984 and 1985 when the macroscopic control of the national economy got out of control, there was a growing demand for steel products and the prices of the steel products rocketed, so it was really difficult for us to form an open market at that time. Now the situation is different. Because the macroeconomic control measures adopted by the state have achieved good results, the growing demand for steel products has been controlled. Under such circumstances, is it possible for us to try to open up an open and unified market for steel products as we have done for timber and coal? I think that it is possible if we have correct guidance, and we should try our best to do it. The rise of the prices of steel products for construction use stopped in the second half of last year, and the prices began to drop. Taking wire rod for example, although the situation differs from region to region, as far as the whole country is concerned, generally speaking, the price per on of wire road has dropped from 1,900 yuan in May and June of last year to 1,600 yuan at present. Presently, some of the steel products for production use are still in short supply, and the rise of prices of these steel products has not yet completely stopped. The easing up of the supply of steel products for construction use will push forward with the readjustment of the variety of imported steel products for production use and the variety of imported steel products so as to increase the supply of steel products for production use. Along with the continued improvement of the state's macroeconomic administration, it is hoped that the entire situation regarding the supply of steel products will be improved. However, at present, the prices of steel products are still very high. This situation is determined by the current relationship between supply and demand. If we cannot realize the balance between supply and demand by reducing demand and increasing supply, we should recognize the current market prices, the material and equipment enterprises should activity carry out the buying and selling activities according to the market prices at this level, and the steel products put into the market by the state should also be sold at this price.

Temporarily maintaining the "high prices" that have emerged in the market will be conducive to stimulating production, restricting consumption, and maintaining balance. Along with the further reduction of demand and further increase of supply, the excessively high prices of steel products will naturally drop. If we are able to form an open market for steel products, we will be able to promote the rational utilization of the social stock of steel products so that the problem which has failed to be resolved through administrative methods will probably be resolved through market mechanism. According to the latest statistics, by the end of March of this year, the total social stock of steel products reached 25.8 million tons, an increase of 4.02 million tons compared with that in the corresponding period of last year. There is great potential here. If we have a market in which steel products can be bought and sold at any time, the prices of steel products are relatively stable, customers can sell steel products they do not use for the time being, and the market prices will gradually drop, customers will certainly be encouraged to reduce their stock so that the supply of steel products will increase.

The market of steel products involves a lot of fields and has a great influence on the national economy, so all sides are very concerned about the market of steel products. If we can open up a new prospect in the development of the market of steel products, we will greatly push forward with the development of the entire market of the means of production.

We should strengthen our guidance over various other materials and goods according to their respective situations and continue to perfect the open markets that have already been formed. We should also create conditions to form open markets for materials and goods that do not have open markets, and try to establish open markets for these materials and goods as soon as possible. The experiences we have gained in the development of the timber market and coal market can be referred to in this respect.

To Correctly Implement the "Double-Track" Prices

The key to the development of the market of the means of production lies in smoothing out the prices of the means of production. In 1985, we relaxed the prices of the means of production outside the planned distribution and allocation and implemented the "double-track" price system, which allowed the coexistence of both the prices set according to the state plan and those outside the plan, which was not only an important experiment in our price reform but also a major step forward in our development of the market of the means of production, thus greatly pushing forward development of the market of the means of production. Relaxation of the prices of the means of production outside the plan has stimulated the production of the means of production to a certain degree and increased the production and supply of the materials whose demand exceeds supply. However, at that time, because the state's macroeconomic control went out of control, the prices of some important materials and goods skyrocketed, and we also lacked some specific measures of market control and price control, there once existed a temporary disorder. Recently, the leading comrade of the State Council explicitly pointed out that it is imperative to stick to the "double-track" prices. We should implement the state-set prices for the materials distributed according to the mandatory state plan and the state-guidance prices for the important materials allowed for the enterprises to sell by themselves. We must strictly implement these two principles in our price administration.

On what basis do we set the guidance prices? I think that guidance prices should be set according to the situation of supply and demand. Specifically speaking, guidance prices should be set according to the actual market prices and the changes that will probably take place in supply and demand in the future. When setting guidance prices, we should pay attention to gradually lowering the excessively high prices through state guidance, and should not set the prices too low as a result of our own subjective desire and ignorance of the actual situation. For example, we once rigidly laid down such a rule that the prices of steel products sold by enterprises through their own channels should not exceed the prices of the steel products under the state distribution and allocation by 20 percent. As a result, the rule not only failed to work but also produced disastrous results. It finally had to be abolished. The state guidance prices should not be unalterable, but should be readjusted at any time according to the situation of supply and demand in the market and the needs for guiding production and consumption.

Who should be responsible for the formulation and readjustment of the state guidance prices? I agree to publicizing the method of some cities in which the price department, the material and goods department, the adminstrative department of industry and commerce, and some other relevant units organize small groups to take responsibility for formulating and readjusting state guidance prices. The relevant units at the provincial and central levels should also form small groups to give guidance and carry out administration.

Shijiazhuang City has implemented the method of setting the same prices for materials both under ths State plan and outside the state plan. This has great significance in overcoming the maladies of the "double-track" prices and invigorating circulation. While implementing the method, we should pay attention to be resolving the problems of price disparities and hot holding too many funds of the customers. Shashi City and Hangzhou City's recent experiences in realizing the balance of price disparities within 1 day should be studied and publicized.

Implementation of the "double-track" prices is the necessary transition in the overall reform of the structure of the prices of the means of production. We must practically solve the problem of the disparity of the prices of the means of production and overcome the maladies of the "double-track" prices. We should in a planned way greatly readjust the state-set prices of materials and goods under the state distribution and allocation plan so as to narrow the gap between the two kinds of prices of the means of production in the "double-track" price system.

To Strengthen Administration of the Market of the Means of Production

In order to strengthen administration of the market of the means of production, we need to study and solve some existing problems.

1. The question concerning the right for the wholesale and management of the important means of production. The State Council has already issued clear-cut instructions that the wholesale of all greatly-needed and durable consumer goods and important means of production should be strictly controlled by the state commerce, the state material and goods department, and the state production enterprises. This State Council instruction must be implemented to the letter.

Over the past 2 years, the situation of reselling the means of production at a profit has become very serious, which has been closely linked with the fact that some units and individuals have acquired the "legal" management right which they should not have had. Sice we are now checking up and rectifying the companies, it is necessary for us to make specific regulations concerning the whole sale right and the management right.

2. The question of how the material and goods department should really play the role of handling, coordinating, and controlling prices in the process of the development of the market of the means of production. The proposal put forward by the CPC Central Committee on formulating the Seventh 5-Year Plan pointed out: "The industrial and commercial enterprises, the material supply and marketing departments, and the supply and marketing cooperatives under the ownership by the whole people must master the necessary material and economic methods, actively take part in market coordination, and play the role of handling, coordinating, and controlling prices. This is the necessary condition guaranteeing the smooth progress of the price reform and an important characteristic of the planned commodity economy." Obviously, on the market of the means of production, the main responsibility of handling, coordinating, and controlling prices is assumed by the material and goods department. However, restricted by the methods, in fact, the material enterprises have not been able to fully play the role of handling, coordianting, and controlling prices. On the contrary, in order to protect their own "economic interests," sometimes, the material enterprises even play a counter coordination role on the market. Solving this problem will be of vital importance to the normal development of the market of the means of production. In order to solve this problem, we should make relevant policies, charge the material departments with responsibilities, and provide them with the necessary economic methods.

3. To strengthen the guidance and support to the material trading centers. The material trading centers are different from the ordinary material companies, supply stations, retail departments, and so on. The material trading centers should be the legal spots where the production enterprises, material enterprises, and customers talk about big business and make big business deals concerning materials. The material trading centers are also the important organizational form of the state administration of the market of the means of production. At present, since the material trading centers are expanding rapidly in number, we need to make a unified plan to unify our understanding and strengthen our guidance. In order to promote development of the trading centers, the state should stipulate that the important means of production that the enterprises are allowed to sell through their own channels should be sold in the material trading centers, which will not only help to maintain the decision-making power of the enterprises but also make things convenient for the state to exercise supervision and administration over the enterprises' selling the important means of production through their own channels. The state should also stipulate that materials put onto the market by the state should be sold in public at the market prices in the trading centers so as to prevent the materials put onto the market from being brought into distribution again and ensure that the materials are really put onto the market. Only in this way can we coordinate the supply and demand on the market and control the prices.

4. To strengthen the exchange and administration of information about the market of the means of production.

At present, the material departments, production departments, and information units have begun to pay attention to market information so that the information exchanges have obviously been increased. This situation has had a positive impact on guiding the production and consumption and developing the market of the means of production. So, this situation is good. Therefore, the material departments should strengthen the administration and guidance on the information exchanges, especially the publicly published information, while continuing to carry out the exchange of information about the market of the means of production. The information exchanged must be accurate and timely and must help to guide and stabilize the market. The work of strengthening the exchange and administration of the information about the market of the means of production is new, so we need to conscientiously explore and sum up experiences in our actual work and try to raise the standard of our information work.

LEADERS ADDRESS ADVISORY COMMISSIONS CADRES

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Wu Xuelin and XINHUA reporter Zhan Xiang]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 5 Jul (XINHUA) -- Participants in a forum of chairmen of all provincial, municipal, and autonomous regional advisory commissions -- convened by the Central Advisory Commission -- pledged to do everything they can to help newly promoted cadres.

The meeting was held at Zhongnanhai in Beijing from 30 June through 4 July. Wang Zhen, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Commission, presided over the meeting, which was attended by members of the commission's Standing Committee, leaders of 29 such commissions at the provincial, municipal, and autonomous regional levels and advisory commissions in 6 cities -- namely Guangzhou, Nanjing, Wuhan, Chongqing, Xian, and Shenyang -- and officials from the CPC Committee of Special Organizations under the Central Advisory Commission.

Bo Yibo, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Commission, made an important speech concerning the work of advisory commissions at the meeting. He set three demands: First, actively support newly promoted officials; second, step up the study of theory and policies and attach great importance to investigations; and third, make proper arrangements for the life of advisory commission members in their late years and show concern for the work of retired cadres. Participants agreed that these demands are practical, and they pledged to further improve the work of advisory commissions.

During the 5-day forum, veteran cadres freely aired their views.

Song Renqiong, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Commission, made a summing-up speech at the closing of the forum. He said that the forum was successful, and that participants achieved good results in exchanging work experience. He also set the major guidelines concerning the strengthening of leadership by party committees over advisory commissions, the work of advisory commissions, and improvement of their organization and coordination.

LIANG BUTING INSPECTS LIAOCHENG AREA IN SHANDONG

SK020312 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] From 27 to 30 June. Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, made an inspection tour in Liaocheng Prefecture. During his tour, he urged Liaocheng Prefecture to enliven its economy and pointed out that the key to invigorating the economy lies in successfully bringing into play the strong point of local areas, basing its work on developing the first industry, making all-out efforts to develop the second and tertiary industries in rural areas, and carrying out in-depth processing of the farm and sideline products. Efforts should be made to concentrate on increasing the processed-output value at all levels and among every industry and trade and on increasing economic results as well.

During his tour, Comrade Liang Buting heard the report given by the responsible comrade of the Liaocheng Prefectural CPC Committee and inspected a number of plants and enterprises and the enterprises run by villages and jointly run by households. He also inspected the forestry production situation in Guan County and held a forum with the cadres from (Liucun) village and the grass-roots level units in the county.

At the forum he delivered a speech on dealing with the problems concerned, in which he pointed out that the work done by Liaocheng Prefecture was good and the prefecture's overall arrangement for economic development and its guiding ideology of economic work were clear and definite. We hope that efforts should be made to grasp the arrangement and guiding ideology in every link. In his speech Comrade Liang Buting pointed out: The four prefectures in northwestern Shandong are in the same category. As for the issue of how to accelerate the pace of developing these prefecures, the provincial CPC Committee will convene an on-the-spot administrative meeting in the latter half of this year in line with the data collected through investigation and studies. Attention will be paid to studying the characteristics and strong point of Liaocheng Prefecture which is endowed with the large land and the abundant water source of the Huang He. The output of its farm and sideline products has occupied an important position in the province.

Cotton production is the strong point of the prefecture; therefore, it should make all-out efforts to carry out in-depth processing of the cotton and cotton by-products. First of all, the prefecture should increase undertakings of grain, cotton, oil-bearing seeds, vegetables, forestry, fruits, fishery, and animal husbandry so we can provide plenty raw materials for the processing industries. Now, many peasants have directly sold their raw materials that have yielded low economic returns and never been able to meet the need of consumers. Thus, efforts should be made to encourage peasants to develop their production structure with single sale outlet into one with multiple sale outlets and to vigorously carry out the in-depth processing of farm and sideline products. The processing in this regard should be geared to the need of urban areas and markets so as to unclog the channel of circulation and to promote the integration between urban and rural areas.

Attends Party Members Forum

[Text] On the eve of 1 July, Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, held a forum of some veteran party members and cadres and the responsible comrades of the Liaocheng Prefectural CPC Committee and its administrative office in Liaocheng to mark the birthday of the party.

In the forum, Comrade Liang Buting said: During my visit here, I have heard some reports and visited some localities and units. Generally, I feel that the situation in Liaocheng is excellent and the work achievements are great. Liaocheng is an old revolutionary base with a comparatively great number of veteran party members and cadres. Some of them are working in other provinces and in the central organs. This is an honor for Liaocheng Prefecture. Our party has many glorious traditions. We should keep and promote these traditions.

Comrade Liang Buting pointed out: Comrades working on the first line should respect veteran comrades. Respecting veteran comrades means respecting traditions, history, and experiences. Those veteran comrades who have retreated to the second and third lines should defend the comrades working on the first line. Defending comrades working on the first line means safeguarding the overall situation, stability, and unity. Both the new and veteran comrades should work as one, trust one another, and exert concerted efforts to do their work well.

LIANG BUTING ATTENDS FILM RECEPTION ON PARTY'S FOUNDING

[Text] In a speech given at a film reception sponsored by Dezhou Prefecture and Dezhou City to celebrate the 65th party founding anniversary, Liang Buting pointed out: Among the party members and cadres, we should promote the practice of giving consideration to the overall situation, paying attention to unity, and observing discipline while developing a political atmosphere of harmony, relaxation, mutual understanding, and friendship in the course of handling the relations in and outside the party and in various fields in an effort to mobilize all positive factors and to concentrate energies on advancing the four modernizations drive.

On the evening of 30 June, the Dezhou prefectural and city party, government, and Army organs held a film reception to celebrate the 65th party founding anniversary. Comrade Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, who was on an inspection tour to Dezhou Prefecture to give work guidance, attended the film reception and cordially met and talked with the responsible comrades of the Dezhou Prefectural and Dezhou City party, government, and Army organs, and the party members and cadres of organs.

On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee, he first extended festive greetings to the party organizations at all levels and to all party members and cadres in Dezhou Prefecture. He then gave a summary of the difficulties and setbacks of the party and its great success in winning over enemies in and outside the country and the party, particularly the great success in restoring order out of chaos and the tradition of seeking truth from facts since the smashing of the gang of four and the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, in conscientiously implementing policies and fruitfully solving the leftover major historical problems, and in implementing the party's policies on reform, opening to the outside world, and invigorating the economy. He said: At present, we have favorable conditions. We are now encountering a new situation and new tasks. The township-level party rectification has concluded and the village-level party rectification is about to begin. We should set forth new demands on the party construction and the party life.

He expressed hope that the party organizations at all levels will act in line with the new demands and achieve new success.

LIANG BUTING WRITES PREFACE TO PARTY HISTORY BOOK

SK010443 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Report on the preface written by Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, to the book chronicling events of the provincial CPC history entitled "A Most Significant Gift"]

[Text] On the occasion of the 65th anniversary of the CPC's founding, the book chronicling events of the Shandong Provincial CPC history has been formally published. This is a most significant gift presented on the occasion of the party's birthday by the broad masses of party members and the people throughout the province. The book records in broad outline the outstanding achievements of the revolutionary struggle during various periods between the founding of the CPC and the founding of the PRC by the party organizations in Shandong Province. The book also records the fighting style and features displayed by the Communist Party members in Shandong Province, who have advanced wave upon wave, unafraid of sacrifice, and have been heroic in making progress.

The publication of the book represents joy in the political life of the party organizations and the people throughout the province. Over several decades, the party organizations and the broad masses of party members have scored heroic, moving, tragic, and glorious achievements by leading masses to wage arduous and brave struggles, and have authored a stirring chapter of the party history. During the long years of revolutionary struggles, the party organizations and the people throughout Shandong Province have made marked contributions and great sacrifices. A large number of outstanding Communist Party members and people with lofty ideals died on the battlefields and many sons and daughters of the Chinese people fell under the enemies' sword. According to incomplete statistics, the number of martyrs whose names have been enlisted into the provincial party history reaches more than 220,000 and the number of nameless martyrs is uncountable. Those revolutionary martyrs long engaged in underground activities and their blood and corpses have enriched the fertile land of Shandong. Those martyrs, whether they have been enlisted into the provincial party history or not, are the heroes and elite of the party and the Chinese nationality. The spirit they have displayed will last forever and their names and achievements will be engraved on the bones and etched in the hearts of this and coming generations, and will be remembered by us forever.

Compiling the party history by following the principle of seeking truth from facts has a wider and more far-reaching significance. The chronicle of events is the skeleton and orderly and systematic arrangement of the provincial party history; the precious property of socialist spiritual civilization; and the teaching materials of education in the revolutionary tradition, worthy to be read by party and government cadres and the broad masses of party members, by the vast number of the people, and even by juveniles. Reading the chronicle of events, we may obtain knowledge from it and draw lessons from it so as to inherit and develop the glorious tradition created by revolutionaries of the older generation, to work or study hard under the new circumstance with the drive to conduct reforms and the policy of opening to the outside world, and to pioneer wider roads of advancement to strive to develop economic undertakings in the province and fulfill the party's general target and tasks.

The book chronicling events of the provincial party history, which will soon be published, consists of more than 200,000 words.

HENAN SECRETARY LEADS DELEGATION TO SHANGHAI

OW010344 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Text] The Henan provincial study-observation delegation to Jiangsu, Zhejiang, and Shanghai, led by Yang Xizong, secretary of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee, and Hu Tiyun, vice governor of Henan, arrived in Shanghai yesterday morning.

Jiang Zemin, mayor of Shanghai; Huang Ju, deputy secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee; Hu Lijiao, chairman of the Standing Committee of the Shanghai Municipal Peoples Congress; and Li Zhaoji, vice mayor of Shanghai, met and had cordial talks with the delegation.

Yang Xizong, secretary of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee, said: While in Shanghai, the Henan provincial study-observation delegation chiefly wishes to learn from Shanghai's economic restructure, urban economic management, and experience in economic construction and to strengthen the lateral economic ties between Henan and Shanghai.

Mayor Jiang Zemin warmly welcomed the delegation's arrival in Shanghai and expressed the wish that Secretary Yang Xizong tell generously about his experience in managing the province and cities.

The Henan delegation will visit some large construction projects here and hold pertinent talks with Shanghai's departments concerned.

SHANGHAI STATE-OWNED ENTERPRISES TO EXPAND

OW231556 Beijing XINHUA in English 1420 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] Shanghai, June 23 (XINHUA) -- State-owned enterprises in Shanghai, China's largest industrial city, will expand their production in the next five years by improving their economic results and accumulating funds for technical transformation rather than by depending on state investment.

The Shanghai No 5 iron and steel plant, one of the 90 enterprises with annual output value exceeding 100 million yuan, plans to accumulate 400 million yuan for 20 key technical transformation items during the 1986-90 period, in order to increase its output value by 600 million yuan.

The special steel plant, among the first batch of enterprises that carried out reforms of the economic system, produced a total output value of 860 million yuan last year. During the 1981-85 period, the plant completed more than 300 technical transformation items, which brought a 19 percent increase in output value and a 76 percent increase in profit compared with the previous five years.

About 90 percent of the investment for the transformation of outdated equipment came from funds accumulated by the plant, said Hou Shuting, its director. The steel plant, like other important enterprises, lacked initiative and vigor in their development owing to the strict control of their operations by the central government.

Thanks to the reforms of the past few years, the decision-making power of enterprises has gradually been increased, and there have been initial changes in such practices as unified state purchasing and marketing, unified receiving and allocating of funds by the state and "eating out of the same big pot". These changes have served to invigorate enterprises and at the same time put more responsibilities on them.

According to Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the country's Seventh Five-Year Plan, enterprises especially big and medium-sized ones, "should be turned into relatively independent economic entities, into socialist commodity manufacturers and dealers having full authority for management and full responsibility for their own profits and losses" in the next five years. Initial reforms that have been carried out included adopting a taxation system instead of demanding that enterprises turn over all their profits, allowing enterprises to retain more money from increased profits, delegating more decision-making power to the managers and linking the interests of the state, enterprise and individual employee together through various forms of the economic responsibility system.

"The enterprises have come to realize that the better economic results they achieve, the more profits they make and the more quickly they can expand their production," said Xia Zhenfan, an official of the city's economic management committee. However, too much control and interference from the government administration are still the main headaches for many state-owned enterprises. The No 5 iron and steel plant, for instance, produces some 1.2 million tons of steel and 500,000 tons of special steel a year, but it can only sell 6,000 tons by itself.

Measures have been taken to solve the problem. The city's shipbuilding industry has been given more autonomy in production over the past few years, including signing contracts directly with foreign companies, in light of the need to meet the competition in the international market. Managers and directors who hope that the new economic mechanism will bring vitality to their enterprises are also aware of the danger they may face. They can not turn a deaf ear to Premier Zhao's warning that enterprises which incur losses owing to mismanagement will be reshuffled or closed down by 1990. "The situation will force those responsible to pay more attention to management and economic results", said Shi Dingxiang, director of the Shanghai No 12 cotton mill. The enterprise, which has 120,000 spindles and over 1,000 looms, won last year's national management prize for its efforts to develop new products, improve their quality, reduce costs and increase profits.

SHANGHAI MAYOR ADDRESSES COMMENDATION MEETING

OW011205 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Excerpts] On the afternoon of 30 June, outstanding communists and representatives of advanced party branches from all fronts in Shanghai joined leaders of all municipal departments, commissions, offices, districts, counties, and bureaus and veteran comrades who had been admitted to the party before the war of resistance against Japan and tested during the course of protracted revolutionary struggle in a gathering at the (Huji) Workers Theater to commemorate the 65th founding anniversary of the CPC and commend outstanding communists and advanced party branches of the municipality.

Leading comrades of the municipal CPC Committee attending the meeting were Jiang Zemin, Huang Ju, Chen Tiedi, Sun Guizhang, Zhang Dinghong, Zeng Qinghong, Mao Jingquan, and Shi Zhusan. Huang Ju, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, presided over the meeting.

After Comrade Zhao Qizheng, deputy director of the Organization Department of the municipal CPC Committee, briefed the meeting on the process of selecting the outstanding communists and advanced party branches, he read a decision of the municipal CPC Committee conferring the title of outstanding communist on (Guo Xiaoda) and 12 other comrades, and of advanced party branch on the general party branch of the (Fuxing) special train crew under the Shanghai train station and 9 other party branches.

Jiang Zemin, deputy secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, made a speech at the meeting, entitled "Carry Out Reform and Exploration in the Course of Advance, Compete With One Another in Being the Vanguard of Our Times."

[Begin Jiang recording] On behalf of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, I extend my warm congratulations and tribute to the outstanding communists and the representatives of the advanced party branches commended today. Thank you, comrades, for playing your exemplary role as communists in unifying and leading the masses and advancing together with them, thereby adding more glory to our party's banner and contributing to the revitalization of Shanghai and the prosperity of the motherland.

The ongoing reform is a penetrating transformation and the only way to accomplish the modernization program and reinvigorate the Chinese nation. Shanghai should be a pace-setter in urban economic structural reform. In developing Shanghai's economy, it is necessary to persistently carry out reform; this is a binding duty as well as a severe test for all communists. All communists should stand at the forefront of reform and be vanguards of reform.

In carrying out reform and exploration in the course of advance for the party's great cause, the motherland's prosperity, the people's happiness, and Shanghai's revitalization, let us compete with one another to be the vanguards of our time and lead the masses of people in winning new victories! [end recording]

The meeting closed amidst the majestic strains of the Internationale.

ZHEJIANG MILITIA PUT UNDER LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

OW011403 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] As of 30 June, the work of transfering People's Armed Forces departments to the jurisdiction of local governments had been completed in 89 countries, cities, and districts in Zhejiang. In the process of transfer; PLA units and local governments showed support and understanding for each other and took prompt action to solve practical problems.

Wang Fang, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, who heads the provincial leading group of transferring People's Armed Forces departments, time and again presided at meetings to study and map out arrangements for the transfer. Local party and government leaders at various levels and departments concerned took the initiative to solve school, employment, and other problems for 352 families of People's Armed Forces department cadres.

To improve the quality of militia organizations, a total of 2.2 million yuan funds were appropriated for rebuilding or expanding office buildings dormitories, and militia armories and building supplementary facilities for militia training bases. The provincial military district, military subdistricts, and People's Armed Forces departments set strict demands in selecting cadres for People's Armed Forces departments.

XIAMEN SEZ DEVELOPS TIES WITH OTHER AREAS

[Text] Fuzhou, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Local governments and enterprises throughout China are participating in 576 joint ventures in the Special Economic Zone in the port city of Xiamen, in Fujian Province on China's coast.

The domestic investment has come as the zone continues to attract foreign investment and increase China's international trade, a local official said today.

Xiamen is one of four special economic zones set up by the Chinese Government in 1980 to attract foreign investment and import advanced technology and management as well as expand exports. Since the founding of the Special Economic Zone in 1980, 107 Sino-foreign joint ventures, co-management enterprises and entirely foreign-backed businesses have begun operations in Xiamen.

Some of the joint projects with agencies within China involve direct investment, some involve manufacturing in Xiamen of some parts of goods assembled elsewhere, and some involve agreements for sharing of technological information. The cooperation has brought managers and technicians from throughout China to the zone, helping to reduce personnel shortages.

Agreements with domestic agencies have also fueled Xiamen's construction boom. About 68 percent of the city's construction work is done by 63,000 workers who have come there from other parts of China.

The cooperation has also helped Xiamen retool its existing enterprises and has provided the port with manufactured goods and farm produce from elsewhere in China. Other parts of China have also benefited from the cooperation, the official said. For example, technicians from other provinces have learned overseas technological and market information through contacts with foreign businessmen in Xiamen. Some provinces have been able to expand exports through contacts made at the port.

GUANGDONG, FOREIGN INVESTMENT, TECHNOLOGY PROBLEMS DETAILED

HK011249 Guangzhou KAIFANG in Chinese No 5, 8 May 86 pp 11-13

[Article by Yang Dezhong of the provincial Foreign Economic Relations Commission: "Take Advantage of Guangdong's Strong Points, Make Effective Use of Foreign Investment -- A Discussion on Guangdong's Basic Experiences in Using Foreign Investment" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Between 1979 and the end of 1985, Guangdong signed over 60,000 foreign investment and technology import contracts. It actually used over $2.6 billion in foreign investment, including more than $2.5 billion in direct investment from foreign businessmen. Guangdong set up and started more than 3,000 enterprises and projects that used foreign investment. Its achievements thus rank first in China. We have gained experiences and learned lessons after years of practical work. From the province as a whole, the most fundamental experience we have gained is that we should correctly understand and take advantage of the province's strong points.

Guangdong has two strong points in using foreign investment: First, it has favorable natural and historical conditions; and second, it has policy advantages. Located next to the South China Sea, Guangdong has a mild climate and an abundant supply of agricultural products. Its industry and agriculture are considerable developed. Adjacent to Hong Kong and Macao, it is home to numerous nationals residing abroad. Also, its transport services to other parts of the province and other parts of China are convenient. It has long been an important trade port of China. Together with special and flexible measures, all these favorable natural, geographical, and historical conditions have put Guangdong's foreign economic activities in a very favorable position.

Under these circumstances, the strong points of various localities, departments, and trades therefore become the province's manifold, multilayer and diversified strong points. As they interrelate and interact with each other, these strong points share the same problems regarding weak points and they change from being one to being the other under certain conditions. In order to fully use various strong points, under the leadership of dialectical materialist ideology, we must seriously conduct in-depth and scientific research and planning. Guangdong has developed the work of using foreign investment and importing technology in an uneven way. Results vary greatly from place to place. This is a major reason for understanding, in a dialectical way, our own strong points.

In order to correctly understand the strong points, we must proceed from the overall situation. Some local strong points are good in a certain area but do not work when applied to the overall situation. Some strong points are shared by many localities. But if we exploit these local strong points, we may not help or could even hinder other localities in developing their own strong points. Therefore, we must examine and integrate local strong points with the overall strong points. Only those that will benefit the overall situation (or at least will not harm the overall situation) and localities or will not harm other localities' strong points can be taken as real strong points. If we take advantage of local strong points but disregard their influence on the overall situation, there will inevitably be harmful results. The incident of Hainan's automobile sales is a lesson for us. We must proceed from the province's and the state's overall situation and, at the same time, be sensitive to the changing world and understand the international market. Only thus can we clearly understand our real strong points.

Judging from the practical experience of the province, we must do well in the following issues in order to correctly take advantage of our strong points:

FIRST, WE MUST INTEGRATE USE WITH RESTRICTIONS AND MAKE RESTRICTIONS SERVE BETTER.

What are the grounds for such a statement?

First, to open up to the outside world, to actively use foreign investment, and to import technology are important and necessary complementary aspects of our four modernizations. History has proved that the closed-door national policy is wrong. It is also wrong for us not to pay attention to self-reliance, take everything foreign to satisfy all our needs, and tend to "buy" our modernizations by relying on foreign exchange. The experience of some developing countries has shown that this does not work. They relied on foreign investment so heavily that they eventually became debt-ridden.

Second, we should repay the foreign investment and imported technology in different ways. Our present repayment capability is not strong enough. Our province's annual gross foreign exchange revenue is only about $2 billion. Our international trade balance will be affected if our total repayment exceeds 15 percent of gross foreign exchange revenue. Moreover, it is impossible that in investment, both the Chinese and foreign parties share the same goals and views on key points. Intrinsically, the goal of a foreign party is to export its surplus capital and technology and to make use of China's material conditions (such as resources, labor, the market, and so on) for expanding its production and sales, in order to occupy a larger share of the market and earn more profits. Some of them even take this opportunity to sell us their outdated equipment. Therefore, the struggle between our "use" and "nonuse" is a long-term objective.

Third, we have a strong self-reliance capability which, in some areas is equal to or even surpasses the advanced world level in terms of production and technology. To neglect this point and satisfy all our needs by imports will, on the one hand, waste our hard-earned foreign exchange and, on the other, make inappropriate concessions to foreigners in one area or another (such as excessive preferential policies), which is the most important of the two points. This will also hinder and suppress the development of our production, science and technology.

Fourth, to import foreign investment and technology will help us develop an open-style economy, improve our science and technology and management levels, improve the industrial and product structure, increase the foreign exchange income through export expansion, create more job opportunities, invigorate the market, and so on. At the same time, however, this will bring us new problems in the areas of resources utilization, the market, export quotas, and bilateral and multilateral relations. This will also bring about some maladies of the capitalist society, which are harmful to us and will develop some instability factors in our society and political and economic structures.

Proceeding from this, to integrate the use of foreign investment with restrictions is a matter of principle which we must uphold in implementing our work. We must first import foreign investment and technology in an active yet restricted way, and make it applicable to every aspect of foreign investment work. Only thus can we exploit our strong points.

Second, we must integrate "opening up" with "supervison," and "open up" only when we "supervise" well.

In order to import foreign capital and technology in an active yet restricted way, we must first emancipate our minds, be determined in carrying out the opening up policy, streamline organization, decentralize decision-making power, implement guidance and planning, and fully mobilize initiative at all levels. At the same time, we must also strengthen our macroeconomic control and supervision and really use foreign investment well to promote even development throughout the province. Over the years, the province has made remarkable achievements in extending the limits of authority, so that the province's work in using foreign investment and importing technology has been vigorously developed, but we have also learned the following three lessons:

First, plans were made at will. Many units did not plan seriously or carry out plans or even if they did, the scale and area of foreign investment were out of control.

Second, regions and departments were separated and plans were not made in a systematic way. Most plans were made according to local interests of various cities, districts, and departments. They did not integrate with plans of the whole industry. Therefore, investment projects could not support each other or from a series of development plans for a particular trade.

Third, the decision of project examination was made one-sidedly. Facts have shown that to define the limits of authorities at various level based on investment amount is not scientific. This is because the amount only shows the scale of investment rather than the proportion of various types of investment. Therefore, it is more difficult to carry out those plans which are flexible in nature. This is one of the major reasons for excessively developing non-productive projects.

Third, we must carry out work in varied ways and focus our work on importing direct investment from overseas.

China uses foreign investment in three basic forms: The first is direct investment from overseas, including joint ventures, cooperative operations, joint development, sole proprietorship, compensation trade, processing and assembling, and so on.

The second is bank loans, including intermediate and long-term as well as medium and low interest loans granted by foreign governments and international financial institutions, free foreign exchange, various types of development funds, relief funds, and so on. The third is commercial loans. Over the years, the province has focused its work on importing direct investment from overseas, particularly in the forms of processing ans assembling, cooperative operations, and joint ventures. This is because, through the second and third methods, the foreign party can raise many restrictive terms which are unfavorable for us in using the investment or we have high costs, and because our province has many favorable conditions for absorbing direct investment.

But we should carry out specific analyses, choose the good ones, and make measures suit local conditions. Processing and assembling is an example. Our party's strong points in this form of investment are that it requires a small investment sum from us, can bring quick results, provided many job opportunities, and suits the province's actual conditions. But our weak points in this form of investment are that we have imported a lot o equipment but little advanced technology, we have a lot of labor-intensive projects but few technology-intensive ones, our imports did not help our technolcgical transformation of the whole trade, we were greatly affected by the supply of foreign businessmen's raw materials, our production became unstable, and so on.

It is worth paying close attention to the fact that last year, our processing industry with imported materials dropped for the first time in recent years. Therefore, we should widen our field of vision, especially when we judge our future key development projects such as energy resources, transport, telecommunications, and the raw materials industry. Generally speaking, these projects are weak in earning foreign exchange and there are still problems in repayment of the direct investment in these areas. Thus, we should strive to get some intermediate and long-term, and medium and low interest loans from foreign countries, or lease the equipment.

FOURTH, WE MUST INTEGRATE LINKING UP TO THE HINTERLAND, AND ALLOW SPREADING.

The province integrates the use of foreign investment with the comprehensive development of linking up with the hinterland, thereby providing favorable conditions in the areas of capital, resources, technology, markets and so on. In particular, linking up imports with the hinterland is more brisk in the special economic zones and the economically open areas along the coast. This has helped promote the economic development of the hinterland.

However, the economically open areas along the coast have just started to spread things to the interior and overseas. Not only do they have few products to export and a weak foreign exchange earning capability, but they have also "transferred" only a small amount of technology and products. One of the most important issues is that generally there is not enough importance attached to the assimilation, innovation, and transfer of the imported technology. For instance, Guangzhou since 1980 has imported equipment and technology worth over $300 million, 216 production lines, and more that 6,400 sets of major advanced equipment. But the city only assililated and made innovations on 1 percent of them. Enevitably, this becomes a serious problem.

There are many reasons for the resulting situation of paying no attention to the work. First, we did not strictly distinguish technology imports of a technological trade nature from equipment imports of a commodity trade nature. In stead, generally we took equipment imports as technology imports. Second, we purrued short-term interests and did not consider the long-term ones. Third, we did not implement our management system well. Regions and departments were separated from each other and their rights, responsibilities, and interests were inconsistent. Fourth, science and research were irrational. These departments were separated from the production ones, so that the former cared little about the advance of production technology while the latter often found their ability falling shout of their ambitions. Fifth, we lacked policies and measures which encouraged and supported the work of assimilating, making innovations, and popularizing technology. In fact, provided we attach great importance to it, there is plenty of room for us to maneuver. In August last year, Foshan City invited bids on technology. Through the meeting they held, the city solved many technological problems by relying on China's technological forces, as well as assimilated many types of imported technology and equipment. This is a sucessful example.

FIFTH, WE MUST INTEGRATE "IMPORTS" WITH "EXPORTS" AND MORE TOWARD THE WORLD.

On the one hand, we actively import foreign investment and technology, develop the province's open-style economy which is marked by integration of the interior with overseas, produce more goods for the international market, and integrate our use of foreign investment with foreign trade. While developing the productive, technology-intensive, and foreign exchange-earning projects, we should also appropriately develop projects which are for China's interior and are non-productive but are able to earn foreign exchange, can meet China's urgent needs, utilize particularly advanced technology, or can take the place of imported projects. Therefore, our province will gradually form an open-style economic structure which takes an open-style economy as its guide and core, integrates the interior with overseas, and will be marked by multilayers and diversification.

On the other hand, we must be determined and systematically export overseas capital, technology, equipment, and labor. At present the province has established over 100 enterprises overseas. We should also greatly develop various types of overseas joint ventures and solely owned enterprises and create a new situation in contracting out projects and exporting labor. We should also use foreign capital, technology, resources, and the market on a wider scope and in greater depth. We should manifest our strong points to the world, to earn more foreign exchange for the four modernizations.

HEILONGJIANG'S SUN WEIBEN ATTENDS OPENING OF MUSEUM

SK020344 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Execerpts] Today marks the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC. The Heilongjianh provincial revolutionary museum was officially established and opened to the public this morning.

Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, cut the ribbon for the Heilongjaning provincial revolutionary museum amid the popping of firecrackers. After the ribbon-cutting ceremony, provincial leading comrades, including Sun Weiben, Chen Yunlin, Huang Feng, Wang Zhao, Zhang Xiangling, Zhang Lin, Zhao Zhenhua, Li Min, and Qi Guiyuan, provincial-level retired cadres, including Zhao Dezun and Wang Yilun, and veteran soldiers of the northeast anti-Japanese joint forces, including Wang Minggui, Zhang Fengqi, (Zhu Xinyang), (Gao Chengru), (Zhao Shangpu), (Li Guilin), (Gao Yulin), (Song Renxuan), (Xing Defan) and (Dong Changyi), toured the exhibition together with the masses.

The Heilongjianh provincial revolutionary museum in Harbin covers a floor space of 3,640 square meters, including 1,978 square meters of exhibition rooms. On display at the 3 exhibition rooms opened today were 271 historical photos, 412 revolutionary relics, 180 paintings and calligraphic works of veteran cadres, and 200 paintings on the anti-Japanese joint forces painted by artist (Zhao Huasheng).

JINGJI RIBAO REPORTS SHENYANG ECONOMIC REFORMS

OW230946 Beijing XINHUA in English 0806 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 23 (XINHUA) -- Three experiments carried out in Shenyang City, China's trial base for comprehensive reforms of the economic structure, have produced good results over the past two years, according to today's "ECONOMIC DAILY".

The first experiment was to lease some state-owned and collectively-run enterprises to individuals and collectives for better management. The reform began in the commercial and service sectors and then spread to industrial enterprises.

Some 110 such enterprises had been leased out by the end of last year, and all had achieved good results, the paper said.

According to a survey of 32 enterprises which carried out the reform earlier, their total profits made in 1985 increased 3.3 times over the previous year.

Another reform was to link an enterprise's economic results with the interests of the employees by letting workers buy shares in their own factories.

The shares are divided into three types: state shares indicating state investment, collective shares and private shares.

Under the scheme, if an enterprise achieves good economic results, workers enjoy share dividends from both collective and private shares, while state revenue is also boosted. If an enterprise incurs a loss, the workers earn no dividends, and the factory must make up the loss from future profits.

The Shenyang small compressor plant, which first tried out the shareholding scheme last June, enjoyed an increase of 26.6 percent in profits last year, compared with the previous year, the paper said.

The third experiment piloted in Shenyang involved the city's regulation of enterprise bankruptcies, which was worked out last year. Enterprises which had suffered losses for several years running would be given a worning of bankruptcy. Three enterprises were given such warnings last August. As a result, most of the city's 500 enterprises that had losses in 1985 showed good prospects of earning profits this year, the paper said.

ARTICLES VIEW PROBLEMS IN IMPLEMENTING 5-YEAR PLAN

Rises in Quotas Viewed

SK280426 Shenyang DONGBEI JINGJI BAO In Chinese No 46, 13 May 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Not To Raise the Quotas at Each Level" -- the first problem which we must pay attention to in the implementation of theSeventh 5-Year Plan]

[Excerpts] At present, the leading organs at all levels and the economic departmenst and enterprises of the three provinces and one region in the northeast economic zone are implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan of the state and formulating or revising their own 5-Year plans. The guidelines, principles, plicies, targets, and measures of the CPC Central Committee and State Council on the Seventh 5-Year Plan have won greater support among the people and played a tremendous role in encouraging and guiding the people. However, judging from the current specific situations, there are some problems worthy of our attention. One of the prominent problems is that some localities, departments and enterprises, while determining their fighting objectives, have a tendency to neglect overall efficiency and coordinated development, simply pursing the rate of economic development and raising the quotas of output value at each level.

It has been learned that under the plan, the total industrial and agricultural output of the three provinces of Liaoning, Jilin, Heilongjiang will be balued at 230 billion yuan by 1990, showing an average annual increase of 8 percent; and the national income of the three will total 121.5 billion yuan, an average annual increase of 8.4 percent. Analyzing the situation of the economic foundation of the northeast region, we can see that the above targets are slightly higher than the state planned targets, but it is absolutely possible for us to realize these targets through our efforts. One of the problems we are worrying about is that some cities, prefectures (leagues), counties, banners (districts), and some trades and professions have raised the quotas of output value of their enterprises. Their quotas have even greatly exceeded the planneed quotas of the state and their own provinces and regions. The northeast economic zone planning office of the State Council has directly investigated seven cities, one county, and three large enterprises' intgrated companies and some enterprises and has found that their output value quotas were increased at each level. The quotas for the growth of annual output value of units at the city and prefectural level were generally higher than 10 percent and that of county-level units ranged from 12 to 13 percent. The quotas werw as high as 15 percent in some trades and enterprises. Of course, it is impossible to even up the output value quotas and the growth rate of defferent localities, departments and enterprises. Their quotas and growth rates may be high or low, rapid or slow. However, raising the quotas of output value at each level is abnormal.

We are not neglecting output value. However, one-sided stress on output value cannot reflect economic results. We are not neglecting the growth rate, but we must not subjectively pursue growth rates regardless of objective possibilities.

The grand objective of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council on quadrupling the total industrial and agricultural output value by the year 2000 is a strategic policy decision for China's whole national economy. The imbalanced development of various localities, departments, and enterprises objectively exist in various parts of the country, including the northeast region. According to the state unified plan, some localities and fields should make breakthroughs while others should have control over their quotas. The Seventh 5-Year Plan of the state has set forth major and general demands as well as priorities on the mandatory and guidance plans of the various provinces, regions, departments and trades. The assessment of the development achievements of localities, departments, and enterprises should be conducted in line with reality and specific conditions. All enterprises, departments, and localities should conscientiously analyze and study according to subjective conditions the problems they should solve in particular. They sould pay special attention to grasping one or two key problems related to technological progress and the structure of readjustment, which can help solve many other problems, and should concentrate their efforts on making breakthroughs. By no means should they rush headlong into mass action. What we seek is comprehensive benefits in the economic, social, and ecological sectors and realistic development, not only the growth rate of output value of quadrupling ahead of schedule. To persist in carrying out reform, we must have a comparatively better-off economy and a good social environment. Therefore, we should seek great benefits through developing the entire economy in a sustained, steady, coordinated and sound manner. The tense situation resulting from the dislocations in the economic sphere may obstruct the smooth progress of reform.

The implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan is being specifically arranged. Although planning and economic work conferences of all levels have been held, there is still much work to do in order to make concrete arrangements. All localities, departments, and enterprises should deeply analyze and expound on their conditions and environment for development, andoul make their plans and quotas dovetail with the plans of the state as well as their own provinces and regions. We should rapidly readjust the quotas of output value which have been raised improperly, the earlier the better. It is better to make the readjustment before incurring losses and getting into a difficult position. This is the demand of the overall situations of reform and the four modernizations.

Investment Structure Changes

[Commentator's article: "Make Up Our Minds To Achieve a Readjustment in the Investment Structure" -- the second problem which we must pay attention to in the implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan]

[Excerpts] In order to ensure a sustained, steady, and coordinated development of the national economy and an economic situation characterized by vitality, efficiency, and benefits, we should pay attention to not only properly defining the scale of investment in fixed assets but also rationalizing the investment structure, and make the most of limited funds to score the best economic results. Investment in northeast China accounts for 10 percent of the total investment defined in the state Seventh 5-Year Plan. How to use such a large sum of money and when to spend it are questions of extremely great importance.

Problems in which the structure of investment in fixed assets is irrational have cropped up among various localities and departments in arranging and carrying out their plans for investment. so, we must make up our minds to do a good job in readjusting the investment structure at the outset of the Seventh 5-Year Plan period in order to avoid detours in the future. Investgations show that the main problems concerning the irrational investment structure are as follows:

First, investments in infrastructural facilities and basic industries such as energy resources, transport, and raw materials are lower than the increases in investments in other trades. From the standpoint of the investment structure arranged by the state-owned economic departments in northeast China in their Seventh 5-Year Plans, we realize that investment in energy resources, transport, and raw materials amounts to 33 percent of the total investment, an incrase of about 6 percent over the figure of the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. From the standpoint of the investment structure of the whole society, we know that investment in energy resources, transport, and raw materials only accounts for 24 percent, and the remaining 76 percent is invested in other fields, most of which is invested in processing industries that have a high consumption of energy resources and raw materials.

Second, investment in nonproductive construction projects is rising. However, investment in urban infrastructural facilities in service of production and the people's livelihood does not show big increases; on the contrary, investment in the construction of office buildings, auditoriums, and hotels increases by a wide margin. The vigorous upsurge in the construction of office buildings, auditoriums, and hotels on a large scale which started in the Sixth 5-Year Plan period still prevails at present. Investigations made by the Liaoning provincial departments concerned indicated that more than 80 first- and second-class hotels occupying an area of 120,000 square memters of floor space are planned to be built during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, some of which are ongoing projects not completed during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. The total investment in these projects is 1.5 nillion yuan. We not only need a great deal of building materials to construct these projects but also must use foreign exchange to buy some high quality materials for them. Many hotels have been built or rebuilt over the past few years. Most of them are suffering losses due to the fact that consumption is high and utilization rate is low. Therefore, it is impossible for us to score good results if we continue to increase such projects.

Third, investment in processing industries focusing on producing primary products is on the high side. For instance, the flax, chemical fiber, and petroleum industries have made a few investments in developing precision and intensive processing. In particular, neighborhood industrial enterprises and town and township industrial enterprises have established many extra-budgetary processing industries. So far, these enterprises continue to blindly make investments and development due to their failure to improve macroeconomic management.

Fourth, enterprises that have a high consumption of energy resources are under contruction in areas where energy resources are insufficient.

Fifth, major projects between different trades and between different regions are not coordinated and the distribution of productive forces is not reasonable. For instance, Hulun Buir League's raw coal production capacity will be able to reach 16 million tons by 1990. The league fails to find outlets for its 6 million tons of raw coal on the premise that it can only assimilate 10 million tons.

An important principle set forth in the state Seventh 5-Year Plan is to appropriately fix the scale of investment in fixed assets, to rationally readjust the investment structure, and to strive to increase the return on investments. At present, when we are formulating specific plans, leading organs and departments in charge of economic work should firmly grasp the work of readjusting the investment structure in accordance with the demands of the overall situation in order to ensure that neither the opportune time is bungled nor phenomena are created again in which the investment structure is out of control.

LIAONING SIGNS FOREIGN INVESTMENT CONTRACTS

OW042224 Beijing XINHUA in English 1531 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Shenyang, July 4 (XINHUA) -- Northeast China's Liaoning Province signed 120 contracts to use foreign investment and technology during the first five months this year, according to the provincial foreign relations and trade committee.

The contracts totalled 292.92 million U.S. dollars.

An official from the committee said the province has always given priority to the transformation of its existing enterprises while using foreign investment and technology.

Among the contracts, 80 percent are production projects, and 70 percent of them can provide products for export.

DEMONSTRATORS PROTEST U.S. 'INTERFERENCE'

HK070808 Hong Kong AFP in English 0738 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 7 (AFP) -- Some 150 people demonstrated here on Monday against what they called interference in Taiwan's internal affairs by four U.S. senators, witnesses said.

Some 150 members of the Patriotic Association of the Republic of China demonstrated in front of the American Institute in Taiwan and delivered a letter addressed to Senators Edward Kennedy, Claiborne Pell, Steven Solarz and Jim Leach, offering them an all-expense-paid trip "to see the real Taiwan." Legislators, city councilmen, businessmen, retired servicemen, professors, and students were among the protestors, who waved the flags of Taiwan and the United States and placards bearing slogans protesting against foreign interference in Taiwan's internal affairs.

The four senators, noted supporters of opposition groups in Taiwan, together with Senator Robert Torricelli, organised in Washington on May 19 a committee for the promotion of democracy. They have also on various occasions asked Taipei to lift martial law, allow the opposition to form political parties, and uphold human rights.

An official of the political section of the institute, a quasi-official agency handing relations between Taiwan and the United States, which do not have diplomatic relations, accepted the letter from five representatives of the protesters. "We protest your interfering with our internal affairs and we invite you here to see the real Taiwan," said the letter, copies of which were made available to the press. The senators "would hurt the hearts of the Chinese from Taiwan and damage the traditional friendship between our two countries if you should be deceived and manipulated by a bunch of ambitious politicians and criminals who found no way to survive in the free and democratic society here," the letter said.

EXECUTIVE YUAN FORBIDS CITIZENS TO VISIT PRC

[Text] Taipei, July 2 (CNA) -- The Executive Yuan has reiterated its stand that no citizens of the Republic of China are allowed to visited the China mainland. It is inappropriate for the people here to visit the China mainland because the nation is still in an extraordinary situation and the Peiping regime is still very anxious to drive wedges amaong the people here, the Yuan said in a written response to an interpellation by legislator Chiang Peng-chen.

In recent years, the Peiping regime has stepped up its efforts to lure people who have relatives under its control to visit the China mainland. To prevent the people here from falling into its trap, the government prohibits citizens of this nation to visit the China mainland, the Yuan said.

Meanwhile, according to informed sources from the China mainland, Peiping has tightened its security measures to prevent more of its pilots from seeking freedom in free China, and these measures have seriously affected the morale of its Air Force, the Yuan said.

The Yuan also said that in order to encourage more Red Chinese pilots to seek freedom in this nation, the ROC Government will not change its current practice of giving cash awards to those Red Chinese pilots who fly their aircraft here.

CHEN MUHUA EXPLAINS RENMINBI DEVALUATION

HK060101 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 6 Jul 86 p 1

[Dispatch from correspondent Juan Chi-hung: "Chen Muhua Explains Renminbi Readjustment"]

[Text] Beijing, 5 Jul -- The Bank of China announced today that the exchange rate of the renminbi [RMB] against other currencies has been readjusted downward by 15.8 percent. This is the biggest recent readjustment of the currency.

According to our information, the newly readjusted exchange rates are now as follows: $100 to RMB371.29; 100 pounds sterling to RMB574.03; and HK$100 to RMB47.54.

Chen Muhua, state couneillor and director of the People's Bank of China, gave the following explanation of this today when receiving delegations to the annual IMF consultative meeting in the Zigyang room at Zhongnanhai: We have carried out domestic price readjustments in the wake of the reform of China's economic structure and the development of commodity economy. In view of the price changes in the domestic and international markets, it is quite normal to make a corresponding readjustment of the exchange rates. Apart from that, it is also essential to make an appropriate readjutment of the exchange rates in order to encourage exports and achieve a balance in international income and expenditures.

Chen Muhua said that following this readjustment, the exchange rate of the RBM will be kept correspondingly stable.

Apart from encouraging exports, this devaluation of the RMB has also had another effect. An analyst at an international finance research center told our reporter that the decision to devalue the RMB was taken in order to control imports, because China's foreign exchange reserves have fallen in the past two quarters. The devaluation will cause a certain degree of inflation, while production costs of foreign businessmen investing in China will rise.

However, another official explained that China made the decision and estimated the impact when it held a conference of senior cadres in April. He said that China can bear the inflationary effects of the devaluation.

HSIN WAN PAO Views Decision

HK060931 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 6 Jul 86 p 1

["New Talk" column: "Renminbi, Exports, International Income and Expenditures"]

[Text] Commencing yesterday, the exchange rate of the renminbi [RMB] against other currencies has been readjusted downward by 15.8 percent. This is the biggest recent readjustment of currency.

Over the past 2 years or so, the exchange rate of the RMB has been continuously readjusted downward. Take the exchange rate against the U.S. dollar for example. It was readjusted downward from RMB2.6 to $1 some time ago to RMB3.083 to $1 in October 1985. The current readjustment has gone downward further to RMB3.796 to $1, the biggest one over the past 2 years.

Chen Muhua, state counsillor and director of the People's Bank of China, explained that it is quite normal to make a readjustment of the exchange rates and that the exchange rate of the RMB will be kept correspondingly stable.

The devaluation of the RMB was expected. Although the devaluation of over 10 percent was unexpected, it is comprehensible. It is generally acknowledged that the devaluation of the RMB was done to stimulate exports, maintain a balance of international income and expenditures, develop tourism and check the reselling of foreign exchange in the black market.

The development of the four modernizations has been accompanied with the further opening to the outside world. The volume of China's imports and exports has increased remarkably. Imports and exports in 1985 totaled over $69.6 billion, a 30 pecent increase over 1984. However, the volume of exports was lower than that of imports. Last year there was a trade deficit of $14.9 billion. Imports and exports in the first quarter of this year totaled over $14.6 billion, an increase of 3.9 percent over 1985. Nevertheless, we failed to maintain a balance of trade because there was still a trade deficit of $2.9 billion.

The phenomenon is due to excessive imports, particularly the import of consumer goods, and also to the low competitiveness of the export goods. In order to maintain a balance of international income and expenditures, it is necessary to readjust the exchange rates and encourage exports. Actually, China has always maintained a favorable balance of its non-trade foreign exchange income and expenditures. Last year, foreign exchange income from non-trade items exceeded expenditures by $3.4 billion, which included income from tourism. The issue is that the surplus in this field cannot offset the deficits in imports and exports. Moreover, the rampant reselling of foreign exchange in the black market of a number of open cities is also the reason for reduction of China's foreign exchange. Although there is still a difference between the newly readjusted rate and the black market rate, we believe that the measure taken will help check the black market activities to a certain extent.

China's foreign exchange reserve now totals around $10 billion, which is an optimum amount. A balance of revenue and expenditure is expected this year and the development of China's economy is steady and normal. Under such circumstances, the huge deficits in imports and exports have become the major problems in the national economy as a whole. A period of time is required to enhance the competitiveness of the export commodities and to establish a set of export production systems. Under the condition that we cannot reduce the import of certain goods such as machinery equipment during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, besides exercising control over the import of some commodities, we cannot but cut down the import of other necessary goods to make up the deficits. For this reason, it is necessary to reasonably readjust the value of the RMB.

HONG KONG BOWS TO U.S. 'PROTECTIONIST SENTIMENT'

HK010355 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 2 Jul 86 pp 1, 2

[By Paul Baran]

[Text] Bowing to protectionist pressure, Hong Kong has agreed to a new five-year textile agreement with the U.S. that cuts back overall exports to last year's levels and extends coverage to include silk and ramie.

But the new agreement, prepared early yesterday in Washington does not contain the harshest of the U.S. proposals -- a three-year freeze on export levels of Multi-Fibre Arrangement [MFA] -covered cotton, wool and man-made fibre garments.

As expected, the previously quota-free fabrics of silk, ramie,linen and jute will come under restraint, effective August 1, at last year's levels, a clear indication the U.S. will push for their inclusion in the on-going MFA talks in Geneva. The MFA expires at the end of this month.

Under the accord, which takes effect retroactively from January 1 and runs to December 31, 991, across-the-board growth rates range from 0.75 percent this year to 2.5 percent in 1991. The MFA allows annual growth of six per cent.

"Any growth rate is better than none," said the director general of the Federation of Hong Kong industries, Mr Lawrence Mills.

He said that since growth levels are already low, industry has been "psychologically prepared" for the new terms for some time.

"We will find it difficult, but not intolerable," he said, generally echoing the Industry-wide reaction.

As an executive of a major U.S. buying office said: "Nobody likes it but it won't kill us."

U.S. buying offices for American labels sourcing locally have been sending huge amounts of non-MFA items to the U.S. in expectation of the new quotas, which will be allocated locally on a past performance basis.

Secretary for Trade and Industry Eric Ho, who attended the four-day talks in Washington along with the entire Textile Advisory Board (Textab), said on his return last night the Hong Kong team fought hard and won some gains over earlier U.S. proposals.

But in the end, he said, the political realities had to be faced.

"We felt we were in the firing line and we couldn't duck it."

However, he said, the agreement will provide at least five years of stability to Hong Kong's jittery garment and textile sector.

Textab member and Legislative Councillor Mr Stephen Cheong, who arrived with Mr Ho, agreed, and noted that the new growth levels are low but that growth under the old agreement was also restricted.

Mr Ho and Textab will meet tomorrow to further discuss the implications of the agreement.

Hong Kong's Director of Trade and chief textile negotiator, Mr Hamish MacLeod, who led the talks, is now in Geneva for the latest round of MFA discussions.

In a statement released by the department yesterday, Mr MacLeod said the concessions of flexibility and growth provisions "certainly do not compensate for the new restrictive elements in the agreement."

He said the U.S. stand reflected strong protectionist sentiment in the country and the congressional threat of new textile legislation.

Backers of the restrictive Jenkins-Thurmond Bill have scheduled for August 6 a vote on overriding President Ronald Reagan's earlier veto of the bill.

The meeting in Washington was the third between the two countries; textile negotiators, following a session last month in Hawaii and an earlier round in Hong Kong which ended abruptly when the territory sharply disagreed with the U.S. proposals.

The U.S. is holding similar talks with Taiwan and South Korea, which are widely expected to agree to the proposals now Hong Kong has knuckled under.

Three days of talks on the territory's garment exports to the European economic community begin in Brussels on July 7.

At a press briefing yesterday, acting Director of Trade Michael Sze said the departments still analysing the U.S.-Hong Kong Agreement. However, he said, the "modified and extended" agreement has two main features:

-- Extensions of coverage to silk and ramie from August 1, although blends with a high silk or ramie content are exempt.

-- Introduction of group limits for the three main groups of categories -- cotton, wool and man-made fibre garments, which will be split into garment and non-garment (yard, threat and made-ups) -- and the creation of a new garment group for the previously quota-free ramie.

-- Two sub-groups have also been created -- non-MFA sweaters of silk or ramie blends under categories 845 and 846 and other products, such as yarn, thread or made-ups not covered by the three groups or the sweaters sub-group.

The three main groups and the sweaters are under quota, but the last sub-group comes under the export authorisation system, under which the U.S. can make a "call" on the items if it feels import levels threaten the domestic market, he said.

A yardage limit has also been set on each of the three main groups.

One apparent concession won by Hong Kong affects the non-MFA sweater sub-group. Mr Sze said the U.S. has agreed that 70 per cent of the sub-group's quota can be made in Hong Kong from panels knitted in China, a move that differs from the United States, country-of-origin rules, which affect MFA sweaters.

Under these rules, sweaters made locally from panels knitted in China cannot be imported to the U.S. with a made-in-Hong Kong label.

Mr Sze said although the agreement includes a modification to the current terms on cotton, wool and man-made fibre, it provides no reduction in quotas issued for existing restrained categories.

"On MFA items, there is no reduction in quotas already issued for 1986," he said.

Silk exporters will get some solace from the provision that garments contaning more than 70 percent of silk, by weight, and non-garment items containing more than 85 per cent of silk remain outside the agreement.

Synthetic fabric luggage exporters, however, now fall under the agrement.

Assistant Director of Trade Paul Wong said the department has stopped issuing export authorisations or applications on MFA fabrics, suspended all swing provisions and the free quota scheme.

All export licences and "white licence" applications for non-MFA items have also been suspended, he said.

Licencing will resume once the calculation of quotas has been completed.

Last year, Hong Kong's exports of garment, textiles and accessories to the U.S. totalled $25.5 billion, down four per cent on 1984, Census and Statistics Department figures show. The 1984 level, however, soared 45 per cent over 1983.

Non-MFA exports totalled about $6 billion last year.

In the first four months of this year, Hong Kong's exports of clothing and textiles totalled $7.6 billion, up seven per cent on the same period of last year.

Exports of silk garments last year totalled $2.3 billion, a 21 per cent drop on 1984's figure, which had risen 52 per cent drop cover last 1983.

U.S. figures measured in equivalent square yards (ESYS) show that Hong Kong exports of all garments and fabrics grew 11 per cent last year, giving the territory the largest percentage rise among regional suppliers.

PRC EXPANDS TRADE WITH MEDITERRANEAN COUNTRIES

OW041412 Beijing XINHUA in English 1356 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 4 (XINHUA) -- China has made remarkable progress in promoting its trade ties with the Mediterranean countries to which Premier Zhao Ziyang is now paying official visits, "INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS" reported on Thursday.

Prior to Zhao's trip, the paper interviewed Wang Pingqing, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, on the development of China's trade with the host nations.

Wang said that "there have been satisfactory results in China's bilateral trade, economic and technical cooperation with Romania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Spain, Turkey and Tunisia."

According to the statistics of the Chinese Ministry, in 1985 the trade volume with Yugoslavia rose to 189 million U.S dollars, a 45 percent increase as against the previous year. The Sino-Romanian trade increased to 790 million U.S. dollars.

The most outstanding increase was in Sino-Turkish trade involving 112.6 million U.S. dollars last year, which was three times the 1984 figure. The Sino-Tunisian trade volume -- 62.9 million U.S. dollars -- was up by nearly 60 percent; the Sino-Greek trade -- 82 million U.S. dollars -- up by 61 percent and Sino-Spanish trade -- 439.7 million U.S. dollars -- up by 121 percent.

Wang said that after Greece and Spain joined the European Community, China signed agreements on economic cooperation with these two countries. "Our cooperation will expand in wider ranges," he said. They will also find rich natural resources and broad markets in China, he added.

The vice-minister expressed his confidence for the future of China's economic and trade relations with Greece and Spain. He said that China attaches great importance to economic cooperation and trade with other developing countries and has taken a series of measures to promote such cooperation.

UN ECONOMIC, SOCIAL COUNCIL HEARS PRC DELEGATE

OW050612 Beijing XINHUA in Egnlish 0556 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Text] Geneva, July 4 (XINHUA) -- China today appealed to developed countries to end their trade protectionist measures, increase financial cooperation with debtor countries, and restructure the international monetary system as ways of helping developing countries.

At the summer session of the United Nations' Economic and Social Council, Qian Jaidong, Chief Chinese delegate, said despite the 3 percent economic increase expected in developing countries this year, "these countries are still beset with grave difficulties in their economies and their prospects leave no room for optimism."

Citing the recent adoption of a protectionist bill by the U.S. House of representatives and the raising of import tariffs by West European countries on petrochemical products, Qian said developed countries have ignored or denied any commitment to containing protectionism.

The solution to the debt problems, he said, should include short-term capital recycling and long-term economic growth in the debtor countries. "The debt problem will not be removed of its root causes if only the debtor countries are required to tighten up their belts and implement short-term economic readjustment policies."

Qian also said the high interest rates, unbalanced international payments, capital flow from debtor countries and the disparities between exchange rates and commodity prices shows that the existing international monetary system must be overhauled.

It would be impossible for developing countries to achieve self-reliancy without international cooperation and a favorable international environment, said Qian. To accomplish this, he said, four measures should be followed:

-- Developed countries should immediately renounce trade protectionist measures, to ensure greater access to products from developing countries to their markets.

-- Flow of financial resources into developing countries, particularly official financial aid and concessional loans, should be increased.

-- Creditor countries, debtor countries, multilateral financial institutions and commercial banks have obligations to actively seek a long-term and growth-oriented solution to the debt problem.

-- The existing international monetary system must be restructured.

XINHUA COMMENTARY ON 'HARD FATE' OF SALT II

OW041352 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1031 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 1 Jul (XINHUA) -- Commentary: The Hard Fate of the "Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty," by XINHUA Commentator Peng Di

The second U.S.-Soviet Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty [SALT II Treaty] has had a hard fate indeed. It went through 7 difficult years before coming into being. Seven years after its birth, the congresses of the two countries have not ratified the treaty to accord it legal recognition. Now President Reagan has announced that the United States will no longer be bound by the treaty at the end of this year. If the treaty had any golden period to speak of, that was 18 June 1979, the day it was signed in Vienna. I was there and witnessed President Carter and General Secretary Brezhnev embrace and congratulate each other on the treaty's birth. At that time, the two leaders spoke highly of the treaty. In their informal talks or comments after the meeting, ranking U.S. Government officials even considered this a breakthrough signaling an improvement in U.S.-Soviet relations.

Unfortunately, shortly after the signing of the treaty, 100,000 Soviet troops invaded Afghanistan, a nonaligned nation, in December that same year. The world was shocked, and U.S.-Soviet relations took a sharp turn downward. The Carter administration immediately announced a blockade in the Persian Gulf and warned the Soviet Union against moving south. The U.S. Congress categorically refused to ratify the newly signed treaty, which had been very controversial in the United States. The treaty was thus shelved.

However, based on their own considerations and needs, the United States and the Soviet Union did not abolish the treaty right away. They considered the treaty's stipulations worth observing for the time being. Since then the treaty has behaved like a shost, appearing and disappearing now and then. No one cared about it even when it expired at the end of 1985. President Reagan recently brought up this subject, thereby reminding the people of the presence of this thing which looks like a treaty but not is a treaty, and which may or may not be observed.

Actually, there is nothing to lament about the fate of this treaty. It was supposed to temporarily play the role of a regulator in a trial of strategic strength between the United States and the Soviet Union. Each was trying to use this treaty to consolidate its own position in the nuclear arms race and to restrict the other.

This treaty allowed tremendous room for growth for both sides in terms of the quantity of strategic weapons. In terms of quality, each side could take into consideration the characteristics of its own weapons, exploit its strengths and circumvent its weaknesses, and actually increase the quantity under the pretext of arms reduction. Take the missiles with multiple warheads that can be independently targeted, for instance. When the treaty was signed in June 1979, the United States and the Soviet Union respectively had 1046 and 752 delivery vehicles with these multiple warheads. However, the treaty stipulated that both sides could increase their holdings to 1320 delivery vehicles. Arms expansion was carried out under the name of arms limitation. True enough, since then, both sides have speeded up the race in this area. it is little wonder that by early 1986, the United States had increased its nuclear warheads from 9,200 to 11,000 delivery vehicles, while the Soviet Union had increased its warheads at a much faster rate, from 5,000 to about 10,000 delivery vehicles. Each has developed or deployed other new-generation weapons for use on the ground, under the sea, and in space while accusing the other of violating the treaty.

Obviously whether the treaty was valid or whether or not it had expired will not stop the U.S. -Soviet arms race. President Reagan was very straightforward and opposed this treaty from the very beginning. On the surface, the reason was that this treaty was not for reducing arms, and that everything should start anew if serious arms reduction is desired. The underlying reason was that he could not tolerate the Soviet superiority in some strategic weapons, and was thus determined to compete with the Soviet Union in these areas.

In arms expansion, the Soviet approach has always been more action, less words, or no words at all. It has worked hard to develop offensive and defensive weapons, and its words do not match its deeds. Since the new leadership of Gorbachev came into office, the Soviet Union has offered some disarmament proposals to the United States. Recently, while criticizing Reagan for not observing the SALT II Treaty, the Soviet Union again offered a new proposal, urging the United States to continue to honor in the next 10 to 15 years the "Antiballistic Missile Treaty" signed by both sides in Moscow in 1972. In this connection, the Soviet Union is willing to reduce strategic offensive weapons "on a par" with the United States. Apparently this proposal is still aimed at U.S. "star wars" program.

It is common sense that a treaty is better than an unrestrained arms race. However, both sides should be sincere. If the Unites States and the Soviet Union really care about the world's public opinion and international peace and refrain from constantly strengthening their position and pursuing an outward expansionist policy, then this treaty will naturally serve as a new starting point for discussing new steps for further arms reduction.

In this way, this pitiable treaty may be prevented from total abandonment, and may play a limited role instead of being left in ruins.

This is only a wish of the ordinary people. The treaty's destiny is actually held in the hands of the policy-makers in Washington and Moscow.

VIENNA ARMS TALKS CLOSE WITHOUT AGREEMENT

OW042010 Beijing XINHUA in English 1510 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Vienna, July 4 (XINHUA) -- The 39th round of negotiations on reducing conventional forces in central Europe closed here Thursday without any agreement.

The mutual and balanced force reduction (MBFR) talks began May 15. The talks are scheduled to resume September 25.

During the negotiations, the Warsaw Pact appealed for cuts throughout Europe, while the west bloc emphasized effective measure to verify reduction. The two sides blamed each other for failure to make progress in the talks.

U.S. representative Robert Blackwill told reporters that "the East had not moved one millimeter on verification."

Soviet delegate Valerian Mikhaylov said the Warsaw Pact initiative announced last month had been touched only in private and informal talks. He told reporters that the West had hardened its stance at the talks, instead of moving toward compromise.

The negotiations began on October 30, 1973, on the reduction of the estimated two million troops in the Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, Federal Germany, Democratic Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia.

SOVIET FRIENDSHIP DELEGATION ARRIVES IN BEIJING

OW032038 Beijing XINHUA in English 1524 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Zhang Wenjin, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign countries, gave a banquet here tonight in honor of a Soviet delegation from the Union of Societies for Friendship and Cultural Relations With Foreign Countries and the Soviet-Sino Friendship Association. The delegation, led by E.V. Ivanov, first vice-chairman of the union, arrived here this morning according to the 1986-1987 cooperation program signed between the two friendship organizations.

Officials Exchange Speeches

OW050431 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] A 3-man delegation of the Union of Soviet Societies for Friendship and Cultural Relations With Foreign Countries and the USSR-China Friendship Society led by Yevgeniy Ivanov, deputy chairman of the Presidium, arrived by air in Beijing the morning of 3 July at the invitation of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and the China-USSR Friendship Association and began its week-long visit of friendship to China. At the airport, the Soviet guests were met by Liang Geng, vice president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, and Yang Shouzheng, vice president of the China-USSR Friendship Association.

In the evening, Zhang Wenjin, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, met the Soviet guests and gave a banquet in their honor. At the banquet, President Zhang Wenjin said that today he is giving a banquet in honor of the delegation of Soviet amity organizations for the first time since assuming the post of president of the association, and that he was very pleased about it.

He said that in the last 2 years there has been an increase in contacts between the amity organizations of China and the Soviet Union, and that this contributes to deepening mutual understanding and strengthening friendship between the two countries' peoples. We have every justification to believe, he said, that the cooperation plan of the two countries' amity organizations for 1986-1987, recently signed in Moscow thanks to the efforts of the two sides, will certainly be successfully implemented.

Delegation leader Ivanov also spoke at the banquet. He said he was glad to note new developments in cooperation and increased contacts between China and the Soviet Union in the economic, trade, scientific, technical and cultural fields, and reiterated that the fruitful work of the two countries' amity organizations will certainly contribute to strengthening and developing the traditional friendship of the two countries' peoples. Troyanovskiy, Soviet ambassador to China, attended the meeting and banquet.

USSR ENVOY TO U.S. URGES SUMMIT PREPARATIONS

[Text] Washington, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Soviet ambassador to the United States Yuriy Dubinin today called on the United States to begin actual preparations for a second U.S.-Soviet summit meeting, saying that a date for such a meeting could be set if the United States makes a positive reply to the latest Soviet arms control proposals.

In an interview with the American Hearst newspapers, which was made public today, the ambassador said that "it is more important" to start talks on a summit agenda than to set a concrete date for either the summit or a preparatory meeting between U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze. "The most important thing is to begin the actual preparatory work as soon as possible and without wasting any more time," he argued.

This echoes to a Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's statement in Warsaw late last month that a summit meeting "would not be needed" without an agenda that would yield "concrete achievements" in arms control.

The United States has been pushing the Soviet Union to set a date for a foreign ministers' meeting while dismissing the Soviet call as another propogandistic ploy rather than a sign of serious progress toward a summit.

Dubinin said the Soviet offer for high-level preparatory talks "underscores our willingness to begin the actual preparation of the whole process with the hope of arranging a successful summit meeting as soon as possible." "I would like to put the accent one more time on substance because substance is the most important thing," he claimed. He urged the United States to respond positively to the Soviet suggestions so that to "make a new summit meeting possible."

USSR'S CHERVOV TELLS PRESS OF OBSTACLE TO CW BAN

[Text] London July 4 (XINHUA) -- Colonel-General Nikolay Chervov, a leading Soviet negotiator at Geneva arms control talks, today said the Soviet Union and the United States are one obstacle away from reaching a broad agreement on banning chemical weapons (CW). Chervov said that obstacle is the U.S. unwillingness to agree to strict controls over private enterprises that have the potential to produce materials that can be used for chemical weapons.

Chervov, also head of the Directorate of the Soviet General Staff, was speaking at a press conference in London where he is paying a visit. "If this obstacle is removed, there is a chance to reach agreement," Chervov said. "We have broadly agreed all other aspects, including the system of control and verification and on-site inspection. In principle we are agreed on all other issues," he added.

According to press reports in the West, however, the United States and the Soviet Union staff differ on verification procedures. It was not clear from Chervov's remarks whether the Soviet Union had agreed to abandon a veto over any particular inspection request which it had insisted on for national security reasons.

Chervov is to meet with British Foreign Secretary Geoffrey Howe and will address the Royal Institute of International Affairs next Monday.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze is due to arrive in Britain's capital in 10 days, and indications are that the Soviet Union has placed significant importance to Britain's role Soviet-U.S. summit.

Soviet ambassador in London Leonid Zamyatin, who was at today's press conference, said, "We believe the views of Great Britain as a nuclear power carry weight."

TASS SAYS U.S. FEARS FOR ROK, CONTACTS OPPOSITION

OW050554 Beijing XINHUA in English 0538 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Text] Moscow, July 14 (XINHUA) -- The United States is seeking to keep its position in South Korea in case of the collapse of the Chon Tu-Hwan clique in making contact with the opposition, the TASS news agency said today. This is but the flexible tactics Washington is playing, aimed to maintain its sphere of influence in the southern part of the peninsula once the regime there is toppled, the news agency said.

TASS said U.S. Ambassador Richard Walker to Seoul met a main opposition leader in his official residence, despite the protest from the South Korean authorities. Washington is "deeply worried" about a massive campaign, which is underway in South Korea with calls for toppling the pro-American Chon regime and shattering the Washington-Seoul alliance, TASS said.

MOSCOW CRITICIZES REAGAN REMARKS ON ARMS CONTROL

[Text] Moscow, July 6 (XINHUA) -- A Soviet commentator on the Central Television Network said today that U.S. President Ronald Reagan's change of attitude toward the latest Soviet disarmament proposal is apparently a trick to delay for time. The commentator said because Washington's remarks were not backed by any concrete deeds. He criticized the U.S. Administration for sticking to "an old, nonconstructive and unrealistic stance" at the arms talks in Geneva that were adjourned recently.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev called last month for a limit on U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) to the experimental level and for the adherence to the SALT II nuclear arms control treaty for another 15 years. The Soviet leader also advocates limiting the strategic nuclear arsenals of both nations to their current levels, although he has not linked this proposal to the SDI and SALT II suggestions.

In response to the Soviet proposal, Reagan said Moscow appeared to be making "a serious effort" that could represent "a turning point" in arms control.

Another Soviet commentator criticized military-industrial groups in Western Europe for attempting to utilize the Eureka project for military purposes. It said more and more politicians as well as industrial enterprises were becoming interested in the plan because of its military potential.

DPRK DELEGATION ARRIVES IN USSR; ACTIVITIES NOTED

[Text] Moscow, July 2 (XINHUA) -- A party and government delegation of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) arrived here today to mark the 25th anniversary of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance between the Soviet Union and the DPRK.

Soviet President Andrey Gromyko and Lev Zaykov, member of the Political Bureau of the Soviet Communist Party, met with the delegation, led by Kim Hwan, Politburo member and secretary of the Workers Party of DPRK.

The Soviet news agency TASS reported that the officials discussed broadening bilateral relations and strengthening cooperation at the meeting. Kim Hwan said the United States is turning South Korea into a base for nuclear missiles in Asia and has offered to equip South Korean armies.

The Soviet leaders said they support the DPRK demand for withdrawal of U.S. Forces from the southern part of the peninsula, and a peaceful democratic reunification of Korea without outside interference.

At a reception to honor the delegation, Geydar Aliyev, Politburo member of the Soviet Communist Party and a first deputy chairman of the Soviet Council of Ministers, said the Soviet Union firmly supports intra-Korean constructive dialogue to relax tension in the peninsula.

USSR SUPPORTS DPRK NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE PROPOSAL

OW032048 Beijing XINHUA in English 1736 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Moscow, July 3 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Foreign Ministry today issued a statement to support a proposal by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on turning the Korean peninsula into a nuclear-free zone.

The statement said that if the proposal is carried out, it would remove a possible source of nuclear conflict and would be a major contribution to non-proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Pyongyang announced on June 23 a complete ban of nuclear weapons within its boundaries and called for turning the Korean peninsula into a nuclear-free zone. Pyongyang also proposed to Washington and Seoul to negotiate on the issue.

[Text] Moscow, July 2 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union expects the Kabul regime to broaden its social base in an attempt to consolidate the puppet power.

Soviet leader Andrey Gromyko said today that he hoped the Afghanistan's National Fatherland Front (NFF) will "be fully expanded to include new forces regardless of their different ideologies and religions, as long as they all like to see Afghanistan free and prosperous."

Receiving an NFF delegation headed by Chairman Abdorrahim Hatif, Gromyko denounced what he called an undeclared war against Afghanistan by certain countries without mentioning the withdrawal of Soviet troops from the country.

The NFF is a united front represented by some political, ethnic and religious groups.

DPRK PAPER REAFFIRMS REUNIFICATION STANCE

OW041055 Beijing XINHUA in English 0742 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July 4 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) stressed today that its stand for the national reunification on the basis of three principles is firm and unshakable.

The three principles of national reunification -- independence, peaceful reunification and great national unity -- were put forward in "the July 4 North-South Joint Statement" issued at the end of the high-level talks between the North and South of Korea in 1972.

Marking the 14th anniversary of the issuance of the statement, Korean newspaper "NODONG SINMUN" said today editorially that the three principles of national reunification represent the "only common programme of the nation" and also the "only and right way" to the settlement of the Korean issue.

Over the past 14 years, the DPRK has put forward many proposals in accordance with the statement, and has been making unswerving efforts to realize these proposals. However, "these proposals have failed because of the obstructions by the United States and the South Korean authorities," the paper said.

The paper said that the U.S. and the South Korean authorities had rejected the proposal put forward by the Supreme Command of the Korean People's Army on June 17 for talks between the military authorities of the two sides of Korea and the U.S. They also failed to respond to the statement of the Korean Government on turning the Korean peninsula into a nuclear-free peace zone. All these facts show that the U.S. and the South Korean authorities do not want peace.

The paper stressed that the proposal to set up the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo is a realistic and reasonable plan which embodies the three principles of national reunification. It called on the people of the two parts of Korea to make efforts to realise the reunification of the Korean nation.

DPRK GROUP URGES ROK TO TAKE REUNIFICATION ROAD

[Text] Pyongyang, July 3 (XINHUA) -- The Pyongyang-based organization for the promotion of peaceful reunification appealed to the South Koreans yesterday to give up their prejudice against and fear of the communists in the North and take the road to unification. The call was made in a message yesterday to all political parties and social communities in South Korea as well as overseas compatriots. The escalation of tension on the Korean peninsula has suspended the hard-won North-South dialogue and will probably touch off a war, the reunification group said.

The recent proposal of the Supreme Headquarters of the Korean People's Army for holding tripartite military talks is aimed at saving the nation from the danger of war, the group said, calling on the people from the South to support the proposal.

Meanwhile, the reunification group also appealed for joint sponsorship of the 1988 Olympic Games. The organization for the promotion of peaceful reunification was formed 30 years ago by former political and social figures from South Korea.

DPRK PREMIER WARNS OF 'CONSTANT DANGER OF WAR'

OW051832 Beijing XINHUA in English 1731 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July 5 (XINHUA) — The Korean peninsula is "in constant danger of war," Kang Song-san, premier of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea warned today.

Addressing a mass rally here to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the signing of the treaty of friendship with the Soviet Union, Kang said that the DPRK will try to prevent escalating the danger under any circumstances.

Kang expressed Pyongyang's satisfaction with what he called the new levels of friendly cooperation between the DPRK and the Soviet Union and pledged his country's "utmost efforts" in promoting such cooperation.

A Soviet party and government delegation headed by Yuri F. Solovyev, an alternate member of the Political Bureau of the Soviet Communist Party's Central Committee, attended the rally. Solovyev agreed that the Soviet-Korean relationship has entered into a new stage, marked by even closer cooperation. The Soviet delegation arrived here today especially for the celebrations.

DPRK OFFICIAL ADDRESSES NONALIGNED SPORTS MEETING

[Text] Pyongyang, July 5 (XINHUA) -- A high-ranking Korean official said today if the non-aligned countries are to develop sports, they must correctly orient the development to suit their specific conditions.

Kang Song-san, premier of the Administration Council of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, made the remarks at the second conference on physical education and sports of the non-aligned countries, which opened here today. The four-day meeting will review progress made on implementing the program of action adopted at the first meeting of the sports group, held in Tripoli, August 1981. Representatives will also discuss sports strategy and cooperation among the non-aligned countries during 1986-90, and the 24th Olympic Games.

Kang Soing-san said, "The non-aligned countries should make all National Olympic Committees participate in the Olympic movement on an equal footing and realize a genuine democracy and energetically struggle to establish a new international sports order." The Korean premier hoped that the non-aligned countries would support the North Korean proposal that the 24th Olympics be co-hosted by North and South Korea.

Delegates from 48 countries and organizations attended the opening ceremony. Delegates from another seven countries are expected to arrive late this evening.

YAO YILIN MEETS JAPANESE INVESTMENT GROUP

OW031222 Beijing XINHUA in English 1214 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Yao Yilin met here today a Japanese delegation for the promotion of investment in China, led by President Keizo Saji of the Osaka Chamber of Commerce and Industry. Yao briefed the visitors on China's policy towards foreign investment in China and the country's investment environment.

He admitted that the economic cooperation and trade between China and Japan, despite their achievements, have come across some problems. However, these problems can be solved gradually and cooperation between enterprises of the countries will grow if both countries make continued efforts to do so, he predicted.

Saji replied that Yao's briefing has further encouraged members of his delegation to invest in China. They will make efforts to further the cooperation between the two countries in investment.

Zheng Tuobin, Chinese minister of foreign economic relations and trade, met the Japanese delegation this morning. He praised the visitors for their efforts to promote Sino-Japanese economic cooperation.

The 30-member Japanese delegation arrived here yesterday at the invitation of the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade. According to the Chinese Ministry, the Japanese delegation is here to study and discuss projects that the two countries agreed for further discussion at a meeting in Osaka last November. The delegation will also exchange views with Chinese officials on cooperation between China and Japanese industries of Kansai area as well as Japanese investment in China.

EC COMMISSION PRESIDENT DELORS CONTINUES VISIT

Hosts Return Banquet

OW040912 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1635 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Jacques Delors, president of the Commission of the European Community (EC), said here today that he has seen for himself the unique road of development China has taken. "What is valuable is that such a unique model is accompanied by the country's further opening of its doors. The road China has taken will make its mark on our times" he said.

Delors made these remarks at a return banquet he hosted in honor of acting Chinese Premier Wan Li, here this evening.

Delors praised the Chinese leaders for their wise, realistic and generous views on the world. He said that the EC and China have a common goal, i.e., the pursuit of peace and development, which demand the greatest efforts from the people and coordinated work by the EC and China. He expressed the wish that his visit would become a landmark on the road of cooperation between the EC and China.

In reply, Wan Li said that Delors had sincere and friendly meetings and talks with Chinese leaders and officials. The two sides share the same or similar views on many major international issues. "The two sides, sharing a common desire to deepen bilateral relations, have made useful explorations in this respect," he added.

He said that Delors' visit has helped deepen the mutual understanding and given a new impetus to the growth of relations between China and the EC. He expressed the belief that through Delors' visit and joint efforts between the two sides, their friendly relations and cooperation would develop to a higher stage.

Also attending the banquet were Mrs Delors and the guests from the European Community who accompanied Mr Delors; Wu Xueqian, Chinese state councilor and foreign minister; Song Jian, state councilor and minister in charge of the State Scientific and Technological Commission; Zheng Tuobin, minister of the foreign economic relations and trade; and Zeng Tao, member of the NPC Standing Committee.

This afternoon, the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs hosted a report meeting for Delors, who gave a lecture entitled "A New Leap for Europe" to an audience of more than 600 from the ministries and commissions concerned of the State Council, research institutes, universities, and the press circles. Delors focused on the questions of why West Europe should unite and how to achieve unity. Han Nianlong, president of the institute, presided over the meeting.

At a press conference prior to the banquet, Delors said that he was deeply impressed by the Chinese leaders' determination to continue the reform with a wise and cautious attitude, fulfil the Seventh Five-Year Plan and reach the national goals set for the year 2000.

Holds Press Conference

[Report: "China To Expand Cooperation With EC in Economic Affairs, Trade, and Nuclear Energy" — ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 3 jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Jacques Delors, president of the European Community's Executive Commission, said today in Beijing that China and the European Community share the same peace and development objectives and that they will expand cooperation in economic activities, trade, and nuclear energy.

He said the above this afternoon at the press conference after delivering a speech entitled "The New Take-off of Europe."

During his stay in Beijing, Delors met with Chairman Deng Xiaoping; Acting premier Wan Li; Vice Premier Li Peng; Foreign Minister Wu Xeqian; Song Jian, state councillor and minister of the State Science and Technology Commission; and Zheng Tuobin, minister of foreign economic relations and trade. Both sides look forward to expanding the cooperation between China and the European Community and they have decided on the following projects:

-- China will send a delegation to visit the European Community in 1986 and, if circumstances permit, they will reach an agreement on nuclear cooperation in 1987;

-- In 1988, they will organize the third Sino-EC trade week;

-- The European Community will give technical assistance to China in its exploitation of natural gas resources;

-- A symposium on investment in China will be held at an appropriate time;

-- The European Atomic Energy Community will provide China with some nuclear research equipment and facilities;

-- A European bilogical engineering research institute will be established in Beijing.

In addition, the European Community will also provide Chinese scientific workers with scholarships. According to Delors, Chinese and Europeans should increase their exchanges in the areas of education and vocational training in order to further consolidate the foundation for their cooperation.

Delors added: Europe's nuclear power plants are different from the Soviet Union's Chernobyl. The European Community will explain to China such safety measures as the materials for the outer shell of reactors and how to avoid accidents resulting from carelessness.

[Text] Rome, July 5 (XINHUA) — Italian President Francesco Cossiga received vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the Chinese National Congress Huang Hua here this morning.

During their meeting, Huang conveyed greetings from the Chinese leaders to the president, who asked Huang to convey his best wishes to the Chinese leaders.

Chinese Ambassador to Italy Du Gong was present at today's meeting, and the conversation focused on bilateral relations.

Huang is here to attend an international conference, entitled "Dialogue Is the Universal Basis for Peace," which is jointly sponsored by the Italian Foreign Ministry and the Rome City Government. Earlier, Huang held talks with vice prime minister of the Italian caretaker government Arnaldo Forlani.

PRC URGES IMPROVED NORTH-SOUTH RELATIONS

[Text] Rome, July 3 (XINHUA) -- China is ready to join hands with other countries at all levels in bettering North-South relations, Chinese Deputy State Councillor Huang Hua said here today.

Speaking at an international conference for increased dialogue and cooperation between nations, Huang pointed out that North-South dialogue has reached an impasses in recent years because the United States and other developed countries are unwilling to make compromises on a number of important issues. The Soviet Union, on the other hand, has not offered much help to developing countries either, although it expresses concern over the difficulties faced by them, he said.

The Chinese official suggested that North-South dialogue should cover such topics as how to raise the prices of traditional products for export such as petroleum, how to help developing countries promote their resource-rich national economy, how to provide them with more financial aid and technology transfers and how to prevent developed nations from resorting more and more to protectionism.

The three-day international conference, which opened, Wednesday, was organized by the Rome City Council as part of United Nations Peace Year. It is being attended by representatives from about 40 countries.

[Text] Beijing, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Qiao Shi, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, met and feted here this evening a cadres' delegation from the Italian Communist Party. The delegation is led by Gianni di Pietro, member of the Central Committee of the Italian Communist Party.

During the meeting, Qiao and Pietro expressed satisfaction with the development of relations between the two parties. Pietro said that the two parties have maintained good relations because they both follow the principle of independence, treat each other with sincerity and make no bones about their common points and differences. Qiao expressed the wish to further relations between the two parties.

QIAO SHI PRAISES PAVAROTTI BEIJING CONCERT

OW041718 Beijing XINHUA in English 1539 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 4 (XINHUA) -- The world-renowned Italian tenor, Luciano Pavarotti, overwhelmed his Beijing audience with his golden voice at his second solo concert here tonight, bringing his visit to a climactic end. The concert was moved from the hall of the Beijing Exhibition Center to the 100,000-seat Great Hall of People to meet the demand of the local music lovers, making Pavarotti the first foreign tenor to give his solo recital in the 27-year history of the hall.

Vice-Premier Qiao Shi and other senior Chinese officials joined the audience, many of whom came specially to hear Pavarotti from other parts of the country.

Accompanied by the orchestra and chorus of the theatre opera of Genoa, Pavarotti sang in excellent bel canto works by Puccini, Verdi, Donizetti, and others as well as Italian songs tonight. His charming voice and fascinating performance won long-standing ovations from the audience. At the end of the performance, Qiao Shi and other leaders mounted the stage to congratulate Pavarotti on his success.

Pavarotti thanked the Chinese leaders for having given him the honor to hold the recital in the Great Hall of the People. "Both Italy and I will never forget the great audience here," he said.

Qiao said, "Your superb performance, which has won the hearts of the Chinese audience, has made a great contribution to the cultural exchanges between our two countries."

The world-famous tenor's visit has sparked a "Pavarotti fever" in China. For days his performances were kept an exceptionally grand occasion in the capital and tickets were sold out well in advance. It is estimated that some 20,000 musicians and music lovers attended the superstar's two solo recitals and 3 of the 5 performances of the opera, "La Boheme", in which he played the leading role of Rudolfo, presented by the Theatre Opera of Genoa.

In addition, mass media in and outside Beijing have given wide and detailed coverage to Pavarotti's performance and visit in the city. Chinese vocalists lavished praises on Pavarotti in newspapers.

Tonight's recital was broadcast and televised live across China.

Artists of the Theatre Opera of Genoa left here for home at midnight while Pavarotti and his family stay behind to tour other parts of China.

TURKISH NEWS AGENCY ON ZHAO ZIYANG'S VISIT

OW060125 Beijing XINHUA in English 2348 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 5 (XINHUA) — The forthcoming visit of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang to Turkey "will push the existing Turkish-Chinese relations of friendship to a new height", said Turkey's official ANATOLIA NEWS AGENCY today.

ANATOLIA announced that the Chinese premier will pay an official six-day visit to Turkey from July 17 to 23, during which the premiers of the two countries will discuss bilateral relations and regional and international issues with the development of their economic and trade relations as the major topic.

The annual volume of trade between the two countries was 48 million U.S. dollars in 1984 but increased to 100 million in 1985 after Turkish Premier Turgut Ozal's visit to China last year, ANATOLIA said.

Premier Zhao's forthcoming visit to Turkey will be his first visit to the country to reciprocate Premier Ozal's visit to China in June last year, ANATOLIA said.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON ZHAO'S EUROPE-AFRICA TOUR

Welcomed by SFRY Leaders

[By reporters Yang Dazhou and Li Daijun]

[Text] Belgrade, 6 Jul (XINHUA) — Premier of the PRC State Council Zhao Ziyang arrived in Belgrade, the capital of Yugoslavia, this morning to start a 4-day official goodwill visit to that country at the invitation of Branko Mikulic, president of the SFRY Federal Executive Council.

Premier Zhao Ziyang was welcomed at the airport by Yugoslav Premier B. Mikulic.

In a written statement at the airport on his arrival, Premier Zhao Ziyang said that he was very happy to have the opportunity to visit Yugoslavia. He said: Sino-Yugoslav friendly cooperative relations have been developing smoothly in all fields in recent years. Through frequent exchange of visits between high-ranking leaders of the two parties and the two countries, China and Yugoslavia have expanded cooperation in political, economic, scientific and technological, and cultural fields, and strengthened cooperation in international affairs.

Zhao Ziyang stressed that the Chinese Government has attached great importance to the bilateral friendly cooperative relations based on the principles of independence, equality, and noninterference in each other's affairs, and will make further efforts to promote long-term, stable and comprehensive development of the ties.

The Chinese premier also said that during his stay in Yugoslavia, he will exchange views with Yugoslav leaders on international issues of mutual concern, and they will jointly explore concrete ways to further develop bilateral relations. He said that he will be interested in understanding Yugoslavia's experience in building socialism in a creative manner and based on the actual situation in the country. In conclusion, he extended heartfelt respects and cordial greetings on behalf of the Chinese people to the people of all nationalities in Yugoslavia.

Accompanying Zhao Ziyang on the visit to Yugoslavia are Lu Dong, minister of the State Economic Commission; Qian Qichen, vice minister of foreign affairs; Wang Pinqing, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Bao Tong, vice minister of the State Commission for Restructuring the Economic System; and Xie Li, Chinese ambassador to Yugoslavia.

Premier Zhao Ziyang and his entourage were also greeted at the airport by officials and staff members of the Chinese Embassy in Yugoslavia and by representatives of Chinese students there.

Yugoslav leaders welcoming Premier Zhao Ziyang and his entourage at the airport included Desimir Jevtic, president of the Executive Committee of the Serbian Republic Assembly; Milos Milosavljevic, vice president of the Federal Executive Council; Ibrahim Tabakovic, member of the Federal Executive Council; Boris Muzevic, executive secretary of the LCY Central Committee; Aleksandar Bakocevic, president of the Belgrade City Assembly; Budimir Loncar, deputy federal secretary for foreign affairs; and Zvone Dragan, Yugoslav ambassador to China.

Visits Tomb of Josip Tito

[Text] Belgrade, July 6 (XINHUA) — Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang laid a flower bouquet at the tomb of the late Yugoslav President Josip Broz Tito this morning shortly after his arrival here. At the memorial center of "Josip Broz Tito", Premier Zhao wrote in the visitors' book, "Salute to Comrade Josip Broz Tito — a great Marxist and great friend of the Chinese people".

The flower bouquet was inscribed with "To Great Marxist Comrade Josip Broz Tito". The tomb was located in the residence where President Tito used to work and stay.

Prior to the visit, Premier Zhao laid a wreath at the Monument to Unknown Heroes, at Avala Hill, which was inscribed with "Eternal Life to Heroes Who Dedicated Their lives to the Fredom of Various Nationalities of Yugoslavia".

Premier Zhao Ziyang arrived here this morning for a five-day official visit to Yugoslavia, which is the second leg of his six-nation tour.

Holds Talks With SFRY Premier

OW062030 Beijing XINHUA in English 2015 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July 6 (XINHUA) -- Chinese and Yugoslav premiers today hailed what they described as the very friendly, cooperative and all-round relations between their countries. The remarks were made at the first round of official talks between Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and his Yugoslav counterpart Branko Mikulic here this afternoon shortly after Zhao's arrival on an official goodwill visit to Yugoslavia.

A Chinese Foreign Ministry Information Department official described the talks as "proceeding in a cordial and friendly atmosphere." The Chinese official said Mikulic told his guest that his country attaches special importance to its relations with China. There are no obstacles in the way of developing an all-round relationship between the two countries, he said, while expressing the belief that Zhao's visit would help further Yugoslav-Chinese friendly, cooperative and all-round relations.

Premier Zhao termed Sino-Yugoslav relations as "very friendly" and said the present time was one of the best periods for these relations to grow most smoothly, according to the Chinese official. Zhao told his host that the Chinese Communist Party and Government cherish most dearly the all-round and friendly cooperation with Yugoslavia. He said he hopes that bilateral relations will continue to develop on a long-term and stable basis.

The two premiers briefed each other on the economic development and the progress of reform in their respective countries. The Chinese official said Premier Zhao "heartily" wished Yugoslavia greater successes on its way forward as guided by the principles set at the 13th Congress of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, which was held late last month.

The Chinese premier praised Yugoslavia as the forerunner of reform. Its experience as well as its lessons drawn from practice are beneficial to China, which pays great attention to Yugoslavia's experience in socialist construction and reform, Zhao said.

The Yugoslav premier noted that China's experience in reform was of great value to his country. The two leaders agreed to increase the regular exchange of experience.

They also had an in-depth exchange of views on ways to further the economic, trade, scientific and technological cooperation between the two countries.

After reviewing what the Chinese official called the close cooperation between China and Yugoslavia in international affairs, the two leaders said they will exchange views more frequently and collaborate more closely in the future so as to bring their overall cooperation to a new height.

Premier Zhao said that both China and Yugoslavia pursue an independent foreign policy and adhere to the five principles of peaceful coexistence. "You uphold the principle of non-alignment while China refuses to enter into alliance with any big powers or groups of states," Zhao said, according to the Chinese official.

SFRY's Mikulic Fetes Zhao

[Text] Belgrade, July 6 (XINHUA) -- China and Yugoslavia today pledged to cement the stable, all-round friendly relations of cooperation between the two countries and work together to maintain world peace and promote common progress.

This pledge was made by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Yugoslav Federal Executive Council President Branko Mikulic at a banquet here this evening.

The Chinese premier arrived here this morning on an official good-will visit to Yugoslavia following a five-day visit to Romania. This is the second leg of his Balkan-Mediterranean tour.

Speaking at the banquet he gave in Zhao's honor, Mikulic described Zhao's visit as "being of major importance" in advancing the relations and cooperation between Yugoslavia and China, which "have developed most smoothly" and pioneered "a new road to peace, understanding, mutual support and a bright future for the world."

"True revolution and its fruit and the aspirations and determination to follow their respective roads in building socialism in light of specific conditions and needs have tied Yugoslavia and China closely together," Mikulic said. "The relations of the two countries have entered into a new stage of active and all-round cooperation since the visit to China by the late Yugoslav President Tito," he noted, adding that the frequent exchange of visits by high-ranking officials of the two countries have further promoted mutual understanding and consolidated such relations.

He said that Yugoslavia "is watching closely the reforms of far-reaching significance carried out by the People's Republic of China in light of its special conditions and experiences and the achievements in its socialist construction."

In his speech, Premier Zhao expressed appreciation of the achievements made by the Yugoslav people in all domains of social life by sticking to the Tito road, carrying forward the glorious revolutionary tradition and pioneering a spirit to overcome all kinds of difficulties.

He reviewed the outstanding contributions made by the Yugoslav people in the anti-fascist struggle during the Second World War and its ensuing creative efforts to pioneer a new socialist system of self-government by applying the basic principles of Marxism to the specific conditions of the country and standing up to extremely big pressures for outside. "The Chinese people are greatly inspired and benefited by the achievements and experience of the Yugoslav people in persisting in principle and defending independence and in emancipating the mind to push forward with reforms," Zhao said.

The Chinese premier expressed satisfaction with the continued development in the all-round relations of friendship and cooperation between China and Yugoslavia. "The two countries are not only identical or similar in their views on a series of major international issues but also have common language in an extensive area with regard to socialist construction and development," he stressed.

He called for common efforts by the people of the two countries to make their solidly based friendship and cooperation more fruitful. The Chinese premier also expressed the wishes that the Yugoslav people would make greater, new achievements in socialist construction under the guidance of the spirit of the 13th Congress of the Communist League of Yugoslavia, which he described as "of major historic significance."

Zhao Addresses Banquet

[Text] Belgrade, JKuly 6 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today voiced a strong support to the Non-Aligned Movement and wished the coming eighth summit of the non-aligned states a success.

Speaking at a banquet given in his honor by Yugoslav Federal Executive Council President Branko Mikulic here this evening, Zhao paid high tribute to the Non-Aligned Movement, of which Yugoslavia is one of the founding members. This year marks the 25th anniversary of the founding of the Non-Aligned Movement.

The Chinese premier expressed appreciation of the just stand of Yugoslavia and other non-aligned countries on the settlement of issues in the hot spots of the world. He said that the Non-Aligned Movement is an important element in safeguarding world peace and promoting international economic development because "it reflects the desire of the people of various countries for independence, peace and development."

Premier Zhao expressed the hope that the eighth non-aligned summit to be held in Harare, Zimbabwe, in late August would make new contributions to advancing the movement's fundamental purposes, strengthening its unity and promoting its development.

Spelling out China's independent foreign policy of peace, Premier Zhao said that its basic principles are identical with the purpose of the Non-Aligned Movement. "We need peace," he said. "We shall always persist in maintaining independence and holding the initiative in our own hands and in no circumstances shall we form alliance with any of the superpowers."

Zhao said that China resolutely opposes hegemonism from anywhere, adding that China maintains that all nations, big or small, are equals and that they should respect each other and that China opposes interference in other countries' internal affairs and encroachment upon other nations' sovereignty under any pretext.

He reiterated China's approach to the current international situation and its development trend, that is, the danger of war still exists as a result of the escalation of contention and arms race between the world's superpowers. But, he said, the forcces to maintain peace are also growing and so are the factors to restrict the outbreak of a war. "So long as the people of the world unite, persist in struggle, there is great hope of maintaining world peace," he stressed.

Premier Zhao said that China will, as always, work together with Yugoslavia, other non-aligned countries and all peace-loving countries and peoples to maintain world peace and promote common development.

Zhao arrived here this morning on the second leg of his six-nation Balkan and Mediterranean tour, which will also take him to Greece, Spain, Turkey and Tunisia. He wound up his five-day Romania visit yesterday, with a press communique expressing the determination of the two countries to further develop their all-round cooperation in both socialist construction and in international affairs.

Mikulic Addresses Banquet

[Text] Belgrade, July 6 (XINHUA) -- Detente should be universal in terms of both its essence and the areas it covers, Branko Mikulic, president of the Yugoslav Federal Executive Council, said today.

Welcoming Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang at a banquet this evening, Mikulic said that without a universal detente it would be impossible to have true world peace and security. The president praised China's foreign policy of independence and peace, saying that it is a tremendous contribution to developing international relations, extensive cooperation on the basis of equality, easing the tense international situation and achieving lasting world peace and progress.

"We are urgently in need of some countries and people who will pioneer a new road, a road to peace, understanding, mutual support and a brighter future," he said. The Yugoslav leader expressed deep concern over the old and new points of crisis in the world.

He called attention to the increasing militarization of the Mediterranean and interference and conflicts in the region caused by outside forces. The president said that Yugoslavia firmly supports the proposal to make the Balkans a peaceful, safe, cooperative region free from nuclear weapons.

He noted that settling problems through peaceful means, developing relations of mutual trust and strengthening international cooperation on the basis of equality are pre-requisites to maintaining peace.

He strongly condemned the South African regime for its "atrocities" against the majority population of the country and neighboring countries.

He urged Israel to withdraw its troops from all Arab territories so as to ensure the rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to build an independent nation.

The president regretted that the war between the two non-aligned countries of Iran and Iraq was worsening, adding that he would support any peace proposal aimed at ending the bloodshed.

He also voiced support for Democratic Kampuchea and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in its efforts for peace and reunification.

Mikulic described economic crisis, which jeopardize all countries, the developing countries in particular, as the "root cause of tension and instability of the world...debt issues constitute the most direct threat to development and stability of many countries." "Only by ensuring a continued progress of developing countries, is it possible to solve this problem," he said.

Mikulic said that the summit of non-aligned countries, which opens in Harare, Zimbabwe, in late August, will mark an important stage in the Non-Aligned Movement and policies and will give a new impetus to the further acknowledgement of the Non-Aligned Movement and policies in the international arena.

Visits Belgrade Military Museum

OW071146 Beijing XINHUA in English 1131 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July 7 (XINHUA) — Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today highly praised the Yugoslav people for their bravery and courage in the armed struggle against outside aggression.

He made the comments here this monring during a tour of the military museum, which preserves exhibits depicting the 1,400-year history of the Yugoslav people's heroic struggle.

The Chinese premier viewed with special interest the modern history hall, where exhibits and pictures are displayed on the armed struggle waged by the Yugoslav Communists and people under the leadership of the late President Josip Broz Tito during World War II. Zhao was given an account of several big war campaigns led by Tito.

"Salute to the heroic Yugoslav people of all nationalities and the courageous Yugoslav People's Army" Premier Zhao wrote in the visitors' book at the end of the tour.

Later on, the Chinese premier visited the Yugoslav railway community (the Federal Authority of Railway Transport) where he was briefed on the country's railway network and the operations of the railway community.

Yugoslavia boasts a national railway network of about 10,000 kilometers, of which one-tenth are double-track lines, and one-third are electrified.

Meets LCY President Renovica

OW071515 Beijing XINHUA in English 1438 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July 7 (XINHUA) -- Milanko Renovica, president of the Presidency of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY), met with visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang here this morning and gave a luncheon in his honor.

A Chinese Foreign Ministry official described the two-hour meeting as "very cordial and friendly." He said that during the meeting, the two leaders exchanged views on socialist construction in their respective countries and on international issues of common concern.

The new LCY president said that Yugoslavia, which has been following closely the efforts made by the Chinese Communist Party in building socialism in light of China's specific conditions, is elated at every success China has scored.

Renovica was elected president of the LCY Presidency at its 13th congress late last month.

The 58-year-old lawyer from the city of Sarajevo described the relations between the parties of China and Yugoslavia as "growing steadily", especially since the visit to China by late President Josip Broz Tito.

Renovica briefed Zhao, who is also member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party, on the 13th LCY Congress and the measures Yugoslavia plans to take to perfect the political system, develop the economy and strengthen LCY's roles, the Chinese Foreign Ministry official said.

Renovica also emphasized the important role of the Non-Aligned Movement in safeguarding world peace.

Premier Zhao spoke highly of the major policy decisions taken by the LCY at its 13th congress and wished the Yugoslav party greater success in implementing these decisions, the Chinese official said.

Both President Renovica and Premier Zhao attributed the good relationship between the Chinese and Yugoslav parties primarily to their observance of the principles of independence, total equality, mutual respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

This is the second day of Premier Zhao's visit to Yugoslavia. This morning the premier visited the military museum and the Yugoslav railway community.

This afternoon, Chinese Minister in Charge of the State Economic Commission Lu Dong and Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen will hold separate talks with their Yugoslav counterparts.

Interviewed for SFRY TV

OW080142 Beijing XINHUA in English 0125 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July (XINHUA) — Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said today that China is willing to develop normal relations with all countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful co-existence.

He told reporters from Belgrade television this evening that frequent visit to Europe by Chinese leaders does not mean that China is neglecting its relations with other countries. "China attaches much importance to developing relations of friendship and cooperation with other friendly countries, especially the Third World countries," he stressed.

He said that China recognizes the big role of Europe. He told reporters that in recent years high-ranking Chinese officials have visited many Third World countries, and he himself will visit Turkey and Tunisia on his current Balkan-Mediterranean tour.

China, he noted, is also willing to improve and develop relations with the Soviet Union.

The premier described his first two days here as "very fruitful," and said his meeting with Milanko Renovica, president of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, and Premier Branko Mikulic proceeded in a "sincere and cordial" atmosphere.

He told Belgrade television that China and Yugoslavia have identical or similar feeling about a host of major international issues and share views on socialist construction and economic reforms. Relations between the two countries, he noted, are already developed at a high level, and under the guidance of the principle of mutual respect, trust, support and learning, their friendly and cooperative relations are sure to have a bright future.

During the interview, Premier Zhao Ziyang reiterated China's stand on the arms race and arms reduction, saying that people should make common efforts to have the two superpowers sit down at the negotiation table and work earnestly for a agreement on arms reduction that will not jeopardize the interests of a third country.

He told the reporters about the progress of China's all-round economic reforms and stressed that China has introduced reforms after summing up the experience and lessons of the past three decades and by drawing on the experience of Yugoslavia. These reforms have a solid base and popular support and therefore are irreversible, he stressed.

WORK GROUPS TO HELP POOR MOUNTAINOUS AREAS GET RICH

[By reporter Zhou Yichang]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 3 Jul (XINHUA) -- The State Scientific and Technological Commission has organized a work group for the economic development of impoverished areas to give special assistance to the Dabie mountainous area in carrying out development and construction. The party group of the State Scientific and Technological Commission held a meeting this afternoon to send off the members of the group.

Addressing the send-off meeting, Song Jian, councillor and director of the State Scientific and Technological Commission, called on the group members to work with local cadres in the impoverished areas in further publicizing the party's principles and policies among the peasants, in conducting education on modern scientific knowledge among them so as to enable them to understand the concept of commodity economy as soon as possible; to help the peasants formulate or decide on plans for scientific and technological development on the basis of investigation and study and launch various forms of lateral economic associations; and to develop the Dabie mountainous area by hiring specialists and experts to train technological personnel in order to first help the people in that area solve the problem of food and clothing before striving for prosperity.

In order to develop impoverished areas, in April of this year, Song Jian led a survey group to carry out investigations and study in eight counties of the Dabie mountainous area, while the party group of the State Scientific and Technological Commission held special discussions on how to develop impoverished ares and sent four survey groups to Taihangshan, Yimengshan, "Sanxi" (Ningxia's Xihaigu, Gansu's Dingxi, and Hexi Corridor) areas, and Henan to learn from these areas' experiences in assisting impoverished areas through science and technology.

RENMIN RIBAO Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Go Deep Into Poor Areas To Help Work There"]

[Text] Over the past 2 years, party and government organs and mass organizations in many areas have selected and dispatched cadres and scientific and technological personnel to go deep into poor areas to help work there. This is not only advantageous to economic development in poor areas, but also can help improve the work style of administrative organs, strengthen ties between the party and the masses, train and temper cadres, and strengthen the building of administrative organs. The action taken by the State Science and Technology Commission to dispatch cadres to help with economic development in poor areas and to send cadres to settle down in the Dabie mountainous area to help economic development and construction has won encouragement and support from leading comrades of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council and evoked warm reactions from cadres and masses in Dabie Shan.

Solving the problem of providing enough food and clothes for the masses in most post poor areas is an important strategic plan of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council. To fulfill this plan, it is necessary to mobilize the forces of the whole society.

Party and government leading organs at all levels, leading organs of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council in particular, must set an example in this respect. One of the ways of helping poor areas is that a ministry or a state commission establishes key ties with a poor area and helps the area in getting rid of poverty. The aim of encouraging this practice is to advocate the spirit of caring about poor areas and a practical attitude, and to encourage all departments and systems to select and decide on effective forms according to their own characteristics and conditions, so as to establish as many ties as possible with poor areas and to do more practical things in a planned way and step by step.

Leading organs establishing key ties to help poor areas does not mean their partiality regarding the areas, nor does it mean that the dispatched comrades will replace local party and government leaders and take everything into their hands. The main task of the work teams in charge of economic work in poor areas is, under the unified leadership of the local party committees and governments, to propagate and implement the party's policies, to conduct investigation and study, to help sum up experience, to properly carry out reform, and to unleash the latent power of poor areas.

The practice of the State Science and Technology Commission in establishing key ties with Dabie Shan is a new attempt. We wish comrades of the work team to be sent to Dabie Shan success.

CIRCULAR CONTROLS EXTRABUDGETARY FUNDS

HK050822 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 23 Jun 86 p 1

[Report: "The State Council Issues a Circular on Strengthening Control Over Extrabudgetary Funds"]

[Text] The State Council recently issued a circular calling on all areas and departments to seriously strengthen control over extrabudgetary funds, to maintain an overall balance of social funds, and to bring into full play the role of extrabudgetary funds in economic construction.

The "circular" says that over the past few years, along with the reform of the economic structure and the development of production, there has been a great increase in extrabudgetary funds. The total amount of extrabudgetary funds in 1985 was estimated at some 140 billion yuan, about 81 percent of the budgetary revenue. These funds played an active role in enlivening enterprises, developing lateral economic ties, and promoting economic and social development. However, due to the unsound management system and lax financial discipline, quite a few problems still exist in the control and use of funds. First, some units charged fees under all sorts of names and changed budgetary revenue into extrabudgetary revenue or even treated the funds as their own "wealth." Second, some areas, departments, and units used extrabudgetary funds to develop without authorization projects not covered by plans, and blindly expended the size of fixed assets investment. Third, some funds for specified purposes have not been properly used. For example, funds for developing production have been misappropriated for issuing bonuses, material objects, and for welfare. All these are important reasons for expansion of the fixed assets investment size and consumption funds.

The "circular" points out that extrabudgetary funds are funds not covered by state budget which all areas, departments, and units can draw and use of their own accord in accordance with the relevant stipulations of the state. The specific items of extrabudgetary funds are decided by the Ministry of Finance.

The scale charges, proportions of withdrawing and retaining, and scope and scale of expenditure of all extrabudgetary funds should be carried out in accordance with the stipulation of the State Council and Ministry of Finance. Funds assigned by the state for specified purposes must be used properly and must not be used for other purposes. Except for specific stipulations made by the State Council and the Ministry of Finance, all areas, departments, and units have the right to arrange extrabudgetary funds of their own accord and in accordance with the relevant stipulations of the state. No area or department is allowed to transfer funds of other areas and departments under the excuse of equalitarianism.

The "circular" demands that the use of extrabudgetary funds in capital construction be strictly controlled and be reported to higher authorities for approval according to relevant procedures. Basic depreciation funds must be used in replacement and transformation of fixed assets enterprises, and must not be used in capital construction. Welfare funds, reward funds, and wage increase funds of staff and workers must be withdrawn according to the proportions set by financial, labor and personnel, and responsible departments. These funds must be promptly used after their withdrawal, and bonus tax and wage regulatory tax must be paid according to regulations. No unit is allowed to use extrabudgetary funds for developing production and other undertakings to issue bonuses, material objects, and subsidies.

The "circular" says that all areas and departments may manage extrabudgetary funds in different ways on the premise that the funds' ownership remains unchanged. In principle, the extrabudgetary funds of institutions and administrative units must be handled by financial departments in such forms as opening special bank accounts, carrying out planned management, conducting financial examination, and exercising banking supervision. In principle, the extrabudgetary funds of state-run enterprises and their responsible departments must be handled in the ways of planned management and policy guidance, and must not be handled by financial departments in the way of special bank accounts. All areas and departments can decide on specific management forms in connection with practical situations.

In conclusion the "circular" demands that governments at all levels bring revenue and expenditure plans of extrabudgetary funds onto the track of overall financial and credit plan, and maintain an overall balance so as to properly guide social financial resources. Planning, financial, and banking departments at all levels must guide and supervise the use of extrabudgetary funds according to the principles and policies of the state and requirement of macroeconomy, and assist responsible departments and units in properly using funds. Financial departments and banks at all levels must often check the implementation of revenue and expenditure plans of extrabudgetary funds, correct mistakes if found, and report the situation to higher authorities. Auditing organs at all levels must strengthen auditing supervision on extrabudgetary funds. Those who practice fraud and hold back and transfer funds must be punished according to financial discipline.

JINGJI RIBAO Editorial

[Editorial: "Persist in Earmarking a Fund for Its Specified Purpose, Strengthen Macroeconomic Control"]

[Text] Extrabudgetary funds have increased sharply along with the reform of the economic structure over the past few years. The total amount of extrabudgetary funds in the country in 1985 was estimated at 140 billion yuan. If properly used, such a huge sum could become an important financial resource of the country.

Otherwise, it could result in the failure of macroeconomic control and jeopardize the overall balance and coordinated development of the national economy.

Practice has proved that to properly control and use extrabudgetary funds, we must have a series of effective measures. The State Council recently issued a "Circular on Strengthening Control Over Extrabudgetary Funds." On the basis of making a serious analysis of the current stuation in control over extrabudgetary funds, it sums up the experiences achieved by all areas and development in exercising control over extrabudgetary funds, affirms some effective management forms that all areas have created in practice, and makes clear the policies, principles, and requirements for strengthening extrabudgetary funds in the future. Therefore, implementation of the "circular" will vigorously promote the management of extrabudgetary funds.

The most essential aim in strengthening control over extrabudgetary funds is to ensure their use in accordance with rules and to improve economic results. In particular, the specified funds of enterprises must be chiefly used in their self-transformation and self-development. To ensure the proper use of funds, the "circular" of the State Council reaffirms the principle of earmarking a fund for its specified purpose in the use of extrabudgetary funds. Implementing this principle will ensure the specified use of funds, help to bring into play the rule of extrabudgetary funds, and raise the efficiency of funds.

According to their own concrete conditions, some areas and departments have adopted different methods in the control over extrabudgetary funds over the past years. Some methods have been proved effective in practice. For example, some areas have adopted the method of financial departments opening special bank accounts, carrying out planned management, controlling financial approval, and conducting banking supervision in handling extrabudgetary funds of institutions and administrative units. While not affecting the ownership of the funds, this can control unreasonable expenditures. The State Council "circular" affirms this management method, and treats it as a principle governing the use of extrabudgetary funds of institutions and administrative units. Our experience over the past few years has proved that with only financial regulations made by individual areas and departments on the use of several extrabudgetary funds and without a unified management method, it is difficult to properly control extrabugetary funds.

The macreoeconomic control of extrabudgetary funds must be conducted on the basis of formulating an overall financial plan. At present, extrabudgetary funds are equivalent to over 890 percent of budgetary expenditures. If we pay attention only to budgetary expenditures and ignore the huge sum of extrabudgetary funds in the course of formulating overall economic plans, we will find it difficult to maintain an overall balance of the national economy. Therefore, we must bring extrabudgetary revenues under the overall financial plans, and treat them as a component of the overall financial plans. Only by maintaining an overall balance, is it possible to properly guide the use of extrabudgetary funds and to find a limit in macroeconomic control. For example, in making fixed assets investment, we must take into consideration the amount of budgetary expenditures, the amount of bank loans, and the amount of extrabudgetary expenditures, so as to maintain an overall balance. In appraising and deciding proportions of bonus of enterprises and institutions, we must take into consideration the relationship between the total wage amount and tax growth of national income, labor productivity, and the tax submitted by enterprises and to keep the growth rate of total wage amount lower than the growth rate of the national income, labor productivity, and the tax submitted by enterprises.

Extrabudgetary funds are scattered across the whole country. Without the vigorous support of governments at all levels and the close cooperation of all relevant departments, it is impossible for financial departments to properly control and use the funds. All departments must cooperate on their own initiative with financial departments in properly controlling and using extrabudgetary funds. Banks play an important role in supervising the use of extrabudgetary funds, as they directly control cash payment. Therefore, banks must play their functional rule, closely cooperate with financial departments, properly guide the use of extrabudgetary funds, and control unreasonable expenditures.

SLOWED DEVELOPMENT OF SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONES VIEWED

HK031532 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1329 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Roundup by correspondent Zhao Wei: "China's Special Economic Zones Are 'Moving Uphill' With Difficulty"]

[Text] Beijing, 1 July (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The once widely-publicized "Shenzhen speed" has now been reduced. At present, China's special economic zones [SEZ] are in a new stage of development. They have begun to "move uphill" with difficulty.

Over the past 5 years or so since their establishment, the four special economic zones -- Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Shantou, and Xiamen -- which are regarded as four "windows" of the opening up policy, have made remarkable achievements. This can easily be seen merely from the large amount of investment made by foreign and Hong Kong and Macao businessmen in these zones, which reached some $1.17 billion during this period, about one-fifth of the total foreign investment absorbed by the mainland in the same period.

According to the requirements of the state, the development of these special economic zones has now been shifted from the first stage to the second stage of "establishing an export-oriented economic structure which combines both industry and trade, with the stress on the former." State Councillor Gu Mu compared this change to "moving uphill and climbing one story higher."

There are many obstacles on this new course. The first problem is a shortage of funds. As a result of the rapid swelling of the construction scope over the past 2 years, the debit balance of bank credit has greatly exceeded the permitted limit. Thus, the special economic zones, which are shifting their orientation of development, have to continue to restrain the scope of construction in order to concentrate their funds on the development of export-oriented industry. Shenzhen has issued a notice on ceasing and delaying the construction of 84 projects, concerning a total investment of 2.1 billion yuan. Zhuhai has reduced the investment in capital construction from more than 1,500 million to 650 million yuan this year. The SEZ builders have shifted their attention from building more new capital construction projects to increasing the economic returns of the enterprises that have already been built.

Another difficulty for the SEZs is to maintain a balance of foreign exchange. The export rates of the industrial products produced by these special economic zones last year were all below 50 percent, except for Shantou, which was over 60 percent. In order to get more foreign exchange, the special economic zones are now making great efforts to readjust the industrial structure, mainly to restrict the development of hotels, restaurants, and commercial buildings, which already exceed need, and to support the industrial enterprises which have adopted advanced technology and are capable of producing export commodities.

This year, while restraining, stopping, or delaying the construction of 69 projects, including multi-purpose buildings, office buildings, and large-scale shopping centers, Zhuhai signed 9 new joint-venture and cooperative projects with foreign firms in the first quarter, the investment in which amounted to more that $33 million. More that 70 percent of the products produced by these enterprises can be exported.

The strict control over foreign trade by government departments has added difficulties to the special economic zones, which are changing their orientation of development. Due to the overall implementation of the import and export quota and permit licensing systems, and the difficulties in selling their products on the domestic market, the production many enterprises in the special economic zones, including Chinese-foreign joint ventures, cooperative enterprises, and those solely run by foreign capital, has been affected. the growth rate of Shenzhen's industrial output value reduced from an average of 115 percent in the past 5 years to a bit over 1 percent at the beginning of this year.

Although the speed has been reduced, the development of the special economic zones has not ceased. As a result of the effective control of the scope of capital construction, the economic situation has been relaxed. In may, the debit balance of bank credit was reduced by more than 510 million yuan compared with the beginning of the year, the growth rate of the industrial output value was raised to above 4 percent, and foreign exchange earnings increased by 16 percent over the same period of last year.

Investors for Hong Kong, Macao, and from other countries have not lost their confidence in the special economic zones. Every day more than 30,000 businessmen come to Shenzhen for trade talks. In Xiamen, all the unoccupied factory buildings in the Huli Industrial Area were rented out or sold in March. In Shantou, the sales income of foreign-invested enterprises in the first 4 months increased by 200 percent over the same period of last year.

Chinese leaders have attached great importance to the difficulties facing the special economic zones. Deng Xiaoping reiterated again and again that the policy of the state is to "open up" not to "restrict." According to Premier Zhao Ziyang's suggestions, relevant departments are now studying new measures to improve the working environment of the joint-venture enterprises. Efforts are being made to implement some special policies for the special economic zones and to work out binding regulations for these zones. All this makes the special economic zones regain confidence and look into the future in times of difficulty.

STEEL PRODUCTION INCREASE RESULTS IN STOCKPILING

HK080323 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 8 Jul 86 p 2

[By CHINA DAILY staff reporter]

[Text] China's all-out efforts to accelerate steel production is creating serious stockpiling of steel products this year.

Although the country's steel output for the first half of this year hit a record high, huge storage lots occurred because the variety and specifications of some steel products have not met the requirements of customers.

So far this year, more than 1.04 million tons of steel have not found markets at a time when China is suffering a serious shortage of steel.

The problem prompted state economic planners to come up with measures to alleviate the problem, which is expected to continue through the rest of the year, according to sources.

The State Statistics Bureau has confirmed an increase in the nation's steel storage this year, reporting that by the end of May, stockpiling rose 3.44 million tons in three months.

Chin's steel manufacturers are now gearing up to produce 50 million tons of steel this year — a target set by the state.

In the first six months of the year, China's steel output totalled 25.44 million tons, up 10 percent over the same period last year.

But in the first five months, stockpiling rose by 23.7 percent over the corresponding period last year.

It is expected that more than 1.78 million tons of steel products will not find markets in the second half of the year.

Some steel producers have taken advantage of the shortage by turning out steel not in conformance with customers' requirements.

Government departments from the State Economic Commission, the Ministry of Metallurgical Industry and the State Administration of Supplies jointly issued a six-point regulation to reverse the trend.

It demanded that all steel producers turn out steel in strict accordance with requirements and urged the press to monitor failures to comply.

"Regarding the practice of steel producers not fulfilling customers' orders according to the State plan, but signing contracts at higher prices behind the scene, the press should publicly expose and criticize the wrongdoings," it said.

RENMIN RIBAO ON VILLAGE SOLVING PARTY PROBLEMS

HK020947 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jun 86 p 5

[Article by Lin Zhiyong and Zhao Qingbin: "An Attempt To Solve Inner-Party Condradictions During the New Period -- Experience of the Party Branch of Tongxia Village in Lingshou County, Hebei, in Educating Party Members on the Party's Purpose"]

[Text] The party branch of Tongxia Village, Lingshou County, Hebei Province, is one of four advanced party branches in the whole province. After the start of party rectification, some people raised the question about what the object of rectification should be where an advanced party branch is concerned. How should the rectification effort proceed? In regard to the situation in the past few years of a weakening in some party members' concept of party spirit and in their sense of the aim of wholeheartedly serving the people, the Tongxia Village party branch decided to educate the party members of the village in the party's purpose in the current party rectification effort. Its concrete approach called for selecting typical examples locally, guiding party members in conducting self-education involving comparisons and inspections, and actively unfolding criticism and self-criticism.

The party branch cited the exemplary deeds of former party branch secretary Zhang Jinzhong as a subject for study and discussion by everyone. Zhang Jinzhong had been a cadre in the village for several decades and has "passed the three tests." The first test involves the family. As cadres, we cannot just think of "self" and the "family" in our approach to things, nor can we give friends and relatives preferential treatment. Instead, we must have the great majority of people in mind. The second test is life. As cadres, we cannot seek privileges and must live up to the aim of accepting no gifts and seeking no benefits at the expense of others. The third test is the claim for credit. When something has been achieved in work, we cannot just claim credit for ourselves. We must remember at all times that as party members and cadres, we are obligated to do good for others. All party members of the party branch consciously took the former party branch secretary as an example, reviewing their own past and working out a clearcut direction for future efforts.

From 1954 when agricultural cooperatives were established in Tongxia Village to the beginning of the "Great Cultural Revolution," 56-year-old Zhang Lanni was a cadre in the village. At that time, he was devoted to the collective cause heart and soul. He knew nothing about what is called "being a loser" and what is called "fatigue." In handing over grain to the government, he was the first to haul grain from his own home. In bringing beaches under control, he was the first to dive into the water. In the 3-year period of difficulty, he shared the last of his grain at home with the masses, while he and his wife starved. The last thing he thought of was that during the "Great Cultural Revolution" he would be made to go on parade, haul mud bricks, put on humiliating tall hats, and suffer every indignity. He was also relieved of his post as village head. He swore that he would never in his life get involved with the collective cause any more. At the end of June last year, he handed over his annual party membership fee ahead of time. Then he bought three calves and a young female donkey. By day he went to the river bank herding his livestock. At night he sat at the end of a brick bed playing with children. After the start of party rectification, in studying the deeds of the former party branch secretary who passed "the three tests," he said to himself: I take care of my own donkey. You play your own role as an official. After all, I have quit working for the collective. But with the deepening of the party rectification effort, his cool attitude gradually warmed up in response. After the study of the general and specific policies of the 3d plenary session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and after listening to party lectures, he came to understand the main trend of reform in our country and the excellent situation of ever greater progress being made, understand the glorious mission and duties assumed by Communist Party members in the new period, and understand what a communist should and should not do. All this woke up the party spirit in him that was on the verge of extinction. At a meeting calling for comparison, inspection, and correction, he reviewed with shame his own ideas and acts of not caring for the state and the collective. The next day he sold the donkey and calves and wrote a letter to the party branch, writing in shaky hand: "In the future, the party and the collective enterprise have work for me. If I cannot give one jin of my energy, I can at least contribute an ounce!" The party branch made him the head of a foundry that had been in a state of paralysis. He resolutely took up the job. In less than 1 month after he assumed office, he brought about a new situation in the factory's production. After the introduction of the practice of "contracting on a large scale" in 1983, Communist Party member Zhang Wuxiang committed his family to a collective 100-mu apple orchard, 9 mu of responsibility field, and 5 mu of power-operated field. He and his wife busied themselves with these and other jobs and got rich through hard work. They boasted an income of more than 3,500 yuan in 1 year. They led quite a comfortable life privately. In the process of learning from Zhang Jinzhong, Zhang Wuxiang came to realize that in the past few years, he had figured things out carefully where his own family's "small accounts" are concerned and had been a little negligent in working out figures where the collective "big accounts" are concerned.

He had not contributed anything to the collective. The village had newly set up a paper box factory. The party branch considered making him the head of the factory. He gladly offered to take up this post. With his wife's support, Zhang Wuxiang relieved himself of his own family affairs. With disregard for the financial loss caused to the family, he went to work at the paper box factory. In less than 3 months, he generated an income of more than 8,000 yuan for the collective.

"If anything is to be dropped, it cannot be the weapon of criticism and self-criticism." This is a lesson learned by former secretary of the Tongxia Village party branch, Zhang Jinzhong, in his work as a cadre for several decades in the practice of party building.

In the campaign to educate party members about the party's purpose, the Tongxia Village party branch never for a moment forgot to pick up such a sharp weapon as criticism and self-criticism in ceaselessly purging every party member of political dust in the ideological field.

Veteran party member Zhang Ronglai had learned the art of installing heating facilities with his tuition fees paid by the collective. The first thing he thought of was not to contribute to efforts toward common wealth. Instead, he lured away about 10 technical workers from the foundry to Shijiazhuang to go into the business of installation in an effort toward personal prosperity.

Many party members said something critical about Zhang Ronglai's involvement with "efforts toward personal prosperity and not collective wealth." Zhang Ronglai failed to think straight. He said: "The party's policy now is to allow a number of people to get rich first. Communist Party members are also urged to take the lead in getting rich. I work hard to get rich and follow the law in so doing. I neither cheat nor practice deception. What I fall back on is technique. What I sell is energy. What is wrong with this?"

There is a rule in the Tongxia Village party branch that a party member who has erred is not turned against. Everyone sits together reasoning things out and trying to convince others by reasoning. At a party branch meeting, the following took place:

Deputy Party Branch Secretary Su Xiulan said: "The party's purpose is to serve the people wholeheartedly. There is nothing wrong with your efforts toward personal prosperity. But this is worthy of only a low-standard Communist Party member. If you devote your energies to leading the masses in seeking common wealth, then you are worthy of being a high-standard Communist Party member. We communists of Tongxia cannot be low-standard communists and should strive to be high-standard ones."

Party Branch Secretary Jin Jitang said: "The collective invested more than 80,000 yuan in training you people in the art of installing heating facilities. Now you people have grown wings and want to leave the old folks in the village alone, making money for yourselves outside. If our party members of Tongxia are all like this, then how will the masses fare?"

Deputy Party Branch Secretary Yang Ronggui said: "The party urges communists to lead the masses in following the road toward common wealth. How can you do otherwise? In my opinion, given the new situation of opening up to the outside world and enlivening things at home, you have become stained with the stink of money...."

Zhang Ronglai realized his own error. Red-faced, he said: "I may as well be blamed for my own selfishness and lack of a correct idea. I am unworthy of the many years of training given me by the party and the people."

"Looking back, I will surely devote energy to leading the masses in seeking common wealth." Later, he brought back to Shijiazhuang the people he had taken away and worked keenly on building village enterprises and developing the collective economy. The masses said with delight: "Zhang Ronglai, who had flown away with his heart, has come back."

The Tongxia Village party has achieved gratifying results in handling party building and the building of spiritual civilization. But not big enough strides have been taken in building spiritual civilization. On behalf of the party branch, party branch Secretary Jin Jitang made a penetrating study of this and other problems and aroused all the party members to put forth criticisms and suggestions to the party branch.

The earnest criticisms and suggestions put forth by party member comrades left party branch members greatly moved. After serious discussions and studies, a great blueprint unfolded before people. They subjected 16 village-operated enterprises to bold reforms and hired people who were career-minded, imbued with a strong concept of party spirit, and capable of giving creditable performances and building enterprises for the collective to take charge of production matters in these village-operated enterprises.

Since party rectification, the party members of Tongxia Village have developed a relatively strong idea of wholeheartedly serving the people.

XINHUA RIBAO ON MAINTAINING RELAXED ATMOSPHERE

OW021315 Nanjing XINHUA RIBAO in Chinese 23 Jun 86 p 1

["XINHUA Forum" article by Sun Jiazheng: "Relaxation, Tolerance, and Something Else"]

[Text] Most comrades feel from the bottom of their hearts that the present cultural climate is the best and most relaxed in the more than 30 years since liberation. But many comrades are somewhat worried. What are they worried about? They worry lest there would be change. When the rural responsibility system had just been instituted, peasants were afraid lest there would be a change in policy. Now these comrades worry just as the peasants did at the time. These comrades worry about this: Some leaders are tolerant today, but what if intolerant leaders take their place? Some people call such fear of change and of the unpredictable future "lingering fear." "Lingering fear" prompts "expectations." Leaders are expected to be tolerant not only for awhile, but for a long time to come in order to ensure that there is a relaxed environment for steady development.

It is undeniable that tolerance shown by leaders is an important factor in creating a relaxed environment. Today, one with knowledge of history and respect for reality can see this noticeable change: No matter what shortcomings our party may have in leading ideological and cultural work, most leading comrades have a more tolerant spirit. A reflection of this spirit in guiding principles is the encouragement of people to engage in bold explorations without fear of making mistakes, the promotion of the social practices of free thinking and free contention, and the resolute elimination of the vestiges of the feudal notion that "power is truth." A reflection of the tolerant spirit in leading methods is the promotion of "adjusting little by little" [wei tiao 1792 6148] through discussion on an equal footing and the resolute elimination of the "left" practice of using political means to judge what is right and what is wrong academically.

This tolerant spirit is a form of progress made after learning from complicated historical lessons, gaining trust in large numbers of intellectuals based on understanding, and achieving awareness on the basis of knowledge of the law governing the development of art and science.

However, one is wrong to think that a relaxed environment is the result only of the leaders' tolerance. For tolerance, after all, represents the leaders' judgment, view, code of conduct, frame of mind, and broadmindedness. In any given situation, the leaders' tolerance is conditioned by their level of knowledge and ideological standpoint and even influenced by their moods, likes and dislikes. This is why relaxation based only on "tolerance" cannot but result in a certain weakness, changeability, which means an environment changing with the leaders' subjective conditions, relaxed one moment and tense the next. In retrospect, when the "double hundred" policy had just been set forth, did we not have a relaxed and harmonious environment? Then what happened? Everyone remembers well the fine and rainy days and the changes that took place in those 30 years. Practical experience shows us that a relaxed environment which hinges only on the leaders' tolerant spirit is unstable.

Then how can we maintain the stability and continuation of the relaxed and harmonious environment? I think we should try to find a solid foundation and a reliable guarnatee for the steady and stable development of the relaxed and harmonious environment by grasping the law governing the creation of such an environment.

What is called a solid foundation here is the ongoing reform of the economic structure. When we review the course we have followed in the past 7 or 8 years, we can clearly see that the current situation is not only the result of the leaders' tolerance, but the inevitable outcome of thorough implemention of trhe party's policies of opening to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, a gratifying phenomenon brought about by the successful development of reform and modernization. This is why the current situation is not a repetitious alternation of relaxation and tension, but a reflection of the objective requirement of reform of the economic structure. It is unavoidable to have certain rises and falls like waves, but the basic pattern is set. As the old saying goes, "This is the general trend and popular feeling," and there is no need at all to have "lingering fear." Since the economic reform was launched not long ago, we have been faced with many complicated and arduous tasks. Thus, the relaxed and harmonious environment in the ideological and culture spheres will undergo a rigorous test in the course of reform. One writer said: Whether or not the freedom of creation is guaranteed depends on whether or not our economic reform develops smoothly. If it develops smoothly, our freedom of creation is fully guaranteed; if our economic reform suffers a setback, I am afraid that we could not continue to enjoy the freedom of creation. Therefore, no matter what he writes about, a writer should concern himself with the tremendous change taking place in the country. This view merits deep thought from all ideological and cultural workers who hope for steady development of the relaxed environment. What is called a reliable guarantee here refers to socialist democracy and the socialist legal system. Relaxation is a formula borrowed from the ongoing economic reform. Because this formula brings out the ills of the times, it is widely welcomed. However, "Any figure of speech is pointless." It is necessary to accurately define the meaning and connotations of the formulation in order to avoid a haphazard grasping or interpretation of it. This can be done only by a sound legal system. During his recent visit to Britain, Comrade Hu Yaobang, while answering a question about human rights, quoted the enlightened French thinker Montesquieu as saying: Freedom is the right to do anything permitted by the law. As for "relaxation," I think it may be viewed this way: On one hand, "relaxation" must be within the limits permitted by the law' on the other hand, all activities within the limits permitted by the law should be protected by it.

As our democracy and legal system are strengthened step by step, the exercise of democratic rights by citizens is guaranteed by various specific laws. Thus, individual leaders, whether they are tolerant or not, cannot use their powers to impose their personal will on others; nor can they force comrades who advance differing academic views to make self-criticism, to admit mistakes, or to accept punishment. Only thus will it be possible to ensure the stability and continuation of the relaxed environment.

Based on this understanding, I suggest extending the discussion on the relaxed and harmonious environment in two directions:

1. It should be extended to the leadership. Based on a profound understanding of the objective law governing intellectual production, how we can further develop socialist democracy to ensure the implementation of the "double hundred" policy?

2. How ideological and cultural workers themselves should strive to create a relaxed environment. Then, they will have no more "lingering fear" or will not be afraid of this or that, nor will they be passively waiting for others to create a "relaxed" environment for them. They will cherish their democratic rights and turn out high-quality intellectual products to prepare the public for the new productive forces and to serve the purpose of building a powerful socialist country with a high level of civilization and democracy, which will actually create the basic conditions for stability and the continuation of the relaxed and harmonious environment.

YANGCHENG WANBAO ON RERELEASE OF 'MODEL OPERAS'

HK040456 Guangzhou YANGCHENG WANBAO in Chinese 29 Jun 86 p 2

[Article by Zhang Yang: "Is It That Has Been Rehabilitated?"]

[Text] Some 4 or 5 years ago, I was in Beijing when suddenly one day I doubted my own ears upon hearing strains of tunes from "revolutionary model operas" coming from the radio. When I finally established that my hearing was not at fault, I turned off the radio. Almost simultaneously, a neighbor rushed over and, with wide eyes, asked me, "Is it that 'Comrade' Jiang Qing has been rehabilitated?!"

I thought no one would ask me why Jiang Qing is lumped together with "model operas," because anyone in his right mind knows that the relationship between the two is an issue beyond question.

However, an issue beyond question has become a question. At that time, the writer Liu Shaotang took the lead and raised his objections in the newspaper over the resurgence of "model operas;" other listeners followed suit in voicing their objections. So, someone came out and explained: "Model operas" are the fruit of painstaking labor of the great mass of revolutionary artistic and literary fighters and should not be put entirely on the account of Jiang Qing! "Model opera" in itself is revolutionary and was only usurped and used by Jiang Qing! Etcetera, etcetera, etcetera.

Although Jiang Qing is in prison, the "great mass of artistic and literary fighters," including those "model troupes" under her aegis, continue to enjoy the freedom to create. No one has come out to explain: Why is it that they did not create such "model operas" in the 17 years before the "Cultural Revolution" or in the 10 years after the fall of the "gang of four" but only came up with such an "undertaking" during the 10 years of catastrophe? Did "model operas" truly reflect their aspirations? No! Every Chinese who went through the "Cultural Revolution" knows that without Jiang Qing, there could have been no "model operas."

Jiang Qing was the soul and dictator of "model operas," and conversely, "model operas" were the tool Jiang Qing used to "sweep through" the arts and literary circle as well as the weapon she used to transmogrify cultural life. "Model operas" are major inalienable components of the "Cultural Revolution" and are the products that Jiang Qiang and her cohorts needed politically in order to usurp the party and seize power.

It is necessary to not treat anything with a one-sided approach or in isolation, and this is also true of "model operas." I do not know where lie the artistic values of "model operas;" certainly they must not refer only to the heavily made up faces, the formula storyline and its brave rhetoric, and the pretentious stage poses. As to their "revolutionary" values, well, revolution has always been concrete and not abstract in nature. Who are their "revolutionary propellers?" They are Jiang Qing and the bunch of people who used the unprecedented means of a "Cultural Revolution" to weak havoc on the country and the people. Who are their "revolutionary targets?" They are almost all China's writers, artists, and the entire socialist arts and literary industry of the time. On this matter, the "model opera" brilliantly accomplished the "historic mission" entrusted by the "gang of four." It is precisely on this point that every Chinese who still has intuitive knowledge, especially the artistic and literary workers, instinctively and logically feels repulsion toward "model operas."

Another reason for the people's hatred of "model operas" is because they are products of Jiang Qing's shameless plagiarism and usurpation. Let us not talk of those inferior works among the "model operas." Let us talk of the so-called better ones, such as "The Red Lantern," "Shajiabang," and "Taking Tiger Mountain by Stragegy." In many respects, they are not as good as the original works: "Successors Will Surely Emerge" (movie), "Seed of Fire Amidst the Reed Marshes" (play), and "Into the Forest and Snow Plains" (novel). After the usurpation, the original works and original authors were all "criticized thoroughly, overthrown, and discredited completely" and then thrown to hell. Because without so doing, it was impossible to hold up the "glorious image" of Jiang Qing as an "arts expert" and "great standard bearer."

In that instance 4 or 5 years ago, "model operas" were heard over the radio for a while, then disappeared from the scene. This year, they have made a majestic and grand reappearance, enabling people to appreciate "model operas" on certain television programs.

Music (that is, music in its broad sense) possesses a special charm. That is, if you listen to a particular musical piece frequently at a particular period of time, then no matter how many years may have gone by, once you hear that piece again, you could feel transported back to that time...

Four or five years ago, when I was in Beijing, I paid repeated visits to a lady assistant professor at the Institute of International Relations. Her husband was an outstanding scientist with the aeronautics and aviation department and was beaten to death by a rebel faction during the "Cultural Revolution": All the time that the scientist was subjected to vicious beatings and later when his body was put on display, the rebel faction's headquarters nearby put up a loudspeaker to broadcast an aria from a "model opera."

"To this day," the assistant professor said with a trembling voice, I have only to hear that aria again and I am overcome with terror and feel cold shivers down my spine, as though I had been brought back to those horrifying times..."

Anyone who went through the 10 years of catastrophe can testify: "Model operas" and "quotation songs" formed the "major melodies" of the "Cultural Revolution," with all the comedies, farces, tragedies, and dramas of the time played to their accompaniment.

And if one were to speak of "artistic values" and "blood ties" with the "gang of four," notably with Jiang Qing herself, then the status and influence of "model operas" are way above those of "quotation songs." Hence, "Is it that 'Comrade' Jiang Qing has been rehabilitated?!" This question may seen humorous, but it is not. If today there is one single person who would feel most gratified and hopeful of watching "model operas" over the television screen, I dare say it must be Jiang Qing herself! As for people who bring out "model operas" at every possible chance, it is indeed not easy to speculate on their inner thoughts. However, people at least have reason to believe that either they have forgotten the catastrophic lot of insults, destruction, trampling, and massacre inflicted by the "Cultural Revolution" upon our nation, or they have ignored the still sensitive, still bleeding national psyche of the millions of Chinese people!

CHEN MUHUA INAUGURATES POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITS

[By reporter Zhang Jinsheng]

[Text] Beijing, 1 Jul (XINHUA) -- At a ceremony today for the beginning of postal demand savings deposits, which can be deposited in one place and withdrawn in another, Chen Muhua, state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China, said: We should develop not only specialized banks' savings deposits but also postal savings deposits as soon as possible. Local governments in various parts of the country should vigorously support post offices taking savings deposits and create conditions to support them in this regard.

Post offices in Beijing, Tianjin, Shanghai, and Guangzhou opened this business at the same time today.

On behalf of the State Council, Chen Muhua congratulated the post offices on the opening of this business. She said: This is a good thing to do to meet social needs and make things convenient for depositors. Since ours is a country with vast territory and a large population we should use various methods and channels to develop the people's savings deposits. The postal system has more than 50,000 post offices in the urban and rural areas of the country, and it is of great advantage to use such post offices, which can be found everywhere, to handle savings deposits. What is particularly advantageous is that we can use the telecommunications network to gradually build a computer data system with nationwide linkage for processing postal savings deposits, in order to facilitate the people's depositing or withdrawing money.

Chen Muhua stressed: The savings deposits in post offices and banks complement each other. Beginning postal savings deposits is not a task only for postal departments, but part of the government's work at various levels. Banks in particular should give more guidance and support to post offices in this business.

Responsible persons of the CPC Central Committee, relevant departments under the State Council, Beijing, Tianjin, Guangzhou, and Guangdong Province attended the ceremonies in their respective places.

NANJING MILITARY REGION REFINES PARTY SYSTEM

[By report Wu Dongfeng and correspondent Wang Haozhong]

[Excerpts] Nanjing, 4 Jul (XINHUA) -- Units at and below the regimental level under the Nanjing Military Region built up and perfected the various systems of party life in the course of party rectification. Consequently, the combat effectiveness of the 1,300-odd party banches at the grass-roots level that conducted party rectification before the others has markedly improved.

In the course of party rectification, these party organizations at the grass-roots level extensively established the systems of party day, party class, heart-to-heart talks among party branch members, and ideological reporting by party members. Strict organizational life has brought about widespread heartening changes in the party organizations at the grass-roots level. The number of party members who have strived to become exemplary vanguards and who wholeheartedly serve the interests of the people has increased, while those party members who sought personal gain through the abuse of power and tried to override the party organizations have declined. The political atmosphere has improved the vulgar things have lost their appeal. In the course of troop reduction and reorganization, some cadres and fighters of a certain Red Army regiment asked their leaders to intercede for them in order to solve their problems of job transfers, relocations, and admissions to the party. However, since party rectification was initiated, the party organizations of battalions and companies have persisted in implementing the system of collectively studying the major issues, thereby making it difficult for individual leaders to intercede in their own behalf at party branch committee meetings. Because of its persistent efforts in exercising collective leadership, the regiment did not violate organizational principles by developing a single party member and promoting a single cadre.

LIANG BUTING VISITS SHANDONG PARTY HISTORY MEETING

[Text] A meeting was held in Jinan from 15 to 23 June to examine the manuscript of the book "Major Events in the CPC History of Southern Shandong." Gao Keting, chairman of the Shandong Provincial Commission for Collecting Party Historical Data, presided over and addressed the meeting. Vice chairman Qin Hezhen and Zhongyin attended the meeting. Veteran Comrades Lin Hujia, Peng Jiaqing, Wang Liusheng, Lu Zhixian, Yang Shifa, Wang Jianxin, Li Qing, Mu Lin, Xu Yan, and Zhang Kai, who worked in the southern area of Shandong Province during the war, made special trips from Beijing, Shanghai, and Jilin to the province to participate in this meeting. Also attending the meeting were some veteran comrades stationed in Jinan who had worked in the southern area of the province during wartime.

During the meeting Liang Buting, Li Changan, and Su Yiran visited the comrades who had made a special trip from other provinces to participate in the meeting.

Lu Maozeng, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, made a speech at the beginning of the meeting. He said: Accurate historical data for southern Shandong is not only needed for studying, propagating, and compiling Shandong's party history, but also is a teaching material for conducting education on revolutionary traditions among the vast number of party members, cadres, and the masses.

GUIZHOU MEETING CALLS FOR IMPROVED BIRTH CONTROL WORK

HK040229 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] The provincial CPC Committee and government held a telephone conference on birth control work on the evening of 3 July. The meeting reported on the performance in this work in the first half of the year and arranged the work for the second half. The meeting demanded that the province get a still better grasp of birth control work, bring population growth control onto the track of economic development, and continue to control the province's population growth. Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Hu Jintao and Vice Governor Liu Yulin spoke at the meeting.

The meeting held that thanks to the attention given by the party committees and government at all levels, birth control work in Guizhou has made some progress compared with the same period last year. However, it is still far from meeting the demands of the provincial CPC Committee and government. The work is not effective enough and the development is uneven. In some places there are many births not covered by the plan and the birth rate is high. There are signs of a rise in the birth rate.

The meeting pointed out that the Seventh 5-Year Plan is a peak birth period. All prefectures and cities must seriously analyze their local situation, unify their understanding, and work ceaselessly to promote birth control. In the second half of the year, it is first necessary to do a good job in publicizing and implementing the birth control policies. We must eliminate certain current erroneous ideas. Proceeding from the country's long-term interests, we must continue to advocate that a couple have only one child, and continue to promote late marriage and child-bearing. Through propaganda, we should enable the great majority of the masses to accept the policies and measures that help to control population growth.

The leading cadres at all levels and the CPC and CYL members must play a leading and exemplary role. Those among them who violate the birth control policies by having too many children must be dealt with severely.

We must do a good job in building the birth control work contigent. We must put the rules and regulations on a sound basis, carry out periodic inspections, strictly examine performance, and reward or penalize people as appropriate. Violations of law and discipline in attacking and persecuting birth control work cadres must be seriously investigated and dealt with.

We must get a good grasp of organizational leadership for birth control work. The party committees and government at all levels must put birth control work in an important place on their agenda, unify their thinking and measures, and maake common efforts with the departments concerned to strictly control population growth in Guizhou.

NEI MONGGOL HOLDS MEETING ON RECTIFYING PARTY STYLE

SK070726 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Text] The regional meeting to exchange experience and to sum up the work of rectifying party style satisfactorily concluded in Hohhot this afternoon after a 5-day session.

The meeting called on party organizations at all levels and the vast number of party members throughout the region to clearly understand the current situation, enhance their spirit, and to make up their minds in greeting the 40th anniversary of the founding of the autonomous region with the outstanding achievement of effecting a fundamental improvement in the region's party style as early as possible.

This meeting was sponsored by the regional CPC Committee. Attending the meeting were leading comrades of the regional CPC Committee, the regional Advisory Commission, the regional Discipline Inspection Commission, and the leading party groups of the regional People's Congress, and the leading party groups of the regional people's government, and the regional CPPCC Committee, responsible comrades of discipline inspection commissions under various league and city CPC committees; responsible comrades of the leading party groups and the discipline inspection groups of various departments of the organ directly under the jurisdiction of the regional people's government; and responsible persons of some units which have set examples in rectifying party style, more than 300 persons in all.

Bu He, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, delivered a report at the meeting. He Hao, secretary of the regional Discipline Inspection Commission, delivered a summing-up speech. This meeting devoted to discussing ways to achieve greater success in rectifying party style. The meeting stressed: At present, we should pay special attention to properly handling the relationship between the work of rectifying party style and the work of achieving success in reform, in opening to the outside world, and in invigorating the economy. To this end, we should define our thinkings and work methods in the following aspects:

1. We should fully understand the harmfulness of unhealthy trends. The unhealthy trends within the party will seriously damage the party's prestige among the masses. In particular, some persons attempt to destroy the reform under the signboard of reform, and disturb the economy under the pretext of invigorating the economy. This will weaken and shake the masses' confidence in reform and the four modernizations. If this trend goes unchecked, it will inevitably lead to the degeneration of the entire economy and bring about a society in which the cases of embezzlement, robbery, and bribery will take place frequently. Therefore, we should never overlook the work of correcting unhealthy trends, and should attend to this work in a resolute and vigorous manner.

2. Unhealthy trends should not be regarded as the inevitable outcome of the reform, the open policy, and the invigoration of economy. The current unhealthy trends are customs handed down from old thinkings, the vestiges of the feudalist ideology, and the expression of decadent capitalist ideology within the party under the new situation of reform, open policy, and invigoration of the economy. The reason why we exert ourselves in rectifying party style is to ensure the smooth progress of the reform, the open policy, and the invigoration of the economy.

3. We should adhere to the simultaneous grasping of party style and reform. Rectification of party style and introduction of reform are different in form but must be grasped simultaneously. Neither should be overemphasized at the other's expense. Economic work departments and leading comrades engaged in economic work should pay attention to party style, and political work departments and the comrades responsible for grasping party style should be concerned with reform and economic work so that they can support and promote each other.

4. In rectifying party style, we should pay special attention to supporting the reform with a clear-cut stand and encouraging the advanced. In the course of rectifying party style, we must seriously investigate and deal with those who take advantage of loopholes in the reform to violate laws and discipline and those who indulge in serious cases of abusing their powers to extort personal favors. Those comrades who have made mistakes and errors in carrying out reform due to lack of experience should be instructed and encouraged to admit their mistakes and errors, to sum up experience, to draw lessons, and to improve their work. On no account should we cling to their minor mistakes and shortcomings, nor should we allow those who idle away their time to lodge false accusations against those who engage in reform.

5. We should introduce and improve regulations and systems for rectifying party style. We should pay attention to summing up experience in line with the respective situations of various localities, and should specifically implement the relevant stipulations of the central authorities.

The meeting pointed out: Three years have passed since the 12th CPC Congress set forth the demand of effecting a fundamental turn for the better in party style in 5 years. Party organizations at all levels throughout the region should attend to their work in a serious and conscientious manner in line with the demand of the CPC Central Committee in an effort to effect an improvement in party style.

HEILONGJIANG SCORES ACHIEVEMENTS IN PARTY REFORM

SK030904 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2100 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Our province has scored marked achievements in launching the party rectification drive at the county level. Localities throughout the province have brought about a gratifying change in the mental attitude of the broad masses of party members by regarding as a central task the work of enhancing party spirit and straightening out party style in the course of party rectification. A favorable turn in party style has also promoted the prevalence of a favorable turn in social morale.

In launching the party rectification drive at the county level, localities throughout the province have emphatically conducted education on ideals, purpose, and discipline in an effort to deal with the problems in which some party members have been in low spirits, have a weak sense of party organization, and have not fostered a firm will to serve the people. They have also concentrated on upgrading the quality of politics among party members and heightening their awareness of production. As a result, the broad masses of party members have enhanced their sense of party spirit. Many party members have vied with each other in becoming advanced ones. Units at the county level throughout the province, which have taken up the party rectification work, have elected more than 2,800 outstanding party members.

In launching the party rectification drive at the county level, localities throughout the province have corrected, in the course of party rectification, the malpractices committed by some party-member cadres in seeking personal gain by taking advantage of power, against which the masses have lodged strong complaints. They have taken back 4.98 million yuan of illegal bonus distributed to more than 48,000 party-member personnel. More than 6,700 party-member cadres have been forced to return their bribes worthy of 549,000 yuan. More than 7,300 personnel have been investigated on charges of committing the malpractices of occupying and dealing in houses.

As for the serious problems exposed in the party rectification drive with regard to seeking personal gain by taking advantage of power and seriously violating the law and discipline, localities throughout the province have earnestly investigated and dealt with them by adopting the measures of placing cases on file at each level, classifying the cases in line with the difference of industries and trades, having leading personnel be responsible for the cases, and organizing full-time personnel in charge of case investigation. Units at the county level throughout the province, which have taken up the party rectification drive, have placed 3,497 cases on file. Of these cases, those that have been dealt with or have been well investigated account for 82 percent. Among those, major or serious problems reach 762 cases. Party and administrative sanctions have been imposed against the large number of party members who had violated the discipline. The party members who are seriously unqualified or not qualified in a less serious degree have been dealt with respectively in such a way that they were not allowed to make membership registration or had to put off their registration. Thus, the purity of the party organizations has been maintained.

During the party rectification drive at the county level, localities throughout the province have further straightened out the guiding ideology of various professions and have achieved an organic integration among the party rectification drive, the drive to conduct reforms, and the economic systems. As a result, they have created a situation in which both the party rectification drive and the drive to conduct reforms have not been held up, and the party rectification drive and the work have helped each other afterward.

In order to improve its work style, the Huachuan County CPC Committee has organized the cadres of the county level organs to go deep into the grass-roots level units to carry out investigation and studies. By soliciting the people's opinions and suggestions for the drive to conduct reforms and by summing up the experiences and lessons gained in the drive, the county party committee has written a more than 600,000-word report consisting of 14 special topics, in which it has put forward new measures for conducting reforms, thus, steadily deepening the drive to conduct reforms.

HEILONGJIANG TRANSFERS ARMED FORCES DEPARTMENTS

[Text] The change of the system and handing over the People's Armed Forces departments of 94 counties (cities) of our province, which took 3 months, concluded satisfactorily on 20 June. All the county (city) People's Armed Forces departments formerly belonging to the Chinese PLA organizational system were tranferred to local organization systems.

The change in the system and handing over of the People's Armed Forces departments has been a complicated task requiring a great amount of work. The provincial CPC Committee and government paid great attention to it. Leading comrades, including Sun Weiben and Hou Jie, heard reports and gave instructions on many occasions, and the provincial CPC Committee also issued documents particularly concerning this work. In the change of the system, the provincial military district worked out and transmitted to lower levels specific plans for handing-over and staffing, and paid particular attention to the readjustment of cadres and the installation of staff members and workers, ensuring the number and competence of the cadres of most People's Armed Forces departments. In addition to stabilizing the thinking of their personnel, all units organized forces to make an overall inventory of materials and accounts of funds, and to make registrations. The provincial military district also allocated special funds for the building of the People's Armed Forces departments. During the entire handing-over process, extravagant wining and dining and violations of law and discipline never appeared, thus satisfying the local authorities, military units, and People's Armed Forces departments.

SUN WEIBEN ATTENDS HEILONGJIANG AWARD CEREMONY

[Excerpts] This morning, the meeting hall of the creation family of the provincial Federation of Literary and Art Circles was permeated with a happy atmosphere because some leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government, including Sun Weiben, Chen Yunlin, Huang Feng, Zhang Xiangling, and He Shoulun, happily gathered under the same roof with the winners of the first provincial literary and art grand prizes and with representatives of cultural and art circles to hail the achievements scored by the provinces in literary and art creation over the past 2 years.

The prize-giving ceremony was presided over by (Lu Qi), director of the provincial Federation of Literary and Art Circles. (Gao Taifu), deputy director of the Propaganda Department of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a report on appraising work. The provincial grand prizes for literary art creation are issued in accordance with the relevant regulations promulgated by the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government in 1984 with regard to making the province's literary and art creation flourish.

According to incomplete statistics, from the beginning of 1979 to the end of 1985, more than 220 works by the province's professional and parttime literary and art workers won prizes at international and national competitions. To promote the posperity and development of the literary and art undertakings, the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government adopted 12 measures, one of which was to allocate 400,000 yuan for use as the grand prizes for outstanding literary and art creation. The literary and art grand prizes have been issued once every 2 years since 1984. A total of 726 works of various kinds were in the competition for the first litrary and art grand prizes. Through repeated discussions and deliberations, and a decision by ballot, a total of 144 works were entitled to win prizes.

Qi Guiyuan, director of the Propaganda Department of the provincial CPC Committee, read the notice concerning giving one-grade wage increases to winners of the literary and art prizes. At the conclusion of the ceremony, Chen Yunlin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech. In his speech, Comrade Chen Yunlin called on the vast number of literary and art workers throughout the province to make concerted efforts to create a new situation in the province's literary and art creation. He expressed his hope that the relevant leading comrades would respect the value of the literary and art creation, and would give full play to the talent of artists. He also expressed his hope that all literary writers would study and apply dialectical materialism, be able to reflect the times and life in a more authentic and accurate manner, and provide us with still more high-quality works.

HEILONGJIANG SETS UP CENTRAL ECONOMIC COOPERATION ZONE

[Excerpt] An inter-regional developmental lateral economic cooperation association -- the Central Economic Cooperation Zone of Heilongjiang -- which was joined voluntarily by 10 units was established in Harbin today. Mayors commissioners, and directors from Daqing City, Yichun City, Songhuajiang Prefecture, Harbin City, Suihua Prefecture, the Daqing Petroleum Adminstrative Bureau, the Daqing General Petrochemical Plant, the Songhuajiang Forestry Adminstrative Bureau, the Harbin Farm Administrative Bureau, and the Suihua Farm Adminstrative Bureau, signed an agreement on behalf of their areas and units. Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and government, including Hou Jie, Li Genshen and Liu Zhongli, attended the agreement-signing ceremony held on that afternoon.

Through discussions on an equal basis, the member units have formulated several regulations on developing lateral economic cooperation, and various methods of mutual-preference for cooperation among the member units of the zone. The Central Economic Cooperation Zone of our province will organize an inter-regional and inter-trade specialized cooperative production network led by the units which produce quality and brand-name products. It will establish production associations composed mainly of petrochemical, light industrial and textile, building material, medical and pharmaceutical, foodstuff, electronic, farm machinery and vehicle units to jointly support and spur the development of small and medium-sized enterprises and township enterprises. It will help clear the circulation channels, facilitate commodity markets. It will also help develop the advantage of scientific units and colleges and universities, exchange information with them, cooperate with them in developing intellectual resources, set up associations of scientific research and production units, and actively expand tourism.

The Central Economic Cooperation Zone of our province was established in light of the proposal and with support of the provincial CPC Committee and government.

Since November of last year, principal leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and government called for successful economic cooperation among areas in central Heilongjiang on many occasions. Recently leading comrades of the provincial government again heard reports on preparations for the establishment of the Central Economic Cooperation Zone. After repeated discussions, the member units of the zone reached an agreement, and established the board of directors of the central economic cooperation zone, the joint development foundation, and a liaison office in charge of the work of the economic cooperation zone.

JILIN SECRETARY ATTENDS URBAN ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

SK050237 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] The provincial urban collective economic work conference ended in Changchun today.

The conference defined measures for rationalizing the collective economic management system, set forth regulations concerning the reform of the leadership system of collective enterprises, and formulated policies on giving preferential treatments to the collective economy. The conference called on leaders at all levels to upgrade their understanding, strengthen leadership, persistently carry out reform, and to make concerted efforts to support the development of the urban collective economy.

Gao Di, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Gao Dezhan, provincial governor; and Gao Wen, vice governor of the province, delivered speeches at the conference. The conference held: Collective enterprises throughout the province have made irreplaceable contributions to arranging jobs for jobless people, facilitating stability and unity of society, and giving convenience to the people's livelihood. We must carry out reform to further develop the urban collective economy. Thus, the enterprises should perfect the economic responsibility system with the focus on contracts. The enterprises should hold democratic discussions to decide ways for signing contracts and making distribution. No units or departments can interfere in or place restrictions on the affairs of the enterprises. It is necessary to first carry out the stockholding and leasing systems in selected units and then to promote the implementation of the systems in all units by drawing upon experiences gained in selected ones. Efforts must be made to explore and formulate economic responsibility systems suitable to the collective economy.

The conference stressed: The Jilin provincial regulations on protecting the rights and interests of the urban collective enterprises formulated by the provincial government and approved by the provincial People's Congress are the first local regulations in this regard in our country. The departments in charge of the work of collective enterprises should regularly inspect the situation in the implementation of these regulations, immediately make reports to the governments and people's congresses if any problems are found, and conscientiously investigate and handle illegal cases in accordance weith the law. In order to strengthen the macroeconomic guidance to the collective economy, the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government decided to set up the Jilin provincial bureau in charge of urban and district collective economy and called on all cities, prefectures, and the autonomous prefecture to set up organizations for making overall plans offering coordinated service, conducting investigations and supervision, and timely grasping the collective economic situation. Simultaneously, governments at all levels should strengthen leadership and management over the collective economy; truly place the work on the agenda; distribute, arrange, inspect, and sum up the work of both the state and collective enterprises in a unified manner; firmly grasp current production; and strive to create a new situation in the urban collective economy.

GANSU LEADER STRESSES ECONOMIC INVIGORATION

HK030253 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Governor Jia Zhijie proposed at the provincial conference of prefectural commissioners and city mayors which concluded on 2 July that it is essential to unswervingly promote the plant manager responsibility systems, and further invigorate the enterprises in the second half of the year, to ensure steady development of the province's economic work.

Jia Zhijie said: the province's industrial growth rate in the first half of the year was normal, and the situation is comparatively good. In the second half of the year, it is necessary to further delegate powers to the enterprises, assign first place to improving economic results, and solve well the question of relationship between production and consumption.

He said: The province should develop a variety of forms of economic ties based on the enterprises, centered on the cities, and focused on commodity purchase and sales services, invigorate the state-owned commercial enterprises, and turn them into economic entities managing their own affairs and responsible for their own profit and loss. The commercial, supply, and marketing departments must do a good job in producing and supplying nonstaple food such as vegetables, meat, and eggs, actively send industrial goods to the rural areas, and further clear the circulation channels.

Jia Zhijie expressed the hope that government at all levels will actively and steadily promote reform and be bold in carrying out economic work. At present, we must focus on doing a good job in production in the third quarter and ensure the fulfillment of the province's goal of ensuring 8 percent and striving for 10 percent economic growth.

Provincial leaders Li Ziqi, Hou Zongbin, Ge Shiying, Liu Shu, and Lu Ming attended and spoke at the meeting.

Ningxia Hui Autonomous Regional CPC committee Secretary Li Xuezhi, who is currently inspecting work in Qinghai, was also present.

QINGHAI SECRETARY ADDRESSES PREFECTURAL, COUNTY LEADERS

HK070221 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The provincial conference of autonomous prefectural and county governors concluded in Xining on 6 July. The meeting conveyed the spirit of the national party rectification conference and heard and analyzed a report by Governor Song Ruixiang analyzing the economic situation in the first half of the year and outlining the main work arrangements for the second half.

Provincial CPC committee Secretary Yin Kesheng gave three views at the meeting on 6 July: 1) Correctly analyze the situation and make careful arrangements for work in the second half of the year. 2) Strengthen ideological and political work to ensure the smooth progress of reform and economic construction. 3) Acquire new concepts, improve work style, and do a thoroughly good job in boosting economic work.

Yin Kesheng said: The main current of developments in Qinghai is healthy, but we must also squarely face the difficulties and problems. The better the situation and heavier the tasks, the more the leaders at all levels must pay attention to ideological and political work. In connection with tasks for the second half of the year and the reality of reform, all areas and units must get a thoroughly good grasp of conducting education in party spirit for the party members, in legal knowledge for the whole people, in ideals for the young, in business ethics for the service trades, and in new ideas and techniques for the cadres and workers.

SHAANXI CPC EDUCATES MASSES IN YANAN SPIRIT

[By reporters Cui Chengwu and Hua Nianlun]

[Excerpts] Xian, 1 Jul (XINHUA) — The Shaanxi Provincial CPC Committee has educated the cadres and masses of people in the province in inheriting and advancing the spirit of Yanan and developing it under the new situation in order to promote the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization in Shaanxi.

Shaanxi is the province where Yanan, the mecca of revolution, is located. Since liberation, party organizations at various levels in Shaanxi have always regarded that it is a glorious task to inherit and carry forward the Yanan spirit. Shortly after he assumed the post of secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, Comrade Bai Jinian said in a newspaper article that the Yanan spirit is not only a magic weapon guiding our victory in the democratic revolution but it is also a spirital pillar for our socialist modernization drive. He called on the cadres and people in Shaanxi to correctly understand the Yanan spirit and continue to develop it under the new situation. Under the auspices of departments concerned under the provincial CPC committee and the Yanan Prefectural CPC Committee, a society for study of the Yanan spirit was especially set up for publishing the newspaper YANAN JINGSHEN [YANAN SPIRIT] and organizing veteran comrades of the Yanan period to write memoirs.

"Seeking truth from facts" — the school motto of the Yanan Central Party School written by Comrade Mao Zedong many years ago — forms an important component of the Yanan spirit. In order to inherit and carry forward the Yanan spirit, leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee have, in recent years, encouraged cadres at various levels in Shaanxi to go deep into the masses to conduct fact-finding investigations and draw up guidelines for their work in the light of reality in the province. Since the central authorities advanced the policies of opening to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy, the province has organized general surveys on a total of five occasions concerning the urban economic structural reform, rural social and economic conditions, impoverished mountainous areas, the situation in the province as a whole and various counties, and the strategy for economic and social development until the year 2000. In the survey on the urban economic structural reform alone, a total of over 8,000 cadres at the provincial, prefectural (city), and county (district) levels took part in the 100-odd day survey and wrote more than 800 reports containing concrete facts and ideas.

Wholeheartedly serving the people is the core of the Yanan spirit. In recent years, the Shaanxi Provincial CPC Committee has taken various opportunities to exhort cadres at all levels to always bear in mind the fundamental objective of wholeheartedly serving the people. In order to help some 3 million impoverished peasants in Shaanxi become well off as quickly as possible, over 8,000 offices have gone deep into the grass roots since last November to work together with local cadres in visiting village after village and household after household to expose the roots of poverty among the peasants and help them find ways to become well off, thereby performing solid work to solve their pressing needs as well as assisting them in drawing up long-range plans and measures to eliminate poverty.

After the liberation, veteran comrades of the Yanan period now living in Yanan and elsewhere in Shaanxi have retained the invaluable tradition and exerted themselves in the modernization drive. The Shaanxi Provincial CPC Committee has used its living examples in educating cadres and the masses, while criticizing a few localities and units for violating this tradition. A few years ago, some veteran comrades in Yanan Prefecture often asked the state for funds — in the name of an "old revolutionary base area" — to transform the backward condition of the prefecture. After they were criticized by the provincial CPC Committee, these veteran comrades took measures suited to local conditions, and mobilized and relied on the local people to plant grass and trees, thereby changing the appearance of the prefecture and eliminating poverty and becoming well off. The prefecture's per capita grain output was 468 jin in 1984, and, despite serious natural disasters, was 350 jin in 1985.

SHAANXI OFFICIAL ON HANDLING COMPLAINTS AGAINST REFORMERS

HK040339 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] The inaugural west China edition of JINGJI RIBAO publishes comments by a responsible comrade of the Shaanxi Provincial Discipline Inspection Commission on handling letters of complaint against people and protecting reformers. The responsible comrade said that in general no action should be taken on anonymous letters complaining of problems in the work of plant managers and directors carrying out reform. As for problems reported in ordinary letters, we should not be hasty in sending in work teams to investigate. Letters that are found to make false accusations must be resolutely investigated and dealt with, so as to bare the features of the accuser, hold him accountable, sentence him to the punishment facing the person he falsely accused, and punish him severely.

RADIO NOTES ATTACK ON MAO ON CPC ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Taipei, July 6 (CNA) — The following is a commentary by the Broadcasting Corporation of China (BCC) in Taipei entitled "Peking's New De-Maoization."

Red China's party chief Hu Yao-pang said Tuesday that an aging and confused Mao Tse-tung brought "catatastrophe" to the Chinese mainland by launching the 1966-76 "Cultural Revolution." Hu's accusation, which was contained in a speech marking the Chinese Communist Party's 65th anniversary, appears to be the strongest one made officially by Peking. However, it does not differ in substance from its previous judgement of the late dictator after the triumph of Teng Hsaio-ping and his allies. The Tengists' "historical judgement" in 1982 said Mao's contributions were greater than his follies, which they attributed to old age.

While the present rulers in Peking unanimously denounced the "Cultural Revolution", none of them has come out openly to attack his earlier excesses such as the anti-rightist campaign and the "Three Red Banners". These Maoist policies in the late 1950's to the early 1960's were as devastating to Mainland China as the decade-long Cultural Revolution in terms of both material and spiritual damage to the Chinese people.

Mao's heirs chose to remain silent about the earlier reign of terror because they themselves were his accomplices. Teng and others enthusiastically supported Mao in all his brutalities against the Chinese people until he turned his wrath against themselves during the "Cultural Revolution. "One may wonder why Hu renewed the accusation against Mao at this time. The reason is not difficult to find. In recent weeks the communist press has been lamenting almost daily that party cadres are blocking the Tengist reforms by refusing to relinquish their powers to factory managers and other technocrats responsible for implementation of the reforms. The stonewalling of the reform program by the party secretaries is one of the major factors behind its slow progress.

The ideological weapon with which the leftist cadres have been fighting with the reform is Maoism. They can argue with force and legitimacy that the Tengist reform has deviated from Mao thought by introducing capitalist methods.

By denouncing Mao on the occasion of the party's founding anniversary, the Tengists hope to disarm their opponents on the ideological front so that the resistance to their reform scheme can be removed. However, the strategy is unlikely to work, because the powerholders are afraid to go all-out against Mao and what he stands for. He is still officially revered as the father of the communist regime, and Mao's thought has been formally listed as among the "four basic principles."

There is only one way to solve Mainland China's myriad of problems. That is a clean break with Marxism-Leninism-Maoism and the restoration of democracy. Unless this is achieved, no amount of half-hearted de-Maoization will enable Peking to turn the corner.

PAPER COMMENTS ON PRC'S TAKEOVER OF MACAO

OW070331 Taipei CNA in English 0316 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 6 (CNA): A leading newspaper in Taipei says Red China is now facing many problems in its talks with Portugal on the return of Macao, an island off the coast of Kwangtung that heavily depends on Hong Kong for its survival.

Basically, there will not be major differences in talks between Portugal and Red China, and the biggest issues are to ease the resistance from the residents of Macao and to determine the time for the takeover, the UNITED DAILY NEWS said editorially.

The Peiping regime obviously hopes that it may take over Macao and Hong Kong at the same time in 1997, because taking over Macao earlier than 1997 will create many problems and result in instability in Hong Kong, the paper said.

The Portuguese Government expressed its intention to give up Macao as early as during the Cultural Revolution, but in recent years, it has seldom talked about this, partly because changes in the international situation have made it realize that the continued possession of Macao will be good for its economy and its international status, the paper said.

The editorial pointed out that the Red Chinese-Portuguese talks on the nationality of the residents of Macao after the takeover are expected to be more complicated than similar talks on the status of Hong Kong residents, because Macao is a territory but not a colony of Portugal. Besides, the Peiping regime is also worried that Macao's economy will plummet after its takeover, thus becoming a burden to its economy, it said.

GOVERNMENT CURBS SILK, HEMP EXPORTS TO U.S.

OW080251 Taipei CNA in English 0240 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 7 (CNA) -- Board of Foreign Trade [BOFT] announced Monday a partial and temporary ban on exports of silk and hemp products to the United States.

BOFT said that before the nation reaches a new textile trade agreement with the U.S., the textile makers here who have received letters of credit from American importers since July 1 will not be able to get permit to export silk and hemp products as ordered on the L/Cs. Those who received orders before July 1 will still be permitted to ship silk and hemp textiles to the states, BOFT said.

BOFT explained that the ban has been imposed in line with the ongoing third round of ROC-USA textile talks in Geneva, Switzerland as the U.S. is likely to set quotas on imports of silk and hemp and other textile products from the ROC during the talks.

FOREIGN MINISTRY HOLDS WEEKLY NEWS BRIEFING

To Hold Border Talks With India

OW090732 Beijing XINHUA in English 0712 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 9 (XINHUA) -- Chinese and Indian officials will hold their seventh round of talks in Beijing from 21 to 23 this month. This was announced by a spokesman for the Chinese Foreign Ministry at a weekly news briefing here this afternoon.

This round of the talks, the spokesman said, will be mainly devoted to the discussion of questions concerning the Sino-Indian border. In addition, the two sides will also discuss cultural, scientific and technical exchanges and other bilateral issues, and exchange views on international issues of common concern.

Chairman of the Chinese delegation is Liu Shuqing, vice-minister of foreign affairs, and chairman of the Indian delegation Venkateswaran, foreign secretary of the Ministry of External Affairs.

Views Japanese Elections Textbooks

OW090814 Beijing XINHUA in English 0757 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 9 (XINHUA) -- China expressed its wish here today to work together with the new government of Japan, to be formed by the Liberal Democratic Party, for good neighborly and friendly relations between the two countries.

A spokesman for the Chinese Foreign Ministry said this while commenting on the landslide victory of the Japanese Liberal Democratic Party in the election of the House of Representatives and the House of Councillors of the Japanese Diet at a weekly news briefing here this afternoon.

"As we do in usual practice," he said, "We shall extend our congratulations after the Japanese Liberal Democratic Party has formed a new cabinet." "We hope to work with the new government of Japan in a joint effort for the long-term and steady development of good neighborly and friendly relations between China and Japan," he added.

Commenting on the recent Japanese Education Ministry's approval of the new Japanese history textbook compiled by the National Conference for the Defense of Japan, the spokesman said that China has learned the new textbook has been approved after being revised several times. "The Japanese side has made briefings and explanations to us on this matter. The Japanese Government has exerted itself to the settlement of the matter. We have to further study the final version," he said.

PRC SAYS DEFECTORS 'CRIMINALS AND HARMFUL ELEMENTS'

HK090814 Hong Kong AFP in English 0746 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 9 (AFP) -- China said Wednesday that the 19 Chinese who defected to Taiwan via South Korea in a small boat were "criminals and harmful elements" who had fled the mainland to escape punishment.

In Beijing's first official comment since the group was picked up by South Korean maritime police on June 17, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said China was "extremely regretful" that Seoul had allowed them to go to Taiwan.

"This is contrary to the will of the people for Taiwan to accept these criminals and harmful elements while not allowing the normal exchange of people between Taiwan and the mainland," the spokesman said in a prepared statement read over the phone.

The spokesman said he was unable to give further details at this time about the nature of the defectors' alleged crimes. (Reports from Taiwan said the group included farmers, merchants, welders, civil servants and technicians. (The group did not receive the regular heros' welcome on their arrival in Taiwan and informed sources said they might be sent to an outlying island while arrangements were made for their future.)

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS U.S.-SOVIET SUMMIT PROSPECTS

[Commentary by Zhang Yunwen: "Prospects for U.S.-Soviet Summit Hard To Fathom"]

[Text] Arguments between the United States and the Soviet Union over the question of a second summit meeting have become more frequent in recent days. On 1 July, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Petrovskiy announced at a press conference that the Soviet Union has requested that the United States discuss a U.S.-Soviet foreign ministerial meeting in preparation for the second summit. U.S. officials expressed surprise at this, pointing out that United States long ago requested the Soviet side to set a date for the foreign ministerial meeting, and that the Soviet Union had not replied. This is a new confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union on the question of the foreign ministerial and summit meetings.

A second U.S.-Soviet summit was agreed during the Reagan-Gorbachev meeting in Geneva last November. The two sides agreed than that Gorbachev would visit the United States in 1986 for a second summit, and Reagan would visit the Soviet Union in 1987 for the third summit. Reagan invited Gorbachev to visit the United States in June this year, but the Soviet Union delayed replying, giving as its reason the lack of progess over the disarmanent issue. The foreign ministerial meeting scheduled for May in preparation for the summit was cancelled by the Soviet Union in April due to the U.S. air attack on Libya. Reagan wrote to Gorbachev at the beginning of June suggesting that the foreign ministerial meeting be held in July. The Soviet ambassador recently handed a letter from Gorbachev to Reagan, but the letter said noting about the date for the meeting. The United States has been rather annoyed by the Soviet side's unwillingness to set a date for the foreign ministerial meeting, and has reiterated its hope that the summit can take place after the congressonal mid-term elections in November; July would be quite a suitable time for the foreign ministerial meeting, otherwise, there will not be enought time to prepare for the summit. The Soviet Union for its part has stressed that fixing a place and time for the meeting is unimportant; what is important is the agenda and the results of such a meeting. The Soviet Union insists that there must be "substantive action," that is, some progress at the arms talks, in order to hold a second summit.

Amid these fierce arguments, it is evident that both the United States and the Soviet Union want something from a summit and that each has its own ideas and interests. Observers say that the United States is anxious to firm up the second summit and interested in a specific time and a relatively comprehensive agenda, while the Soviet Union is bent on forcing the United States to make concessions on the disarmament issue, and in particular hopes to contain the U.S. "star wars" scheme. The Soviet Union therefore does not want to close the door on the summit issue, but neither does it want to be quick to meet U.S. demands by setting a date for the meeting.

The importance of a second summit for Reagan's second term is obvious. Reagan wants to accomplish two great goals during his second term, namely tax reform, and improvement in U.S. -Soviet relations, with a reduction in nuclear weapons. At present he has only initially accomplished the first of these, while no progress has been made in the nuclear weapons talks, and U.S. -Soviet relations remain disturbed. This year the atmosphere of reconcilation of the "fireside talk" at Geneva has weakened. Since Reagan announced that he would no longer adhere to SALT, U.S. -Soviet relations have become strained again, and this announcement has also stirred up a wave of protest in Congress, among the allies, and among the American public. According to public opinion, Reagan never anticipated such a strong reaction. Then, in his speech at Glassboro on 19 June, he gave a positive evaluation of the new Soviet disarmament proposal, terming it a "serious effort." According to American political analysts, if there is a meeting this year, the Republicans will certainly continue to control the Senate at the mid-term elections; if another meeting is held in 1987, this will have a very big impact on the 1988 election and help the Republicans, and thus Reagan's second term will leave its mark on history. Apart from that, the Reagan administration is facing a diversity of views from within and without on the nuclear disarmament issue. The Soviet Union is naturally watching all this, and so it wants to keep up the pressure on the United States regarding the summit issue, while also making certain concessions on arms control in exchange for U.S. concessions on "star wars."

According to reports on recent Soviet disarmament proposals, the Soviet Union has changed its original demands on certian issues. For instance, the Soviet Union agrees that "star wars" research can be undertaken in laboratories, with the two sides guaranteeing to adhere to the antimissile missile treaty for at least 15 years. Reagan has stated that he does not exclude the possibility of trading the Strategic Defense Inititative for a reduction in the Soviet nuclear arsenal. According to public opinion, the flexibility of the two sides over the "star wars" issue may lead to certain progress in the disarmament talks, and thus increase the prospects for the successful convening of a summit.

However, analysts hold that generally speaking, the prospects for a summit are still hard to fathom. This is because there is endless argument between two factions in the U.S. Government over disarmament and policy toward the Soviet Union; President Reagan himself has not yet given a definite opinion. At present the various government departments are studying countermeasures for making a specific reply to the Soviet proposals. According to public opinion, so long as the United States does not make a specific reply to the Soviet proposals, the Soviet Unions will not set a date for the summit.

RENMIN RIBAO ON JAPANESE HISTORY TEXTBOOK ISSUE

HK070754 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 7 Jul 86 p 2

[Commentator's article: "Take a Correct View of History, Attain Friendship for Generations to Come"]

[Text] Today is the 49th anniversary of the "July 7th incident." On this unforgettable day, we may naturally think about the "textbook issue" recently occurring in Japan, and feel deeply that we should say something here about our basic viewpoint.

Japanese newspapers recently published many reports and commentaries on the deliberations on a high school history textbook by Japan's Ministry of Education. From these reports and commentaries, we know that the history textbook compiled by the "National Forum on the Defense of Japan" does not mention anything about Japan's aggression against other countries, misrepresents historical facts on many points, and even openly glosses over, and reverses the verdict on, the war of aggression. Like the "textbook incident" in 1982, this has evoked strong reactions among the Chinese people, other Asian peoples, and the Japanese public. They have seriously and solemnly criticized the actions of a small number of Japanese people involved in this event.

This event attracted people's serious attention because it is related to a basic question, that is, whether Japan admits or does not admit that the war which was launched by the Japanese militarists and which brought disaster to China and other Asian countries was a war of aggression. As a matter of fact, the world is always moving forward, and people should look to the future. The international community and the people of the world have long reached a clear conclusion on the nature of that war. This has also been clearly realized by the Japanese public and the Japanese people of vision in all circles. Some famous Japanese statesmen, including some government leaders, have directly or indirectly admitted that the unjust war was a war of aggression. In the Sino-Japanese joint declaration in 1972, the Japanese Government also solemnly announced: "The Japanese side painfully realizes its responsibility for the great harm caused to the Chinese people by Japan during that war and is willing to conduct profound self-reproach." However, some people in Japan still cherish the memory of that "sacred war to build a great East Asia," and whenever there is an opportunity, they certainly try to misrepresent that disgraceful part of history of defying world opinion.

In order to preserve the authenticity and solemnity of history, to consolidate the political foundation for Sino-Japanese relations, and to ensure the long-term and steady development of friendship and cooperation between the two countries, it is necessary for us to expose the activities of this small group of people and to answer their challenge to world opinion and the people of the world.

What is aggression? There is a clear definition in international law. The "dictionary of international law," compiled by Japan's Society of International Law, also clearly states: "Aggression generally refers to a country's actions which serve the purpose of realizing its demands imposed on another country and of changing the state of affairs by resorting to armed force." It also quotes the definition of aggression adopted by the 29th U.N. General Assembly: "According to the spirit of the U.N. Charter, aggression refers to one country's use of armed force to violate another country's sovereignty, territorial integrity, and political independence."

In 1946, the "Charter of the Far East International Military Court" pointed out that the planning, preparation, launching, and execution of a declared or undeclared war of aggression constitutes the "crime of disrupting peace." In 1948, the Far East International Military Court wrote, when listing the 55 crimes committed by Japan's major war criminals: All of the accused participated in scheming and in invading China's northeast provinces so as to control China, and, for this purpose, preparing and launching a war of aggression against China."

The Japanese militarists launched that war of aggression after long premeditation. In 1927, the then Japanese Prime Minister Giichi Tanaka, who was also foreign minister, submitted a so-called "program of policy toward China," which was also called the "Tanaka memorandum to the throne." This document pointed out the abundance of natural resources in northeast China and Inner Mongolia and the necessity of invading and occupying these territories. It said plainly: "In order to conquer China, we must first conquer Manchuria and Mongolia; in order to conquer the world, we must first conquer China. If China can be completely conquered by our nation, then other Asian nations, including India and South Pacific countries, will all be in awe of us and yield to us." This foreign expansion program fully exposed the Japanese militarists' ambition to invade Asia and dominate the world. Moreover, the "Tanaka memorandum to the throne" also argued that in order to achieve the above-mentioned purposes, Japan must resort to force of arms.

Under this guideline, in 1931, Japan provoked the "September 18th incident" and invaded northeast China; in 1937, it provoked the "July 7th incident" and the "August 13th incident," and launched a full-scale war of aggression against China. At that time, the handful of Japanese militarists claimed that they would "defeat China in 3 months." The then minister of the army even clamored that the Japanese Army would "occupy China" "in about 1 month." For a time, the Japanese militarists were completely swollen with their aggressive arrogance. In 1940, the Japanese cabinet dished up a more ambitious plan of aggression for building a "greater co-prosperity sphere of East Asia" in an attempt to gobble up Asia as a whole and to build a vast "royal territory" under its colonial rule. All the above historical facts are known to the world.

However, the compilers of the history textbook tried to stand the historical facts on their heads. They did not mention the policy of aggression of the Japanese militarists, and attributed the cause of the full-scale war of aggression against China to an incident provoked by the Chinese side, saying that this incident forced the Japanese side to abandon the "nonexpansionist policy." As we all know, historical facts have fully proved that the launching of the war of aggression against China by the Japanese militarists was a long established national policy of the Japanese ruling class, and this cannot be denied by any excuses and lies.

"Past experience, if not forgotten, is a guide for the future." World War II, which was launched by the German, Italian, and Japanese fascists more than 40 years ago, brought disaster to the whole world and caused an unprecedented catastrophe to all mankind. However, war also educated the people. In the past 41 years since the end of the world war, safeguarding world peace, opposing wars of aggression, and preventing a repetition of the historical tragedy have always been the common voice and urgent desire of the people throughout the world. From painful historical lessons, people have come to realize that although only a small number of people advocate and engineer a war at the beginning, if these people's activities are neglected or tolerated, the war will still become a horrible disaster that causes great suffering and misfortune to hundreds of millions of people.

Therefore, European countries are still hunting down the fascists who escaped unpunished, and the Asian peoples still maintain a high degree of vigilance against the revival of militarism. At the same time, we should also notice that the younger generation at present does not have a good understanding of history and lacks personal experience of the sufferings that the older generations underwent before. So it is the unshirkable duty of the older generations to help young people understand history and remember the painful historical lessons which were drawn at the cost of blood, in order to prevent for ever new war disasters.

However, some people have complained that China, in mentioning the history of Japanese aggression, is trying to "bring up an issue that has long been settled." All honest people can see that, although China was the victim of the aggressive war, it has always strictly distinguished a handful of Japanese miltiarists from the broad masses of the Japanese people since the very beginning when Japan launched the aggressive war against China, holding that it was the Japanee militarists, rather than the Japanese people who were definitely innocent and also victims of the aggressive war, that should be held responsible for the war. China has also reiterated again and again that the Japanese militarists' aggression against China was merely a transient adverse current in the long process of history of friendly intercourse between the Chinese and Japanese peoples over 2,000-odd years. Although that aggressive war inflicted unprecedentedly formidable losses upon the Chinese people in terms of life and property, the Chinese Government, setting store by the friendship between the future Chinese and Japanese generations, has taken the initiative in giving up the claim for war reparations. In addition, the Chinese Government has also extensively and persistently taught the Chinese people, especially the younger generations, to forgive old wrongs and grievencecs, to always look forward to the future, to get along well with the Japanese people, and cherish the Sino-Japanese friendship from generation to generation. The relations between China and Japan entered a brand new stage of development since the normalization of the diplomatic ties between the two countries. Today, we do not want to repeatedly mention that regrettable matter of the past. But this does not mean that we would tolerate some people's act in making use of our good will to distort or even tamper with history and hurt the Chinese people's feelings. As everybody knows, the friendly relations between China and Japan are built on the basis of the recognition and correct interpretion of history. Any attempt to reverse the historical conclusion can only have negative effects, spoiling the friendly feelings between the two peoples and undermining the political basis of the relations between the two countries. This is the very reason why we have, as it is necessary, to remind people of the importance of reviewing history, so as to ensure a correct understanding of the facts.

Some other people have complained that China, in denouncing a small number of people in Japan for tampering with history, has "intervened in" Japan's "internal affairs." Such a complaint does not hold water either. As far as foreign relations are concerned, China, as one of the countries introducing the well-known principle of peaceful coexistence, has always opposed any attempt by any country to intervene in another country's internal affairs under any pretext. With regard to the textbook case, the designation, as well as the compilation, examination, and revision of textbooks, are completely Japan's own business. However, as soon as certain textbooks of Japan involve false descriptions concerning its relations with foreign countries or even wantonly distort the historical fact of Japan's aggression and expansion abroad, the case will no longer be merely Japan's "internal affairs." It is completely justifiable for China and other Asian countries which suffered from the aggressive war launched by Japan to voice their indignation, refute the distorted description, display the facts, and point out the danger.

Moreover, the Japanese Government did definitely promise in 1982 that the spirit of the Sino-Japanese Joint Communique "should be respected in school education as well as in the examination and revision of textbooks in Japan." The current "textbook issue" evoked by a small number of people shows not only a flagrant contempt of the international community and the international code of conduct, but also a negation of an international commitment that the Japanese Government has undertaken.

In criticizing the said history textbook and some people's acts related to the "textbook issue," China absolutely does not want to "make a big fuss over a trifle." As we have pointed out above, the recognition of the historical fact of Japan's aggression against China is an essential principal issue in the relations between the two countries which has a bearing on the smooth development of the friendship and cooperation between the two countries along the right tract. China has always maintained that it is necessary to observe the principle of seeking common ground on major issues while reserving differences on minor ones in handling country-to-country relations and to distinguish right from wrong on questions of principle. The Chinese Government and people sincerely devote themselves to the enhancement of the friendship and cooperation between China and Japan and hope that such a relationship will constantly develop both in breadth and depth, based on the Sino-Japanese Joint Communique, the Sino-Japanese Peace and Friendship Treaty, and the four principles governing the Sino-Japanese relations. And this is the very reason why we feel we should take the responsibility of pointing out the crux of the issue that the textbook case has exposed and appeal to the Chinese and Japanese people and those with breadth of vision to heighten their vigilance, to take preventive measures, to find out in good time and promptly eliminate all the negative factors that will hinder and undermine the Sino-Japanese friendship. At the same time, we hold that Japan should also pay close attention to this issue. If some people are allowed to willfully misrepresent history, gloss over aggression, and use an erroneous viewpoint that "no conclusion has been made with regard to the great East Asian war" to influence the young people and affect Japan's development orientation in the future, then the young people who have little understanding of the war may be easily misled to a wrong road, and the painful experience and sufferings caused by the aggression may be once again recalled to Asian people and arouse their indignation. This may thus harm Japan's peace image in the international community.

There are still some people who, more often than not, lump together respect for national feeling and criticism of the behavior of a small number of people. We cannot agree with this practice. The war of aggression launched by the Japanese militarists plunged the Chinese people and other peoples in Asia into an abyss of suffering and also brought a tremendous catastrophe to the Japanese people. The Chinese people have always had sympathy with the Japanese people in their sufferings. In the final analysis, renouncing the right to demand war reparations means not asking the Japanese people who suffered in the war to repay debts for a handful of militarists. The Chinese people can also understand the custom of the Japanese people to mourn for their relatives who lost their lives in the war of aggression. But, honestly speaking, we cannot refrain from asking ourselves why those people who glibly talk of "respecting one's feelings" do not respect the feelings of the people of other countries who suffered greatly in the war of aggression and why they do not honestly admit occupying the territories of other countries and massacring innocent people as an act of aggression. Not only do the absurdities of beautifying the atrocities of aggression as "liberating the Asian people" and building "a happy land with a benevolent government" seriously hurt the feelings of the peoples of the countries which suffered in the war but they also profane the feeling of the Japanese nation. They are held in contempt by the broad masses of the Japanese people.

China and Japan are separated by a strip of sea and the peoples of the two countries have had contacts since early times. The period of misfortune in the history of the two countries has long been over. With the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations, the friendly cooperation between the two countries has been continuously developing and the profound friendship of the Chinese and Japanese peoples is increasing day by day. This is the main aspect and orientation of Sino-Japanese relations. In the 4-point proposals made by General Secretary Hu Yaobang on the development of Sino-Japanese relations of friendship in October of last year, he stressed that the consolidation and development of Sino-Japanese relations of friendship is an important matter which has a bearing on the long-term, fundamental interests of the peoples of the two countries and on safeguarding peace in Asia and the world at large. The governments and peoples of the two countries should continue to work hard to enhance their willingness to cherish the friendship between the two countries. For this purpose, we should have a correct approach toward history. The antagonism between China and Japan lasting for 5 decades was caused by a small number of Japanese militarist arch-villains. The Japanese people and the current government officials and public figures should not be held responsible for it. As far as the war of aggression launched by the Japanese militarist arch-villains against China, and the extremely great suffering caused by the war of aggression in China and other Asian countries are concerned, the Chinese and Japanese peoples and their children's children must take warning from his grave historical lesson. On the one hand, we should not allow the confrontations of the past to affect today's cooperation of friendship and on the other, whe should not show sympathy to the chief war culprits, still less connive at the activities of a small number of people who vainly attempt to revive militarism. The current "textbook issue" has once again forced the peoples of the two countries to review history and think deeply over the future. We think that the Japanese Government also attaches importance to this issue. Japanese Government leaders have expressed their readiness to handle the issue as soon as possible in accordance with the Sino-Japanese Joint Statement and the spirit of the 1982 speech by the director of the Cabinet Secretariat. We believe that with the concerted efforts of the Chinese and Japanese Governments and peoples, the attempt of a small number of people in Japan who go against historical trends and the will of the people will come to nothing and the Sino-Japanese relations of good-neighborliness, friendship, and cooperation will gain a new driving force for further development.

FILM ON JAPANESE WAR ATROCITIES SHOWN IN JAPAN

[Text] Toyohashi, Japan, July 6 (XINHAU) -- The Japan China Friendship Association of Toyohashi City, Aichi Prefecture today showed a documentary film to commemorate the 49th anniversary of the Lugouqiao (Marco Polo Bridge) incident, which was staged at Lugouqiao near Beiping (now Beijing) by Japan on July 7, 1937, marked the beginning of its all-out aggression against China.

"The aim of showing this film is to call on more people to work for peace and friendship between Japan and China by introducing an aggressive war which was not known by people," said an introduction to the film released by the association.

The film was documented by Masataka Mori and his team in China last summer to commemorate the 40th anniversay of the victory of the anti-Japanese war. It shows the ruins of the Fengman power station at which Japanese troops perpetrated a holocaust, and gives information about the notorious 731 germ unit and other massacres of the Chinese people committed by the Japanese militarists.

HU YAOBANG HOSTS BANQUET FOR CAMBODIA'S SIHANOUK

[Text] Beijing, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Prince Norodom Sihanouk, president of Democratic Kampuchea, said here today that, though he is not optimistic about seeing the liberation of his country in his lifetime, he is determined to fight to the end together with all patriots of Democratic Kampuchea. "This is my duty as president of Democratic Kampuchea and leader of the resistance forces," he added. Sihanouk made these remarks at a banquet given by General Secretary Hu Yaobang of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee in honor of President Sihanouk and his wife Madame Monique Sihanouk's 50th birthday, here this evening.

Sihanouk told Hu that he will continue the struggle to the very end and never give up. "I did not back down in the struggle against the French and American invaders and neither shall I do so in the struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors," he added. He said that he is now working together with Son Sann and Khieu Samphan. "Although the Khmer Rouge once persecuted me and my family, I am still working together with the Khmer Rouge in the struggle. This is because I am considering the interests of my nation and not my personal interests," he said.

Hu Yaobang praised Sihanouk's words on an occasion celebrating Madame Sihanouk's birthday. He expressed the belief that the Kampuchean people will win the final victory in their struggle to resist the Vietnamese aggressors and save their nation.

Sihanouk congratulated Hu on his successful visit to four Western European countries. He said that Hu's historical visit has heightened China's prestige in the world arena and called it a great encouragement to the Third World peoples, especially the Kampuchean people, in their just struggle.

Hu briefed Sihanouk on his visit to the four European countries and said that the leaders of the four countries had expressed their support for the eight-point proposal put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea for a political settlement of the Kampuchean question.

CGDK DIPLOMAT CONDEMNS SRV EXPANSIONISM

[Text] Islamabad, July 8 (XINHUA) -- "The root cause for the Kampuchea issue is the Vietnamese expansionism," Chan Youran, ambassador-designate of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK), told reporters here today. The Vietnamese aggressors have occupied Kampuchea for the last eight years and "have sought to Vietnamize Kampuchea by sending 700,000 Vietnamese to the country," he said. He said that "we are now fighting like the Afghan people for the independence of our country and for national survival."

Politically, he said, the Vietnamese authorities have tried to undermine the unity among leaders of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea but they have failed and will fail. Diplomatically, he said, the Vietnamese authorities are internationally isolated as the support of the international community is with the people of Kampuchea fighting for national survival. He also said CGDK favors a peaceful political solution of the Kampuchea issue and called on the international community to continue to press for the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea.

PAKISTAN AIR FORCE MISSION MEETS ULANHU

[Text] Beijing, July 3 (XINHUA) -- Vice-President Ulanhu said here today that the Chinese Government, people and Army treasure their friendship with the Pakistan Government, people and Army.

At a meeting with a Pakistan Air Force goodwill mission led by Air Chief Marshal Jamal Ahmad Khan, chief of staff of Pakistan Air Force, here this afternoon, Ulanhu welcomed the mission on behalf of President Li Xiannian.

The traditional friendship between the two countries, he said, has stood the test of time and taken root in the hearts of the two peoples. This friendship has been further consolidated and expanded over the past three decades thanks to the concerted efforts by leaders of the two countries. Moreover, these has been more exchange of visits between the two armies.

China and Pakistan are developing countries facing the same tasks of developing their national economy and improving their people's living standard, he went on. Both countries need a peaceful environment and are working for peace in Asia and the world.

The vice-president reiterated that China will, as always, firmly support Pakistan in its just struggle for national independence and state sovereignty and against foreign interference and aggression.

Jamal said the close relationship between the two armies will surely develop with the concerted efforts by the two sides.

FORMER AFGHAN KING DEMANDS SOVIET WITHDRAWAL

OW081002 Beijing XINHUA in English 0953 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Islamabad, July 8 (XINHUA) -- Former King of Afghanistan Zahir Shah has demanded an immediate Soviet troop withdrawal from Afghanistan. "The sooner they (Soviets) withdraw the better," he told the Pakistani newspaper "THE MUSLIM" in an interview that was published in the paper here today.

Referring to the Kabul regime, he said he does not think the regime could survive a Soviet withdrawal of forces from Afghanistan, because the "people have opposed this regime and have fought a war of registance against it." He also said that a neutral, genuinely non-aligned Afghanistan with friendly relations with all countries would be a factor for peace and stability in the region. "Any other image of role for Afghanistan, not having these conditions, cannot be a guarantee for peace and security for the region," he added.

He praised Pakistan's assistance to Afghan refugees and its efforts to help seek a political settlement of the Afghan problem. "Pakistan and its people, as brothers and as a Muslim nation, have given the maximum assistance during this Afghan tragedy. Three million of our people who were rendered homeless were accepted by Pakistan and the Pakistan Government is genuinely seeking ways for a settlement in Afghanistan. I'm deeply grateful to Pakistan," said Zahir Shah.

Zahir Shah, who is now living in exile after being ousted in a coup some 13 years ago, gave this interview to "THE MUSLIM" in Rome on June 19.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON ZHAO'S EUROPE-AFRICA TRIP

Continues Talks With Mikulic

OW081520 Beijing XINHUA in English 1501 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July 8 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang held the second round of talks here this morning with Yugoslav Premier Branko Mikulic.

Chinese sources close to the talks said that the two premiers heard briefings on the results of the talks held yesterday between vice-foreign ministers and officials in charge of economic and trade relations of the two countries. The two premiers were satisfied with the results of these talks, said a Chinese Foreign Ministry official who participated in the talks.

He disclosed that the separate talks between high-ranking officials centered around concrete measures to be taken by both countries to strengthen cooperation in the economic, trade, scientific and technological fields. But he did not specify what measures will be taken and what cooperative projects the two sides have agreed to undertake.

The premiers were very glads that in these talks, officials from both sides have expressed strong desire and proposed many constructive measures for the strengthening of friendship and cooperation between the countries. The two premiers promised to take positive steps to carry out these proposals, he noted.

Prior to the second round of talks, the two premiers met privately at the office of Yugoslav Premier Branko Mikulic. No details about the meeting were disclosed. The two premiers held their first round of talks on July 6 shortly after Zhao's arrival.

Premier Zhao, on the third day of his stay in this country, will leave Belgrade for Ljubljana this afternoon for sight-seeing.

Meets Yugoslav President

OW081547 Beijing XINHUA in English 1525 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July 8 (XINHUA) -- Sino-Yugoslav cooperation in all fields is beneficial to the socialist construction of both countries as well as to world peace and development. Sinan Hasani, president of the Yugoslav Federal Presidency, said this when he met with visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang at the White Palace here this morning.

The Yugoslav President said he appreciates China's correct stand and positive role in safeguarding world peace, supporting the Non-Aligned Movement and resolving world economic problems. President Hasani said Yugoslavia and China have the same goals in their national construction, and both of them are building socialism and safeguarding world peace in the light of their specific conditions.

Chinese Premiere Zhao said his talks with Yugoslav leaders indicate that China and Yugoslavia share identical or similar views on various international affairs. He noted that both sides have strong desire to strengthen Sino-Yugoslav friendship and cooperation on an all-round, stable and long-term basis. Zhao expressed full confidence that the two countries' relations will develop steadily in the future.

During the talks, the Chinese premier hoped the forthcoming non-aligned summit in Harare will be successful. China highly appreciates the role of the Non-Aligned Movement in international affairs, he said.

The talks were followed by a luncheon hosted by President Hasani. The Chinese premier leaves this afternoon for Ljubljana to continue his Yugoslavia visit.

Visits Republic of Slovenia

OW082355 Beijing XINHUA in English 2343 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Ljubljana, Yugoslavia, July 8 (XINHUA) — The visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang expressed his hope today that the northernmost Yugoslav Republic of Slovenia would expand and develop economic and technological cooperation with various provinces in China so as to make a greater contribution to the enhancement of Sino-Yugoslav relations.

The premier met Dusan Sinigoj, president of the Executive Council of Slovenia shortly after his arrival here from Belgrade this afternoon after two busy days of political talks there.

The Slovenian leader welcomed Zhao's visit to this republic and briefed the Chinese premier and his party on the economic development in Slovenia and the results of its economic and technological cooperation with China. He also offered some specific proposals for expanding this cooperation.

The Chinese premier spoke highly of the remarkable achievements made by the Slovenian Republic in its economic development, which he described as of nationwide significance in Yugoslavia. "There is a lot China can learn from you," he said.

The premier expressed satisfaction with the steady growth of cooperation between Slovenia and China's Sichuan Province. He hoped that the cooperation will be extended to other regions in China.

Zhao pointed out that the projects of Slovenia's economic coopertion with China had been well selected and the form of cooperation was also good. This, he said, can be taken as an example for other regions of Yugoslavia in their efforts to develop cooperation with China.

Slovenia is the country's most-developed region. Its per-capita national income has reached over 6,000 U.S. dollars a year as compared with about 2,700 dollars for the whole country.

The Republic has established direct relations with Chia's Sichuan Province. Its capital Ljubljana and China's Chengdu are twin cities.

Romanian Press Praises Visit

OW081948 Beijing XINHUA in English 1536 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Bucharest, July 8 (XINHUA) -- Romania's leading newspapers have described Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's five-day visit as "a major political event" in relations between the two countries.

The Romanian Communist Party daily "SCINTEIA" ("SPARK") said in a commentary that Zhao's visit last week showed that relations between Romania and China are firmly established on the basis of independence, sovereignty, equality, mutual benefits and non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

Such relations have been and will be a reliable guarantee for the two countries to develop future cooperation, the paper noted.

"SCINTEIA" said the talks between Romanian leader Nicolae Ceausescu and Zhao demonstrated that "our two countries have shared identical or similar views on the present international issues," agreeing that the international community must make efforts to prevent the situation from turning to a dangerous direction.

"ROMANIA LIBERA" ("FREE ROMANIA"), a daily newspaper of the socialist and democracy and unity front, stressed that developing friendship and cooperation with China is the unremitting policy of the Romanian party and government.

The newspaper "SCINTEIA TINERETULUI" ("YOUTH SPARK", published by the Central Committee of the Union of the Communist Youth of Romania, said the Romanian people are glad to see the fruitful visit of the Chinese premier and believe that friendship, cooperation and unity between China and Romania are conducive not only to the two countries, but also to peace and socialism in the world.

VICE FOREIGN MINISTER ZHU QIZHEN IN LATIN AMERICA

Meets Brazil Foreign Minister

OW040646 Beijing XINHUA in English 0614 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Brasilia, July 3 (XINHUA) -- The Brazilian Foreign Minister, Abreu Sodre, said Wednesday that Brazil and China are two large developing countries that have many coinciding aspects and can play an important role in the promotion of South-South cooperation. Sodre made the remarks when meeting Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister Zhu Qizhen, who attended the first round of Sino-Brazilian political consultations which ended Wednesday. Sodre expressed his desire that economic and technological cooperation and trade between the two countries be increased in the future.

The Brazilian foreign minister described as "important" the first round of Sino-Brazilian political consultations, saying that they helped to increase comprehension and understanding between the two countries. Zhu extended Sodre an inviation to visit China and handed him a letter from Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang to Brazilian President Jose Sarney.

The two day political consultations, attended by Zhu and the secretary-general of the Brazilian Foreign Ministry, Renalto Costa, centered on international issues of common concern and bilateral relations. The high level political consultations was arranged during Chinese Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang's visit to Brazil last October. According to the arrangement, the two parties will meet once a year to examine the international situation and relations between the two countries.

Visits Trinidad, Tobago

WANG MENG INTERVIEWED ON CULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

OW090003 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English 7 Jul 86 p 14

["Main points" of interview by Wang Meng, author and recently-appointed minister of culture, with BEIJING REVIEW correspondent Wei Liming on plans for cultural development and the implementation of the policy of "Let 100 Flowers Blossom and 100 Schools of Thought Contend"; capitalized passages published in boldface, and underlined passages published in italics]

[Text] The appointment of an author as minister of culture is enough to attract curiosity about the man himself. But when I met Wang Meng, 51, in his small office, I saw nothing out of the ordinary: The new minister was simply dressed and very straightforward.

Talking about China's cultural development, Wang said that although there are numerous problems to be tackled, consistency of the cultural principles and policies is the key to developing China's culture.

He said cultural development cannot do without the expansion of the country's other undertakings, economic construction and economic reforms in particular.

"It is as simple as this," Wang said, "If China's economy fails, the people will suffer from hunger as they did before, and developing culture will be out of the question." Only under a stable political situation and a developed economy is it possible to secure a long-term steady advance of culture, Wang said. What he expects, he said, is that the reforms will proceed in a prudent way under economic and political stability.

Wang said the development of cultural undertakings requires talented people. "The roles of individuals should not be underestimated," he said. "China's culture can make progress only after we have trained a contingent of top-notch people and given full scope to their talents."

Wang, who was a fan of traditional operas, said, "When we talk about Beijing opera we often mention Mei Lanfang, Shang Xiaoyun, Cheng Yanqiu, and Xun Huisheng -- the four famous male artists who played female characters. These four represent the best of Beijing opera. So far no one has surpassed them.

"That is just the way it is. Even if you put 100, or even 1,000 people on the stage or asked all of China's 1 billion people to sing the 'model operas,' you would still find it hard to beat Mei Lanfang."

Wang said taking care of, training and properly using talented people is fundamental to the development of culture and art. "Particularly art," he said.

"I AM STILL A WRITER." When asked whether being a government minister conflicts with his literary creativity, Wang said confidently: "I am still a writer. I don't think my creative activities will ever conflict with my work."

However, he admitted, a minister's workload is very heavy and, having devoted himself to creative writing for so long he has had to learn many things from scratch. Acquiring such knowledge, he said, will take a lot of time and energy. "Still, I will manage to publish new works," Wang said.

Since February of this year, Wang has completed five short stories. On the night before our interview, he had finished the fifth story in his series Newcomers From the Mainland which depicts the lives of a group of Chinese mainlanders who have emigrated to the United States in recent years. The first story of the series has already been published.

Wang said being a minister, he was able to foster wide contacts with the literary world, which would help him maintain his friendship with other writers and artists and share their common language.

"I hope I can always be a true colleague and friend of the artists, and I wish to enjoy and keep their trust through my day-to-day work."

"Many people said I would never be a writer once I became a minister. I will prove them wrong with my works. Though it will be hard, I'm confident I can make it."

Wang concluded his remarks with a Chinese proverb and repeated it in English: "Where there's a will, there's a way."

DEBATES IN THE LITERARY ARENA. A famous writer himself, Wang is familiar with the current tendencies and debates in China's literary and artistic circles, and he reeled off four fields of debate he thought to be the most prominent.

The first is centred around the "subjective role" in literary creation. Some people have criticized Chinese literary writings and theories as a whole for the lack of understanding of the "subjective roles" of people and of writers and artists. Others, however, believe the criticism runs counter to the Marxist theory of reflection.

The second, he said, is around the "new methods" of literary criticism. Some people have proposed that while studying literature and art, some theories of natural sciences, such as information theory, systems analysis and cybernetics, be introduced and that only by breaking through the limit of the so-called "sociological" methods can literary criticism produce new results. Their opponents, however, think mechanically applying the three theories to research of literature and art is characteristic of dogma divorced not only from literary and artistic practice but also from the Marxist view on art.

Wang said the third concerns "modern consciousness." Some people have said Chinese writers and artists should seek "modern consciousness" in modern theories and art from abroad so as to invograte China's literature and art and inject new life into them. The opposing argument, however, contends that modern art from abroad, particularly the art of the modernist schools, contains many negative and decadent elements. Instead of being imported, the decadent trash, they said, should be boycotted.

The fourth is about tracing the roots of Chinese culture, Wang said. Its proponents hold that China's national culture has deep, ancient roots that can be traced to the nation's ancient literature and art and to the Chinese people's traditions. These people argue that in order to open Chinese literature to the world literary arena, Chinese writers must shore up their works with the strength of the nation's ancient genres. Opponents to the idea, however, maintain that such a practice is likely to lead people into something primitive, remote, wild and even barbaric. Moreover, an overemphasis on the past may dampen writers' and artists' enthusiasm for modernization.

These are the major debates in the literary circle, Wang said. The debates of the entire cultural world, however, are numerous. For instance, Wang said, there has been much controversy about traditional opera. Some have predicted that China's traditional operas would eventually become a sort of literature for study, but not for the stage, and that the best thing to do now is videotape the good operas in order to preserve them. This view, however, has been strongly opposed by many who think China's traditional operas have their own distinctive artistic appeal. Rich, colorful and highly artistic, operas occupy a special and firm place in world culture, they say. Because of this, Chinese operas will never perish, but will develop unabated. Wang said that classical and popular music is also a topic for heated debates in China today.

Two months before Wang took office as minister of culture, I have interviewed him on the policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend" as well as literary criticism. He answered my questions very frankly.

A GOLDEN BUT DIFFICULT TIME Our conversation started when I asked MinisterWang how he would describe the situation in China's current cultural development. "It is new China's golden time; it is also a time filled with difficulties," Wang answered without a second thought.

Wang said China's cultural growth and activities are thriving as never before, with literature, art, traditional operas, films, acrobatics, music, archaeology and publication gaining fresh vitality. Even libraries are at a peak which has not been reached since liberation, he said, adding that never before in his life had he seen libraries thriving as they are today, so teeming with people, both old and young.

Wang said all this is evidence that with the realization of social stability and economic growth, people have become more demanding for a better cultural life. At the same time, many new problems have arisen, problems that are typical of the new period of historical development. Because many theatrical performances have found their way into families in China through TV sets, the lesser quality performance in theatres have failed to draw large audiences. "Of course," Wang said, "a good play or performance will still pack the theatre."

Wang said stage plays and traditional operas are in an uphill competition against dazzling and fast-paced foreign dramas. Common operas that are slow in plot development and minute descriptions are drawing even smaller audiences. This has been particularly evident when a Peking [as published] opera is staged is a big city. Wang said, however, that the situation is somewhat better with the local operas since they are deeply loved by the farmers. Helping the operas attract more young people, Wang said, is one of the major problems he is now faced with.

"That is why I said Chinese cultural repertoire is both developing and also confronted with many problems and with great difficulties," he said.

In addition, Wang said, the existing cultural establishments, including libraries and museums, are far from enough to meet the growing demands of the people despite their expansions. And, our facilities, Wang added, also lag far behind those in developed countries.

"I LOVE THE DOUBLE-HUNDRED POLICY." This year, China has marked the 30th anniversary of the implementation of the policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend" set forth by Mao Zedong in order to expedite the progress of China's arts and sciences. As a budding writer in the 1950s, Wang has also experienced ups and downs in his writing career. When speaking of Mao's policy, Wang said feelingly, "I love the 'double-hundred' policy very much."

Wang said the policy could arouse the enthusiasm of the writers and artists and give them the leeway to display their individual artistic character." It is a policy that guarantees democracy in the literary and art fields," he said.

Wang recalled when the "double-hundred" policy was instituted in 1956, good results were achieved, and new works and artistic research flourished. One of those achievements was the creation of two QU Operas, YANG NAIWU AND XIAOBUICAI and FATE IN TEARS AND LAUGHTER. The former is an unjust case that took place during the Qing Dynasty (1644-1911), and the latter depicts the life of citizens in the early years of the Republic of China (1912-49).

"Inspired by the 'double-hundred' policy, I wrote YOUNG NEW MEMBERS OF THE ORGANIZATION DEPARTMENT (which describes how the young people fight bureaucracy). "The 'double-hundred' policy created a more open and relaxed atmosphere for writers and artists and encouraged people to express their criticism. However, before long, I was sent to political hell and had to stop writing for almost 20 years," he said. "The 'double-hundred' policy was actually abandoned during the 'Cultural Revolution."

The Third Plenary Session of the 11th Party Central Committee held at the end of 1978 put an end to the "leftist" policy and reinstituted and enriched the "double-hundred" policy in literature and art. Wang said it was only then that he regained his right to write. In the short span of seven years from 1979 to 1986, Wang said, he churned out a number of novels and essays, which total more than 2.5 million Chinese characters.

"For me, my fate hinges on the 'double-hundred' policy." he said. "Only when the policy is implemented to the letter can I lead my artistic life and create and study new works."

"ONE SHOULD NOT BE OVERSENSITIVE TO LITERARY AND ART CRITICISM." Literary and art criticism has always been a matter of sensitivity in China. With the implementation of the "double-hundred" policy, Wang said, criticism is inevitable and normal. "If nobody pays attention to their art, writers and artists will suffer the most painful of sorrows," Wang said.

"However, criticism should be based on reason and equality and free from administrative pressure: It should be made in the manner of conducting a discussion," he said.

Wang said no literary or art work, be it Chinese or foreign, modern or ancient, is immune from criticism. When the works of Balzac and Cao Xueqin were studied, he said, their faults were also pointed out. Cao died hundreds of years ago, but the famous Chinese writer is still criticized. "Who can escape being criticized?" Wang asked.

Wang said in 1982 when he was in the United States, he visited playwright Arthur Miller. When asked about the fate of his new drama, Miller said that depended on newspaper reviews.

Even famous writers like Miller wait anxiously for criticism, and such anxiousness is normal, Wang said.

However, Wang pointed out, criticism did at one point get off track in China. He said his novel, YOUNG NEW MEMBERS OF THE ORGANIZATION DEPARTMENT published in 1956, drew a variety of criticism the following year. "At first, I was happy about this criticism," he said. "However, later I was labelled a rightist and expelled from the Party. From then on, I was unable to write for 20 years."

"Writers do not welcome criticism of this kind, that's for sure," said Wang with a smile. "Oppressive criticism should not be meted out to the writers unless they have violated the law."

Wang said an indication of the correct implementation of the "double-hundred" policy is that literary and art criticism is normal, sound and democratic.

Due to the long period of unhealthy criticism in the past, Wang said, some writers and artists have become gun shy and too sensitive to even the slightest criticism. Wang said such behaviour, which is entirely unnecessary, is another problem confronting China today.

Foreigners also seem to be too sensitive to literary and art criticism in China. Whenever there is such criticism, they feel something auguring ill might take place in China, Wang said.

An example of this, he said, is Zhang Xianliang's latest book entitled HALF A MAN IS A WOMAN, which has been making a splash in China because it is the first Chinese work to discuss the suppressed sexual desires of a man. During Zhang's recent visit to the United States, BEIJING RIBAO (BEIJING DAILY) carried a reader's letter criticizing the book. The letter, which ran only 500 Chinese characters, was featured prominnently by some foreign news agencies and in Overseas Chinese newspapers and Taiwan papers, people even dissuaded Zhang, then in the United States, from returning home to avoid being sent to the labour camp again. (Zhang was sent to do forced labour in the Nigxia Hui Autonomous Region for many years on charges of being a rightist). Zhang rejected the offers, and upon his return to China, he found that nothing happened to his disadvantage. Instead, he was met by his wife at a luxury hotel in Guangzhou and accorded a warm welcome by leaders of the cultural department in Ningxia when he returned to his work unit there.

Wang Meng said he thought it was natural that foreigners might react that way, because there have been times in China when artists were persecuted and their families were even torn apart. The tribulations and sufferings of noted author Lao She and Beijing Opera artist Zhou Xinfang during the "Cultural Revolution" still remain fresh in people's memories.

Wang said he found an article by author Xiao Qian very interesting. During the writer's visit to Britain in 1984, a British sinologist asked him if Zhang Xinxin had been sent to a labour camp (Zhang Xinxin is a young woman writer. For details please see "Woman Writers Through Three Generations" in our issue No. 9. 1986). Though Xiao didn't know Zhang then, he still thought the answer must be no. Actually, at that time, after finishing her book, BEIJING CITIZENS, Zhang was going southward by bike along the Grand Canal. On her way, she appeared now and then on TV, showing how she leisurely observed the lives of the people along the canal.

"Therefore," Wang said seriously, "first, I'd like to see people making sensible literary criticism; second, I hope Chinese writers and artists will take an equally sensible attitude towards criticism; and third, I hope foreign friends and foreign journalists will, too, become sensible when reporting on literary criticism in China. People should not be so hypersensitive."

WRITERS, ARTISTS COMMEMORATE MAO DUN'S BIRTH

Wan Li Attends Ceremony

OW031350 Beijing XINHUA in English 1338 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 3 (XINHUA) -- A bust of Mao Dun (Shen Yanbing), a leading Chinese writer, was unveiled here today at his former residence. Acting Premier of the State Council Wan Li, Minister of Culture Wang Meng and nearly 100 representatives from literary circles attended the unveiling ceremony.

Mao Dun (1896-1981) was a pioneer of China's progressive contemporary literature and an outstanding fighter for proletarian culture. His main works include "Midnight", "Spring Silkworms" and "Lin Family Shop." Many of his works have been translated into English, French, Russian, Japanese and other languages.

He was new China's first minister of culture and held the post till 1964. He was also honorary chairman of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, chairman of the Chinese Writers Association and vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese Political Consultative Conference. A literary award named after Mao Dun was set up not long ago.

The sculptor of the bust is Cao Chunsheng, a teacher at the Central Academy of Fine Arts.

"Since the bust was to be erected in Mao's former residence where he had received many young writers in his later years, my work depicts the kindness and amiability of the late writer," the 49-year-old sculptor said. The Chinese Writers Association will hold a rally tomorrow to mark the 90th anniversary of Mao's birth.

Meeting in Beijing

[Text] Beijing, July 4 (XINHUA) -- More than 200 writers and artists gathered here today to commemorate the 90th birth anniversary of Mao Dun (1896-1981), one of the founders of China's contemporary literature.

In his speech, Xia Yan, vice-chairman of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, who presided over today's meeting, said Mao Dun was a pioneer of China's new culture movement during the late 1910s and an outstanding proletarian revolutionary. His works are "a rich, high-grade literary mine." When introducing Mao's life and career, Xia said the great literary man was one of the earliest members of the Chinese Communist Party. And as early as 1920, one year before the Chinese Communist Party was set up, Mao was a member of Shanghai's communist group.

Zhang Guangnian, a veteran writer and vice-chairman of the Chinese Writers' Association, commented that the foundation of China's revolutionary literature and art was laid by Mao Dun together with Lu Xun and Guo Moruo. He praised the literary master as a full representative of the civilization and wisdom of the Chinese nation in the 20th century.

Mao's literary works, including his translations, total about 15 million words, involving every aspect of Chinese and foreign literature and art. Many of his works, such as "Midnight," "Eclipse," "Rainbow," "Spring Silkworms and Other Stories" and "Lin's Shop," are not only well-known in China, but have also been translated into more than 20 foreign languages.

In his letter to the meeting, famous writer Yie Shengtao said Mao's "Midnight," a novel which reflects China's modern history, is both a literary masterpiece and an excellent thesis by a social scientist.

Mao Dun was chairman of the Chinese Writers' Association for 30 years. During his career, he always supported young writers. And before his death, he donated 250,000 yuan to the Chinese Writers' Association as a fund for novel prizes. Today's meeting was sponsored by the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, the Chinese Writers' Association, the Commercial Press and the Mao Dun Society.

Mao Dun's Heritage Carried On

[Excerpts] Beijing, July 4, (XINHUA) -- The ideology and literary heritage of the late Mao Dun, China's new culture movement pioneer, is being carried forward across the nation, Bao Chang of the Chinese Writers' Association said today.

Speaking at the commemoration meeting to mark the 90th birth anniversary of Mao Dun (1896-1981), Bao said the Mao Dun Literary Awards Committee, founded with 250,000 yuan of his donated remuneration as a fund has cited a number of novels since 1982. "This has stimulated Chinese writers' initiative in writing more novels," Bao indicated.

According to Bao Chang, the association is compiling a 40-volume "Complete Works of Mao Dun", and the first 17 volumes will come out this year. [passage omitted]

Bao said the Mao Dun Research Society, founded in 1983, has 156 members, most of whom are specialists in higher-learning intitutions. The society has also conducted academic exchanges and has academic relations with foreign countries. In addition, Mao Dun's former residence in Beijing, opened to the public in March last year, has been visited by more than 4,000 people.

BEIJING REVIEW INTERVIEWS WRITER ZHANG XIANLIANG

OW090337 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English 7 Jul 86 p 18

[By correspondent Jian Chuan; capitalized passages published in italics]

[Text] When 49-year-old Chinese author Zhang Xianliang was visiting the United States last November, his latest novel HALF A MAN IS A WOMAN came under intense criticism at home. Because criticism of literature and arts was something of a barometer of the political atmosphere in China, some of Zhang's American friends asked him to stay in the United States and avoid the possible repercussions of being the author of a controversial book. Others told Zhang he should apply for "political asylum." Declining their advice, however, Zhang returned to China and to the debate his novel had inspired.

In order to find out how Zhang and his career have weathered the storm of criticism over HALF A MAN IS A WOMAN, I visited him during his stay in Beijing as a deputy to the Fourth Sesion of the Sixth National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, which concluded in mid-April.

Zhang is thin, tall, sharp and outspoken. Neither his voice nor his composure ever indicates he is in trouble.

A prolific writer, he has, since 1979, written two novels, two collections of novelettes, two collections of short-stories, one collection of prose and three short novels. His work has so far totalled 1.4 million Chinese characters. Five of his stories have been adapted into movies.

Zhang's career, however, has not been easy. He has strggled long and hard to achieve his current status. In the late 1950s, he fell victim to the "left" deviationist policies and was sent to a "reeducation-through-labour" farm for many years. He said the experience left him with a collection of insightful ideas on the tragedy of the 1950s. One of the stories inspired by his experience in the labour farm was SOUL AND FLESH, which gives an account of the untold sufferings of an intellectual.

SOUL AND FLESH recently won the national best short-story award. His other story, LONG ZHONG, won the literary prize of the influential literary monthly DANG DAI (Contemporary), while the movie HORSEMAN adapted from SOUL AND FLESH was awarded a prize of honour at the Second International Movie Festival held in Manila in 1983 and a national best feature film prize the same year.

Recently, Zhang's stories THE STYLE OF MAN, MIMOSA and HALF A MAN IS A WOMAN have triggered a great deal of debate which continues today in China's literary world.

HALF A MAN IS A WOMAN, a serial to MIMOSA, describes the life of a condemned intellectual on a "reeducation farm" when "leftist" policies dominated in China. On the "reeducation farm," the intellectual meets a pretty but troubled woman, whom he falls in love with and later marries. In trying to make their first night together, he finds he is impotent because of living so long under duress. Though he later recovers his potency with the help of his bosomy wife, he comes to regard theirs as a marriage based on sex and lacking in understanding. Because of this they get divorced.

In a country like China, where feudal ethics have prevailed for hundreds of years behind closed doors, any description of thoughts or activities related to sex has been off limits. Zhang's story HALF A MAN IS A WOMAN no doubt poses a serious challenge to this "forbidden zone."

Critics say the story has uncovered sexual hunger, reproduced the suffocating and distorting effect "leftist" policies had on people and revealed the untold injury the "Cultural Revolution" inflicted on the souls of the Chinese people.

Some contend that in HALF A MAN IS A WOMAN Zhang has given an insightful account of the social life of China's recent past through descriptions of sexual relations, and that the story shows China's literature has reached a new depth. They say his thoughtful account of sex has awakened people to modify their understanding of man's nature, dignity and value.

Others, however, are discontent with his portrayal of sex, on the grounds that his description of sexual thoughts and sexual life is too explicit. Author Wei Junyi said the story was published so quickly and sold so well that no other "serious" story could match it. As a result, Wei said, she is nervous, perplexed and worried about the future of Chinese literature.

Zhang has views of his own about the story. When asked why he wrote HALF A MAN IS A WOMAN, Zhang said he wanted to unravel some of the twisted thoughts of that time. "The story has a serious subject. It is not just about sex. It is intended to describe pent-up human nature through a description of sex and then the pent-up anxieties of people in a distorted society."

A story, no matter who writes it, will be interpreted differently by people with different cultural backgrounds and experiences, Zhang said. Dispute is therefore inevitable. "Almost half of my works are controversial. Criticism is not something frightening. Only in a good creative environment, in which literary criticism is confined to the literary field alone and should not be involved with the writer's political or moral attitude, he said, can criticism be really beneficial.

In the 1950s when Zhang was a teenager, the prevailing permissive political climate provided him the latitude he needed to exert himself as an aspiring author. In 1956, the Chinese Communist Party set forth the policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend," a principle intended to promote the prosperity of culture and literature. Zhang said he was excited by the policy and became all the more diligent, writing and writing until towards the end of that year he published his poem ODE TO THE WIND. Unfortunately, however, this poem landed Zhang in trouble and began his unexpected suffering. On September 1, 1957, the PEOPLE'S DAILY, the newspaper of the Chinese Communist Party, published a 1,000-character article, criticizing ODE TO THE WIND. Far from a literary criticism, the PEOPLE'S DAILY article picked several descriptive stanzas out of the poem and stretched their meaning in the context of politics. In the article, Zhang was accused of personifying the wind in order to sling mud at socialism. It was a poem full of hostility, the article concluded.

It was because of this PEOPLE'S DAILY article that Zhang was labelled as a "bourgeois rightist" overnight. He was fired from his job, subjected to "re-education through labour," and lost his personal freedom and the right to write.

"The 'double hundred' policy died a premature death in 1956 before it was implemented in its real sense," Zhang said.

In 1979, after the party started rectifying "leftist" mistakes, Zhang was exonerated together with many others. Since 1980, Deng Xiaoping and Hu Qili, two of the top Chinese leaders, have reiterated on many occasions the importance of the "double hundred" policy and of the freedom to write. Encouraged, Zhang picked up his pen once again with renewed rigour. "I am now full of confidence in the 'double hundred' policy, because it has been reinstituted in a new historical period after the nation has learnt from the past. History will not repeat itself. In the past years, I have written some controversial stories. But controversy does not strifle my writing, my feelings, my social life, my position -- nothing."

In fact, Zhang said, controversy has fueled his work further. "In 1983, I was elected a member of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference. In July 1984, I was admitted to the Chinese Communist Party and later was elected president of the Writers' Association of the Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region. In 1984 and 1985 I was elected a member of the Presidium of the All-China Writers' Association at the Fourth National Congress of Literary Workers."

Our interview ended quickly because Zhang was returned to Ningxia that day. He said he was working on a novel about changes in rural families and ethics brought about by the rural economic reform and the development of the rural commodity economy. He said the book was to be a gift to the Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region on its 30th anniversary in 1987. In his mind, he said, another plot is simmering, a follow-up to MIMOSA and HALF A MAN IS A WOMAN. "I want to write more," he said, "To make up for what I lost in the past."

CENTRAL ADVISORY COMMISSION HOLDS MEETING IN WUHAN

HK030521 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] The first meeting of the central-south and southwest groups of the Advisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee was held in Wuhan from 23 to 30 June. Attending this meeting were comrades, including Liu Tianfu, Xu Jiatun, Tian Bao, Xie Zhenhua, Zhang Caiqian, Li Huamin, Zhao Xinhu, Xia Shihou, and Han Ningfu. Comrade Gu Zhouxin, a Central Advisory Commission member attended the meeting.

Although these veteran comrades have stepped down to the second line, they have paid close attention to the causes of the party and people. In light of what they saw and heard by themselves, the commission members conducted fervent discussion of the problem of reform of the economic structure and the problem of straigthening out party style. They all held: The central work of accomplishing the Seventh 5-Year Plan is to do a good job in reform of the urban economic structure while straightening out party style; the general mood of society is an important guarantee for doing well in reform of the urban economic structure. Therefore, putting forward many very good suggestions to the central authorities on how to do well in reform and straightening out party style shows the seriously responsible revolutionary spirit of the Communist Party members of the older generation.

During the meeting, the commission members also listened to the report of the Wuhan City CPC Committee on the status of comprehensive reform of the urban economic structure, visited factories, the meeting place of the 7 August conference of the CPC Central Committee [an urgent conference held by the CPC Central Committee in Hankou on 7 August 1927], and the old site of the Wuhan office of the Eighth Route Army, and went sight-seeing to places of historic interest and scenic beauty.

ARTICLE COMMEMORATES NORTHERN EXPEDITION

[Text] Beijing, July 7 (XINHUA) -- The Huangpu (WHAMPOA) Military Academy Alumni Associaton today called on students and teachers of the former academy to make greater contributions to the peaceful reunification of the motherland. This was contained in an article entitled "The Huangpu Military Academy and the Northern Expedition" written by the association in commemoration of the 60th anniversary of the expedition (1926-27). The article was released to the press today.

A training school for officers of the National Revolutionary Army during China's first revolutionary civil war (1924-27), the academy was established by Dr. Sun Yat-sen, protagonist of the Chinese Democratic Revolution, and was jointly run by the Kuomintang and the Chinese Communist Party. The Huangpu Military Academy alumni association was founded in June 1984 with Xu Xiangqian, vice-chairman of the Central Military Commission, as its president.

The article described the expedition, waged against the imperialists and the northern warlords, as a "revolutionary people's war of unprecedented size" which "wrote a glorious page in the history of the Chinese revolution". The victory of the expedition, the article noted, was achieved through the joint efforts of the Kuomintang and the Communist party, including the contributions and sacrifices of the Huangpu teachers and students from both parties.

After recalling the history of the expedition, the article pointed out that the revolutionary spirit of unity and hard struggle of the academy was best manifested in the expedition. It said that many leaders of the Kuomintang, including Chiang Kai-shek, played a "historical role" in the expedition.

Chinese Communists including the late Premier Zhou Enlai also played the role of the backbone in the expedition and made "prominent contributions" to it, the article said. The article went on to say that "owing to reasons known to all, misfortunes befell in the later stage of the northern expedition and this left a profound lesson to the whole Chinese nation."

During the war of resistance against Japanese aggression (1937-45), the article recalled, the two parties cooperated for the second time and emerged victors after eight years of heroic struggle. "The experience of the two instances of cooperation between the two parties is very valuable," the article said. It said: "It is the common wish of the people of all nationalities, including teachers and students of the academy living both on the Chinese mainland and abroad, that the two parties cooperate for a third time." The article called on all Huangpu teachers and students to adhere to the teachings of Dr. Sun Yat-sen and make greater contributions to the peaceful reunification of the motherland.

EDUCATION OFFICIAL ON POLICY ON OVERSEAS STUDIES

OW081258 Beijing XINHUA in English 1220 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 8 (XINHUA) -- China will continue sending people to study abroad to support the country's economic development, a senior education official said in an interview with XINHUA carried by all major Chinese newspapers today. The interview was conducted Tuesday in response to requests from readers unclear about the country's policies on overseas studies.

Liu Zhongde, deputy minister of the State Education Commission, said there was "no truth to the rumor" that students going abroad have been required to pay 20,000 yuan to the government to get permission to leave. "But we are requiring anyone paid to go abroad to study to sign an agreement with the work unit financing the education," he said. Although Liu did not specify the terms of such agreements, he said they involved "respective responsibilities, duties and rights." Students to study abroad will be asked to agree to return to their own work units after their foreign studies.

Over the past seven years, more than 30,000 government-funded students have studied abroad. At the same time, another 8,000 students have been able to study overseas without government aid with scholarships or help from relatives or foreign friends.

The number of students traveling abroad under state funding over the next five years is likely to remain at current levels, according to Liu. But, he said, the overall number will increase because local authorities are enlarging exchange programs with other countries and beginning to send people to study abroad themselves, he said.

In the interview, Liu reiterated policies announced at a national meeting on foreign study in May. According to these policies, China will concentrate on sending people abroad in fields directly related to economic development. These include areas of contemporary scientific research as well as applied scientific fields, the official said.

Following the policies announced in May, he said doctoral level work would be encouraged. "But since China has been developing a wide variety of master's programs, there seems to be less of a need to send people abroad for beginning graduate study," said Liu. In general, he said, graduate students are being permitted to go abroad only after they have completed a master's degree at home.

DEVELOPMENT OF ECONOMIC FORESTS NEEDED

[Commentator's article: "Attach Importance to the Development of Economic Forests"]

[Text] The vegetation coverage rate as well as the economic results of China's forests are low, accounting for a low percentage of the gross output value of the national economy. One of the reasons for this is that for a long time we only attached great importance to timber forests and shelter forests in our guiding ideology but neglected economic forests.

To greatly develop forestry is an effective way to invigorate the economy of forestry. For a long time in the past, some comrades did not attach great importance to economic forests. There are many reasons for this. One is that they only attached great importance to the ecological results and social benefit of forestry but neglected its economic results. In such a country as China, which has sparse vegetation coverage, a shortage of timber, and a deteriorating ecological environment, to afforest timber forests and shelter forests is a must. Generally speaking, however, construction of timber forests and shelter forests involves large investment sums and they take a long time to grow and bring slow profits. Thus, the state cannot allocate a large portion of its revenue to this undertaking. Moreover, the afforestation work is most urgently required in many poverty-stricken and remote mountainous areas where funds are badly needed elsewhere. In general, to develop economic forests -- dry fruit, fruits, herbal medicine, cereals, oils, and so on -- by suiting measures to local conditions can bring quick results, as well as big and long-lasting profits compared to timber forests. It can be said that economic forests are the "short-term" steps in forestry production's "long-term" development. It is just as the common saying goes: "Peach trees can yield profit in 3 years, apricot trees in 4 years, and plum trees in 5 years, but the date tree can yield profit within the same year." Through the development of economic forests, we can get results within a short time and can create conditions for developing timber forests and shelter forests.

To greatly develop economic forests is also a necessity for the state's economic construction and improvement of the people's livelihood. In the wake of improving the people's living standards and the rapid development of food processing industry, there develops a promising market for dry fruit and fruits. Let us take the walnut, chestnut, hazelnut, gingko, and almond as an example. At present, China's per capita ownership of these nuts is less than 0.2 kilograms. Also, China gross output value of the delicious medically useful hawthorn last year could only satisfy one-seventh of the domestic and overseas demands. All these situations show that there are promising prospects for readjusting the production structure of forestry and speeding up the pace of forestry development.

A great variety of species of economic forests makes available diversified development and strong adaptability. In places where timber forests have problems in long-term and normal growth, some economic forest species can grow luxuriantly. In the areas of sand-fixing, water conservation, making wind subside, readjusting moisture, and so on, economic forests are by no means inferior to timber forests and shelter forests. The ecological results of integrating economic forests with timber forests and shelter forests are better than those of single-product afforestation.

In order to greatly develop economic forests, we must have the strategic viewpoint for developing commodity production and suit measures to local conditions. At present, we must greatly expand the vegetation coverage area in accordance with the market demand. We should focus our work on the "famous, special, quality, and rate" products and give priority to their development. At the same time, we must attach great importance to the transformation, protection, and utilization of current resources. We must turn the extensive farm into an intensive one, strive to popularize advanced science and technology, and improve the per unit area yield. In addition, we must attach great importance to processing and comprehensive utilization, so as to find a new way to develop economic forest production which combines forestry, industry, and commerce, as well as production, supply, and marketing into a complete chain of production.

TOWNSHIP ENTERPRISES KEY TO RURAL DEVELOPMENT

[Commentator's article: "Township Enterprises Are Extensive Absorbers of Rural Manpower"]

[Text] In our country, which has a population of 1 billion people, 800 million people live in the countryside. There are 350 million able-bodied agricultural workers in our country. Compared with our population, our country has relatively less farmland. At present, each rural resident only has an average of more than 2 mu of arable land. In some localities, the per capita area of farmland is less than 1 mu. With so many people working on such a limited area of farmland, it is certain that we cannot achieve high labor productivity in agriculture. If our agricultural productivity remains at a low level, there will be no bright future for our agriculture.

Facts tell us that in order to raise agricultural productivity, we must shift part of the rural work force from farming to other production fields. Suppose we shift some 100 million rural people from farming to other trades in the next 10 years or more, we will make a major breakthrough in increasing rural productivity.

Where, then, can such a large work force be absorbed?

Can so many rural people all pour in the cities? This is not a practical solution in our country. Let us see how big a figure the 100 million working people (not including their families) represent: This figure is about 20 times the urban population of Beijing, or is equal to the total population of 100 medium-sized cities with a population of 1 million people. Imagine how many houses would need to be built, how much land would be used, and how many public facilities would be needed, if so many people pour into the cities. At present, the cities are faced with a serious shortage of jobs, housing, and public facilities, and this has become a heavy burden on the state. Of course, with the development of construction, the state will continue to recruit workers from the countryside in a planned way, but it is certain that the figure will not be a big one.

This shows that a way out for the surplus rural work force should still be found in the countryside. In fact, we have opened a new road in this regard: Through the development of township enterprises and undertakings of tertiary industry, or service trades, the farming work force can be moved to other trades in the countryside. According to statistics, by the end of 1985, 67.96 million rural working people had been shifted from farming work to township enterprises of all kinds. That is to say, 19 out of every 100 rural working people have moved from farming work which their families had been engaged in for generations, and have become workers of the township enterprises. This figure also tells us that the township enterprises are indeed a huge container to absorb surplus rural work forces. They represent the bright future of the countryside.

With part of the rural work force being shifted to township enterprises, peasants will be able to quit farming work without leaving their home villages and towns so as to prevent large numbers of rural people from pouring into cities and causing heavy pressure on the cities. In addition, peasants themselves invest in and run the township enterprises, so these enterprises will not need state investment. [paragraph continues]

After the township enterprises are fully developed, they will turn to support agriculture and promote agricultural development. Township enterprises are also schools for training talented people. With millions of peasants becoming workers and changing their production status, their mentalities will also change correspondingly step by step and their production skills will become more and more mature. This will help cultivate a large number of talented people in our countryside where education is not highly developed yet. This is of far-reaching significance. To sum up, township enterprises hold an important position in our rural construction, and we should have a new understanding of this point.

Millions of peasants are freed from farm work and become workers without pouring into cities. This is the great creation of the Chinese peasantry in history.

ANHUI TO CARRY OUT RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW080033 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] To conscientiously study and thoroughly carry out the guidelines of the regional foum of the secretaries of the 11 northern provincial and city CPC committees on the work of party rectification, held by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification; to further strengthen leadership; to improve the guiding principles and policies for carrying out rural party rectification and for consolidating and developing achievements in this work, in order to ensure the successful accomplishment of the task of party rectification — these are the main themes of the provincial discussion meeting on the work of party rectification, convened by the provincial Commission for Guiding Party Rectification between 28 June and 2 July. Attending the meeting were responsible comrades of different prefectural, city, and county CPC committees, including those of Tunxi City, Houshan, and Hexian County CPC committees. Responsible comrades of the various prefectural and city party rectification offices also attended the meeting. Officials of the departments and bureaus under the provincial authorities participated in the discussion. Also present were Li Guixian, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Xu Leyi, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and vice chairman of the provincial Commission for Guiding Party Rectification; Zhao Baoxing, (Niu Xiaomei), members of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and of the provincial Commission for Guiding Party Rectification; and Hou Yong, vice chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission and permanent vice chairman of the provincial Commission for Guiding Party Rectification. Comrade Xu Leyi presided.

Comrade Li Guixian delivered an important speech on the guiding ideology of rural party rectification. He said: One major point, which should be noted in studying rural party rectification, is how to make favorable for the development of the rural economy. We should not move a great number of the agricultural population to the cities to develop industry as Britian and America did. As more and more of the agricultural population needs a vocational transfer, it is necessary to develop rural enterprises. The other major prerequisite is how to make party rectification favorable in the development of the commodity economy in rural areas. The change from a self-sufficient small agricultural economy to the development of a rural commodity economy constitutes a drastic conceptual change. It is essential to solve the problems of funds, technology, and markets, while developing the rural commodity economy. We should adopt flexible policies advantageous for the solution of these problems, and should avoid policies restricting our efforts. Briefly, our major consideration should be to work out good plans for rapidly developing the rural economy, for improving peasants' living conditions, and for quickly raising rural productivity.

On the basis of the guidelines of the forum of the secretaries of the 11 northern provincial and city CPC committees on party rectification work, Xu Leyi also gave an important talk on the work situation in Anhui party rectification, the need to conscientiously study and carry out the guidelines of the forum, to further enhance leadership over party rectification, and to consolidate and develop party rectification in rural areas. He said: Anhui has done a good job in second-stage party rectification for the second and third groups. In general, these groups have done a better job than the previous group. This is closely related to the general situation in rectifying party style within the party, and is also a result of attention being truly paid to the work of party rectification by CPC committees at all levels. However, we should not overestimate our success on the one hand, and should not underestimate the problems yet to be solved in the course of party rectification on the other.

We should also not miscalculate the future task in party rectification, for the work of the next phase is very arduous and difficult. Therefore, CPC committees at all levels should further conscientiously study and carry out the guidelines of the northern regional forum on party rectification, held by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification, and strive to truly understand the guiding ideology, principles, and policies for party rectification in order to use them to guide work.

He said: Under the favorable situation for comprehensive reform, we should relentlessly implement the fundamental guiding ideology of "party rectification promoting reform and economic development" as we carry out rural party rectification. We should correctly understand, and implement, the policy of "not only solving problems but also not bungling matters," and concentrate on solving problems. It has been practically proved that to conscientiously carry out party rectification facilitates reform, economic development, and social stability. The key to a better implementation of the guiding ideology and principles for party rectification is to master the policies. Our policies have to be in favor of reform, of invigoration of the economy, as well as of the solution to the serious problems existing in party style.

He said: In order to strengthen leadership over the work of party rectification, we must overcome the slack mood in some places, and overcome the sentiment among some comrades of setting party rectification against reform. In the meantime, prefectural, city, and county CPC committees should pay close attention to reorganizing and strengthening the organizations for party rectification, and to readjusting strength and plans to reinforce departments for the work of party rectification.

Xu Leyi also put forward specific proposals and requirements regarding preparations for rural party rectification, and work to consolidate and develop the results of party rectification.

SHANDONG SECRETARY SPEAKS AT CPC RESEARCH MEETING

SK071227 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Recently, the Research Office of the provincial CPC Committee held a discussion meeting on the province's investigation and study work at (Zhong Gong) in Jinan, which was attended by comrades of the investigation and research departments of the various city, prefectural, and county CPC committees.

Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Li Changan, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and provincial governor, attended and spoke at the meeting.

In his speech, Comrade Liang Buting pointed out: Investigation and study are the basis of correct policy decisions as well as the first means for making policy decisions scientifically. In implementation of the central policies and the formulation of policy decisions for one's own localities and departments all depend on investigation and study. We should not do without investigation and study while implementing central policies because when policies are issued to the lower levels, they have become a definite goal with specific characteristics. Since the actual situations of various localities are different, the implementation of policies can never be absolutely the same. Through investigations and study we should integrate the central directives with local reality and work out regional policy decisions. Only by so doing can we take the initiative in implementing policies creatively.

After analyzing the objects, contents, and methods of study in traditional and modern research and discovering their differences, Comrade Liang Buting pointed out: When we advocate scientific leadership we mean to treat the policy decisions of leaders as systems engineering. First, we should work out a scientific procedure beginning from investigation and study to drawing up policy decisions. Without investigation and study there is no right to speak or to make policy decisions. Only by following the ideological line of seeking truth from facts and on the basis of fully conducting investigations and study and making appraisals can we ensure the scientific level and reorganization of organs. Furthermore, due to the special characteristics of the investigation and research organs, some special policies may also be implemented. We should adopt methods of one kind or another to treat the investigation and research departments of the CPC committees as key organs for making policy decisions. These departments should strengthen their efforts to work out plans and offer suggestions in the course of investigations and study in order to ensure that investigations and study are conducted before making policy decisions, to improve investigation and study work, and to play a greater role when making policy decisions. The CPC committees should pay attention to applying investigation and research findings and strive their utmost to make their labor yield beneficial results.

While touching on the investigation and research work for the second half of the year, Comrade Liang Buting said: In the major aspect of our work, our next step is to concentrate our efforts on studying the progress of rural reforms, the development of the functions of urban areas, and the building of spiritual civilization. There is much to do in these areas. We hope that the comrades of the investigation and research departments of various localities will grasp well the investigations and study in these three fields.

In his speech, Comrade Li Changan reported on the province's development in the economic, cultural, educational, public health, and sports sectors in the first 5 months of this year, affirmed the excellent situation in Shandong, and pointed out the weak links. [passage omitted]

Lin Ruo stressed: It is imperative to promote lateral economic ties in order to transform the mountain areas.

GUANGDONG ACHIEVES PROGRESS IN LABOR CONTRACT SYSTEM

HK080201 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Our province has scored gratifying achievements in reform of the employment system. At present, our whole province has recruited 350,000 contract workers, approximately one-tenth of the total number of contract workers in the whole of our country.

Excerpt for [words indistinct] districts throughout our province, 114 [words indistinct] counties have set up social labor insurance companies, which will provide the contract workers with social labor insurance, including pensions, medical allowances, funeral expenses, pensions for the families of the deceased, and subsidies during periods of awaiting employment, thus eliminating the contract workers' domestic problems.

Since 1980, our province has implemented the contract labor system in Shenzhen and Zhuhai Special Economic Zones. In 1983, our province has completely implemented the system of contract labor system in recruiting new workers and initially reformed the system of the iron rice bowl, in which workers could be employed but not dismissed. The number of contract workers now accounts for 5 percent of the total number of workers in our whole province. The proportion of contract workers in tertiary industry is particularly relatively large and the contract system in tertiary industry has been generally implemented, so that enterprises can employ the labor force flexibly according to practical needs and their vitality can be strengthened. In selecting employment, young people in society who await employment [words indistinct] have more choices.

GUANGXI LEADERS SOLVE PROBLEMS IN BEIHAI CITY

HK050457 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Leading comrades of the regional CPC Committee and government have improved their work style by going to Beihai City to hold an on-the-spot executive meeting and help the lower levels solve problems. The grass-roots cadres have praised this method.

On 29 June, regional CPC Committee Secretary Chen Huiguang and government Vice Chairman Wang Rongzhen took leading comrades of more than 20 departments concerned to Beihai. [passage omitted] After attending the opening of the No 1 berth at the 10,000-ton wharf at Beihai port, they convened an on-the-spot executive meeting in the city on 2 and 3 July. The leading comrades listened to work reports, from leading comrades of Qinzhou Prefecture, Beihai City, and Fangcheng port, and carried out on-the-spot studies to resolve the problems raised by these three units. In this way they reduced the number of document journeys and improved executive efficiency.

Qinzhou Prefecture, acting in light of Comrade Hu Yaobang's instructions delivered during his inspection, proposed 13 key projects for launching in the near future, including subtropical fruit and seafood breeding, together with 7 industrial technological transformation projects. The executive meeting took only one morning to basically firm up these projects. [passage omitted]

Fangcheng port raised a series of problems that urgently need resolving in some engineering works currently being carried out to open the Nanning-Fangcheng railroad to traffic and to put all seven deepwater berths in the port in operation. These problems too were resolved in principle during the meeting.

The reason why this meeting was able to rapidly solve many problems was that the regional CPC Committee and government had previously carried out full investigation and study. [passage omitted]

GUANGXI MEETING DISCUSSES ECONOMIC WORK TASKS

HK290111 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Excerpts] A regional meeting of prefectural commissioners, mayors, and county governors concluded in Nanning on 27 June. The meeting focused on making arrangements for summer grain procurement work. It also made initial arrangements for the region's economic work in the second half of the year.

The meeting was attended on 27 June by Chen Huiguang, secretary of the regional CPC Committee; Wei Chunshu, Jin Baosheng, and Tao Aiying, deputy secretaries; Wang Rongzhen and Zheng Yi, vice chairmen of the regional government; and Wang Zhuguang, vice chairman of the regional Advisory Commission. Wei Chunshu delivered a summation report. He stressed the following points regarding the summer grain procurement question:

1. Have strong confidence, strengthen leadership, and ensure the fulfillment and overfulfillment of the grain procurement quota. This year procurement of summer grain by contract is planned to be 1.75 billion jin, 80 percent of the total procurement figure, which is about 2.1 billion jin. There are good conditions for fulfilling this quota. [passage omitted]

2. We must seriously implement the State Council's circular on doing a good job in summer grain and oil procurement, and step up propaganda and education for the peasants. [passage omitted]

3. We must seriously implement the grain procurement policies and measures. [passage omitted]

On the region's economic work in the second half of the year, Comrade Wei Chunshu pointed out that Guangxi should succeed in not wavering in persevering in reform. [passage omitted] There should also be no wavering over fulfilling the year's economic plans. Under the premise of improving economic results, the region should achieve double-digit increases in industrial production and financial revenue. All prefectures, cities, counties, departments, and enterprises should further emancipate their minds, relax the policies, and take measures, take advantage of their strong points, and ensure the fulfillment of the plans, based on these ideas. We should speed up the region's economic development. Wei Chunshu then spoke on the following items of work to be grasped in the second half of the year:

1. Promote agricultural production, including the expansion of late-season grain crops and the fulfillment of the year's sowing plans. [passage omitted]

2. Do everything possible to boost industrial production. The region's output was not good enough in the first 5 months of the year. Output value amounted to only 38 percent of the year's quota and showed a rise of 4.75 percent over the same period last year. There is a considerable shortfall compared with the demand for a 10 percent increase over last year. To ensure that this demand is met, we must take effective steps in the second half of the year to reverse the passive situation in production. [passage omitted]

3. Do a good job in financial and circulation work to provide further support and boost for economic construction. [passage omitted]

Wei Chunshu also spoke on the necessity of solving the current problem of road traffic jams and on further strengthening rural grass roots building. In conclusion, he called on the conference participants to further step up ideologial and political work. [passage omitted]

HENAN REPORT MEETING MARKS PARTY ANNIVERSARY

HK030619 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] This morning, the Propaganda Department of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial level organs CPC Committee held a joint report meeting of provincial level organs to mark the 65th anniversary of the party's founding.

Lin Yinghai, provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee member and provincial Discipline Inspection Commission secretary, made a report: Carry forward the party's excellent traditions and work style and strive to do well straightening out party style. Comrade Lin Yinghai pointed out: In the work of further doing well in straightening out party style, it is necessary to implement the principle which was put forward by Comrade Hu Yaobang of seriously grasping this work for 2 years. It is essential to continuously and firmly grasp the investigation of and dealing with, big and serious cases. It is imperative to straighten out the party style of all trades and systems in a planned and systematic way. In the course of straightening out party style, leading cadres must set an example.

Comrade Lin Yinghai said: In the course of straightening out party style, we must correctly understand the relationship between the party's line, principles, and policies and party style; correctly understand and handle the relationship between correcting unhealthy trends and reform; seriously implement the guiding ideology of correctly handling the contradictions within the party which was put forward by Comrade Hu Yaobang; and correctly handle the two different kinds of contradictions within the party.

BEIJING HOLDS INDUSTRIAL WORK CONFERENCE

SK080045 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jun 86 p 1

[Text] The municipal CPC Committee and the municipal government held an industrial work conference on 27 June. Chen Xitong, mayor of the municipality, gave a speech at the conference. He said: The criterion for judging whether or not a cadre is excellent is if he boldly seeks to eliminate egalitarianism, widen the differences in income, and carry out the responsibility system. Some cadres, though gaining a lot of votes, are incompetent in promoting production, upgrading product quality, or improving economic results. Sitting idle instead of making contributions, they let all of their fortune be depleted. Thus, we should bravely promote and support those who boldly seek to carry out reform instead of promoting those who try never to offend others.

He also said: Cadres should go deep into the grass roots to solve problems for each and every plant in a step-by-step manner in order to provide the grass roots with concrete deeds instead of formulating dozens of guiding principles for them.

Since the beginning of this year, the municipality has attained certain achievements in industrial production thanks to the fact that a vast number of staff members and workers implemented various measures for reform. However, a few staff members and workers' enthusiasm for production has been dampened by the fact that some enterprises fundamentally failed to eliminate the practice of "everyone eating from the same big pot" and that some enterprises have not yet carried out the economic responsiblity system. Due to the fact leaders of some departments fail to adapt themselves to the situation of commodity economic development or to conscientiously conducting investigations and surveys on market demands and changes in external environments, a number of traditional key products have been unmarketable and overstocked. With such unfavorable factors as having strains on floating funds and energy resources, and lacking many raw materials, the industrial production situation during the first 5 months of this year was not good enough.

To raise the municipality's industrial production, the municipal economic committee called on industrial enterprises throughout the municipality to persistent in eliminating egalitarianism and the practice of "everyone eating from the same big pot" and in perfecting the economic responsibility system. Leading cadres at all levels should go deep into the grass roots to help enterprises solve problems in a down-to-earth manner. The municipality plans to establish a system of regularly holding work conferences of industrial enterprises to study and solve problems of industrial production in a timely manner. Each leader of the industrial department should establish contacts with several key plants to help solve problems. More than a half of the office cadres should go deep into the enterprises to conduct investigations and studies to help them solve problems. The size of bonuses granted to the enterprises should be decided in line with their economic results. We should enthusiastically develop lateral economic cooperation, establish a group of raw materials production bases in a planned and step-by-step manner, carry out the factory head responsibility system, and strive to upgrade product quality and grasp the sale and export of products.

Also delivering speeches at the conference were leading comrades of the municipal CPC Committee and the municipal government, including Li Ximing, Hang Boping, Chen Yuan, and Zhang Jianmin.

HEBEI SECRETARY ON STUDYING HU YAOBANG'S SPEECH

SK0805 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] The provincial CPC Committee held a conference of the responsible cadres of provincial-level organs on the afternoon of 26 June. Comrade Xing Chongzhi introduced the experiences of Standing Committee members of the provincial CPC Committee and vice governors in studying Comrade Hu Yaobang's important speech on mastering two great skills.

Attending the conference were leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, the provincial government, and the provincial CPPCC Committee; responsible comrades of the provincial-level departments, commissions, general offices and bureaus; and principal leading comrades of the Shijiazhuang Prefectural and City CPC Committees.

In his speech made in Yixian County during his inspection tour of the Taihangshan area on 20 April of this year, Comrade Hu Yaobang set forth an important principle that the implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan principally depends on the abilities of leading bodies at all levels. Leading bodies at all levels should master the two great skills in order to implement the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The two great skills are as follows: First, they must creatively implement the policies of the central authorities and the directives of the higher levels. Second, they must correctly deal with the contradictions within the party.

Over the past 2 months or so, the leading bodies at or above the county level and the broad masses of cadres throughout the province have conscientiously studied Comrade Hu Yaobang's important speech. They summed up their work in the course of study. Through study, the leading bodies at all levels and the ranks of cadres have upgraded their political understanding to a new level. This has facilitated new progress in all undertakings of the province.

In his speech, Comrade Xing Chongzhi emphatically introduced the experience in three fields.

First, on judging the abilities of new leading bodies at all levels in implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Second, on mastering the skill of creatively implementing the policies of the central authorities and the directives made by higher levels.

Third, on mastering the skill of correctly dealing with the contradictions within the party.

Comrade Xing Chongzhi said: The provincial CPC Committee has called on the cadres at all levels throughout the province to make efforts to master the two great skills in the course of creatively implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan in order to better achieve the work during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period and to attain the best achievements to meet the expectations placed on them by the people of the province and the CPC Central Committee.

He urged the vast number of party-member cadres at the provincial level, in particular, leading bodies of all departments, to conscientiously study the speech in line with the actual conditions and to sum up experiences in the course of study.

Comrade Liu Ronghui presided over the conference. He specifically required the cadres of provincial-level organs to further study Comrade Hu Yaobang's speech.

NEI MONGGOL SECRETARY ATTENDS MANAGEMENT FORUM

SK020628 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The regional forum on the work to modernize enterprise management concluded in Tongliao City on 29 June. The forum pointed out that while vigorously enhancing technical progress, efforts should be made to push forward the work to modernize enterprise management in order to increase economic results among the industrial interprises throughout the region.

During the forum, Zhang Shuguang, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, paid a visit to the participating comrades at the forum. At the forum, Qian Fenyong, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, delivered a speech.

Our region has closely integrated the work of modernizing management among the state industrial enterprises with that of encouraging enterprises to conduct inner reforms and has carried out the work in both fields simultaneously. In 1984, the region first conducted the pilot work of enforcing the system of having plant chiefs be in charge among the 580 plants, mines, and enterprises. Then, the region enforced such a system among the 60 percent of the total industrial enterprises covered by the budget. The practice has shown that all enterprises that have enforced the system of having plant chiefs be in charge have incurred an obvious change, shown a marked increase in thier economic returns, and have greatly upgraded their managerial standard. [passage omitted]

In his speech, Qian Fenyong emphatically urged the comrades in charge of economic work at all levels to support the reforms conducted by plant chiefs. As for some faults caused by the lack of experience in conducting reforms, efforts should be made to actively help the plant chiefs sum up their experience and lessons. By no means should we demand perfection from the plant chiefs. Mistakes may crop up due to work styles and methods. We should actively support those who have boldly engaged in conducting exploration.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY ATTENDS CPPCC WORK CONFERENCE

SK080125 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Zhou Wenhua, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, stressed at today's provincial CPPCC work conference that the CPPCC committees at all levels should bring into full play their functions for conducting political consultation and democratic supervision and their advantages of having different types of talented persons and having extensive connections with the people at home and abroad; focus their work on helping CPC committees and governments at all levels carry out reform and the two civilizations and strengthen the reunification of the motherland; and make efforts to create a new situation in the CPPCC work.

Zhou Wenhua said in his speech that the CPPCC committees have played a key role in building socialism with Chinese characteristics. He called on CPPCC organizations at all levels throughout the province to further bestir themselves to blaze new trails, to deal with concete matters relating to their work, to bring into full pay their functions for conducting political consultation and democratic supervision and their advantages of having different types of talented persons, and to mobilize CPPCC members of various nationalities to make suggestions and efforts for reform and construction.

Comrade Zhou Wenhua set forth five requirements for party committees at all levels with regard to conscientiously strengthening leadership over CPPCC work.

First, CPC committees at all levels should grasp supervision over and education on theoretical work and policies for the united front and CPPCC organizations. Party schools and cadres' schools should focus their study of political theories on the policies and theories related to the united front work and on the knowledge related to the people's political consultation.

Second, CPC committees should place the CPPCC work on the main agenda and each CPC Committee should transfer a deputy secretary to take charge of the CPPCC work.

Third, party-member responsible comrades in CPPCC committees at each level are allowed to attend the Standing Committee meetings of the CPC committees of the same level as observers so that the CPPCC organizations will be able to timely understand the overall situation and to make efforts to support the work of the party.

Fourth, we should select and transfer to the CPPCC organizations the comrades who understand policies, have a high educational level and a wide range of knowledge, are in the prime of life, and ardently love the CPPCC work in order to ensure the realization of the orderly system of succession for leading bodies of CPPCC organizations in a step-by-step manner.

Fifty, the CPC committees should support CPPCC organizations to carry out activities and try every possible means to solve the problems existing in the work.

Yang Jingren, vice chairman of the National CPPCC Committee, attended the conference and also expressed to all participants the regards from Deng Yingchao, chairman of the National CPPCC Committee.

Also attending the conference were Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Wang Zhao, chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee; and Li He, Yang Zirong, Wang Weizhi, Li Min, and Fu Shiying, vice chairmen of the provincial CPPCC Committee.

HEILONGJIANG PARTY MEMBERS YOUNGER, BETTER EDUCATED

[Text] In recent years, party organizations at all levels throughout the province have conscientiously adhered to the principle of the party taking charge of party affairs, and have greatly strengthened grass-roots party building organizationally. In this way party members have gradually become more competent, an encouraging change has taken place in the advanced age, low educational level, and irrational distribution of party members, and the masses of party members have played a vanguard and exemplary role in building the two civilizations. According to statistics compiled early this year, among all the party members throughout the province, those having a senior middle school education or above amounted to 28.9 percent as against 24.4 percent in 1984, and those aged 25 or below amounted to 2.9 percent as against 2.4 percent in 1984.

Over the past year party organizations at all levels throughout the province have acted strictly in accordance with the stipulations of the party Constitution, and have upheld standards and ensured quality when recruiting party members. They admitted people to the party as soon as conditions were ripe and made sure that every member they recruited was qualified. Among the new party members recruited last year, young and middle-aged intellectuals increased by a large number, thus basically resolving the "difficulty in joining the party" faced by outstanding intellectuals of our province. Last year, some 26,800 technical personnel of various specialities were admitted to the party, showing an increase of 72.8 percent over 1984, and an increase of some 2,100 over the total technical personnel recruited from 1980 to 1983. In addition, the number of educated advanced youths increased. New party members aged 35 or below amounted to more than 57 percent of the total, showing an increase of 56.5 percent over those of the same age-grade recruited in 1984. Among them, those aged 25 or below totaled some 12,000, equivalent to the total new party members of the same age-grade recruited from 1982 to 1984. Among these young new party members, 4,925 were postgraduates and students of colleges, secondary vocational schools, and senior middle schools, an increase of 803 over the total number of new party members of the same status recruited from 1980 to 1984. Also, the number of new party members engaged in actual production at industrial and financial departments increased notably. Some 11,800 workers engaged in actual production, salesclerks and service workers were admitted to the party, showing an increase of 21.6 percent over 1984. The number of women recruited into the party also increased substantially. Some 18,200 women were recruited in the 3 years before 1984. Since last year, all localities have conducted extensive examinations on the quality of new party members, and found that the overwhelming majority of them were good. Among the party members recruited last year, nearly 30,000 were named as advanced or model persons at various levels.

In addition to paying attention to recruiting educated and outstanding persons, party organizations at all levels have also paid attention to the education and management of party members, thus enhancing political and ideological consciousness, improving the education and professional competence of party members, and giving play to their vanguard and exemplary role in rectifying the party style and building the two civilizations.

SHAANXI'S BAI JINIAN ON RURAL PARTY ORGANIZATIONS

HK060237 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The provincial CPC Committee's conference on building grass-roots party organizations in the rural areas concluded on 5 July. Secretary Bai Jinian demanded that these organizations act as organizers and leaders in promoting reform and developing rural commodity economy. To do this, they must first have profound love for the masses. To lack such love, to become divorced from the masses, and to even make use of one's powers to harm the masses is currently the most fearful phenomenon of rottenness. It is the general root of various unhealthy trends and of all kinds of rottenness. We must pay much attention to this.

He expressed the hope that the party members and cadres will go among the masses and get to the places of greatest hardship to strengthen their affection for the masses. Only thus can they be good organizers and leaders.

Bai Jinian also hoped that the cadres of the rural grass-roots party organizations will seriously study and implement the party's line, principles, and policies, and study and acquire knowledge of science and technology. They will thus acquire the ability to lead the rural reforms well and to develop commodity economy. [passage omitted]

Bai Jinian stressed that it is essential to get a good grasp of grass-roots party rectification and to build the grass-roots organizations well through rectification. It is also necessary to continue to do a good job in readjusting the leadership groups of the grass-roots rural party branches, improve and strengthen the party's organizational life, step up the training of cadres, and enhance their quality. [passage omitted]

The meeting summed up and exchanged experiences and explored the question of strengthening the grass-roots rural party organizations. The provincial CPC Committee named and commended 21 advanced party branches and 29 outstanding party members.

XINJIANG MEETING ON GRASS-ROOTS PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK060233 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The regional conference on grass-roots party rectification, which concluded this afternoon, demanded that the party committees and party rectification work departments at all levels strengthen leadership over rural party rectification work and do a good job in party rectification in the region from beginning to end.

The 6-day meeting conveyed and implemented the spirit of the forum convened in Lanzhou by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification on rectification in minority-nationality and remote areas, made arrangements for village-level party rectification, and exchanged information and experiences.

Regional CPC Committee Secretary Song Hanliang spoke on strengthening party building. [passage omitted]

Song Hanliang said: Even today, the party organizations in many places and units have not correctly handled the relationship between party work and economic work. A few party organizations are even in a paralyzed or semi-paralyzed state. Positive and negative experiences and lessons fully show that it is essential to strengthen party building in order to promote reforms and the economy in the region and bring about a fundamental turn for the better in party style and social mood. The party organizations at all levels must have full understanding on this point. [passage omitted]

Song Hanliang said: We now have only half a year to complete the task of party rectification. While getting a good grasp of consolidating and developing the fruits of party rectification in units at and above county-level, we must act in line with the central authorities' guiding ideas on rural party rectification work and do a good job in rural party rectification.

Amudong Niyazi, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee and head of the regional party rectification guidance group, presided at the meeting and made an important speech.

19 'CHINESE DEFECTORS' ARRIVE FROM SEOUL

HK081242 Hong Kong AFP in English 1239 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 8 (AFP) -- Nineteen Chinese defectors picked up by South Korean maritime police last month arrived in Taipei Tuesday from Seoul, informed sources said. The sources said the defectors flew into Taipei's international airport aboard a China Airlines of Taiwan plane.

The defectors, who were accompanied by several Taiwan officials during the Seoul-Taipei flight, were taken away by security authorities upon landing.

Informed sources said the government-run Free China Relief Association would be taking care of the defectors. The association has assited Chinese who fled the mainland, helped evacuate ethnic Chinese from Indo-China and provided shelter to the so-called "boat people" -- refugees rescued from sea.

(In Seoul, the South Korean Foreign Ministry said the defectors were flown to Taipei "in accordance with international laws and practices and in respect of their wishes." South Korean authorities had imposed a news blackout on information about the defectors immediately after their arrival in the port of Inchon in late June. Reliable sources said that Seoul apparently wanted to handle the matter as quietly as possible so as not to irritate Beijing and harm South Korean hopes of improving relations.)

The defectors, all men in their 20's except for a 31-year-old cook, include farmers, merchants, welders, civil servants and truck drivers. They were picked up by South Korean maritime police June 17 while drifting in the Yellow Sea. They reportedly left their homes in the Guangxi Autonomous Region of southern China on June 8, travelling on foot and by train to the Shandong peninsula, which they reached eight days later. They then bought a small wooden boat for 6,000 yuan (1,870 U.S. dollars) and sailed eastwards from Weihaiwei, a naval base on the peninsula, according to press reports in Taiwan.

'Defectors' Hold News Conference

[Names as received]

[Text] Taipei, July 8 (AFP) -- A leader of a group of 19 mainland Chinese flown from South Korea to Taiwan Tuesday said that the defectors hardly knew each other before they left China in a small wooden boat last month.

Ho Yung-an, 31, said the defection was planned and organized by four people, including himself, who were introduced by mutual friends.

"The other members were recruited by them and we hardly knew each other," Mr Ho said at a press conference sponsored by the government-run Free China Relief Association (FCRA) shortly after their arrival in Taipei.

The defectors, who were picked up by South Korean maritime police on June 17 while adrift in the Yellow Sea, were flown from Seoul to Taipei by Taiwan's China Airlines.

The 19 defectors, who include farmers, merchants, welders, civil servants and technicians, did not receive a hero's welcome from the authorities in Taiwan as have previous defectors.

Informed sources said the men might be sent Wednesday to a refugee camp in the Pescadores, an offshore island, while the FCRA made arrangements for their future. FCRA officials declined to comment on the organization's plans for the defectors.

(In Seoul, the South Korean Foreign Ministry said the defectors were flown to Taipei "in accordance with international laws and practices and in respect of their wishes.")

The Taiwan Foreign Ministry expressed gratitude to the Seoul government for "helping (the defectors) fulfill their wish of coming to Taiwan."

Wei Cheng-hsiung, 25, one of the four group leaders, said "long-time dissatisifaction with the government of Deng Xiaoping and frustration at being unable to apply our real talents in work" had prompted them to defect. Ho said that he skippered the overloaded seven-meter (23-foot) wooden motorboat from Weihaiwei, a naval base on the Shandong Peninsula in northern China, across the Yellow Sea in what he called "a bid to seek freedom." The defectors drifted at sea for 30 hours before being picked up by South Korean maritime police, he said.

Mr Ho, a former truck driver and cook, is the eldest of the defectors who teamed up to make an 11-day trip to Weihaiwei from their native homes in Guangdong and Guanxi Provinces in southern China. He said the group split into two for the voyage to Weihaiwei, travelling by train, bus and ferry.

All the other defectors are in their 20's. Mr Ho is also the only one who is married. He has two sons.

The FCRA has assisted Chinese who fled the mainland, helped evacuate ethnic Chinese from Indo-China and provided shelter to the so-called "boat people" -- refugees rescued from sea.

Government Thanks ROK

[Text] Taipei, July 8 (CNA) -- The Ministry of Foreign Affairs issued a statement Tuesday expressing thanks to the Korean Government for sending the 19 mainland Chinese who fled to South Korea aboard a motorized junk on June 16 to the Republic of China on Taiwan.

The 19 mainlanders arrived in Taipei Tuesday afternoon.

MOFA spokesman Cheyne J.Y. Chiu said the ROC Government wishes to extend its gratitude to the Korean Government for taking good care of the 19 mainland Chinese after they arrived in South Korea and for helping them fulfill their wish of coming to the Republic of China based on humanitarian principles and the friendship between the two nations.

Welcomed By FCRA President

OW090259 Taipei CNA in English 0230 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 8 (CNA) -- Ku Cheng-Kang, president of the Free China Relief Association [FCRA] Tuesday evening received the 19 mainland Chinese who fled to freedom in South Korea June 16, and praised them for their courage in escaping communist rule.

Ku said the 19 freedom seekers' brillant feat is another heavy blow to Communist China, because their actions have proved the Peiping regime's claims false that the people on the Chinese mainland are able to enjoy more freedom and better living after the so-called reform and open door policies.

The 19 mainlanders arrived here Tuesdasy, 22 days after thier stay in South Korea for investigation.

Ku said this incident also signals that the peace-and freedom-loving Chinese people will never succumb to the blood-stained Chinese Communists, who have slaughtered tens of millions of people on the mainland since they took power by force. Ku told these freedom-seekers only after the three principles of the people are enforced on the mainland, can the Chinese have happiness and hope.

Ku urged the freedom seekers to work hard to acquire knowledge and learn the techniques they will need to start new lives, adding that the government would help them settle down here by giving every support they need.

PRC OFFICIALS STILL HOLD RULE OF LAW IN CONTEMPT

OW071950 Taipei CNA in English 1427 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 7 (CNA) -- The following is a commentary by the Broadcasting Corporation of China (BCC) in Taipei entitled "Peking's Rule of Law'"

Peking's official HSINHUA NEWS AGENCY reported last Thursday that senior party leaders were given a two-hour lecture on the rule of law by a university professor.

The lecture by Sun Kuo-hua, associated professor of law at the Chinese People's University in Peking, was sponsored by the Communist Party Central Committee Secretariate with a view to acquainting party leaders with the concept of the rule of law. The news agency did not mention who were present at the lecture except that Politburo member Hu Chi-li conveyed a message from Teng Hsiao-ping to the listeners on the occasion. This suggests that Teng himself was not among the audience.

HSINHUA quoted Hu as saying that Chinese laws before the 1949 communist takeover served the interested of the ruling class and therefore the communists did not consider these laws binding to them.

Hu's remarks explains the origin of the term "communist bandits" which people in the Republic of China on Taiwan sometimes use in reference to the Peking regime and its leaders.

Bandits do not respect the law of the land. Hu's explanation to justify the lawlessness of the Chinese Communists before 1949 does not make the communists more respectable because they are still a lawless group 37 years after they seized power.

The very fact that top leaders of the Peking regime has to be taught the basic concept of law decades after its establishment is best proof that Red China is still a lawless land where the words of the rulers are the law.

It is true that Peking has a Constitution for the state and another for the party in addition to its own legal system. But none of these has been observed by the rulers. Otherwise, there would not be any need of last week's lecture for party leaders.

Although Teng has seen the necessity of establishing the rule of law for the realization of his modernization dream, he obviously has not realized that he needs a lecture on legal concept more than others. Otherwise, he should have turned up for the lecture himself.

Even Mao Tse-tung knew the importance of playing by the rule sometimes, as indicated in his refusal to yield the party chairmanship throughout his life. From that post he could legitimately exercise absolute control in a totalitarian state.

Teng has discarded this rule. Officially, he is neither the head of the party nor the head of the state. He is only the chairman of the party's Central Advisory Committee. [as received]

Yet Teng has been exercising powers as the supreme ruler who is responsible to nobody but himself. He once even openly insulted former Vice Premier Huang Hua by callling his remarks about Hong Kong "hogwash."; it shows the extent to which Teng disregards rules and the rule of law.

But Teng is not unique among the top communist leaders in this regard. His contempt for the rule of law is typical of the men who have remained "bandits" in the eyes of the Chinese people.

LU PING VIEWS HONG KONG BASIC LAW, ELECTIONS

HK030530 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 2 Jul 86 p 2

[Report: "Lu Ping Answers Hong Kong Reporters' Questions on Basic Law, Other Topics"]

[Text] Lu Ping Says That China Has Not Officially Made Known Its Position on Direct Elections and That There Can Be Many Ways To Coordinate With the Reform of the Political Structure

Lu Ping, secretary general of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office of the State Council, met Hong Kong reporters this morning. The main contents of their conversation follows:

Reporter: Some people say that since the Chinese side has not indicated in what year there will be direct elections in Hong Kong, Hong Kong plans to elect some members to the Legislative Council through direct elections in 1988 and then see the results. What do you think of this argument?

Lu: We have not officially made our position known on either direct or indirect elections.

Reporter: Do you think there is a possibility that some members will be elected through direct elections in 1988?

Lu: I cannot officially make known our position today because we have to know more about this issue. We do not have a well-considered view and we are still listening to views from various quarters. You just said that the Chinese side has given such an indication. I am afraid it is not an official one.

Reporter: Will there be direct elections after 1997? Will this affect the reform of the Hong Kong political structure?

Lu: This depends on whether there will be direct elections in the legislative body of the Special Administrative Region after 1997. If the basic law stipulates that some members of the legislative body will be elected through direct elections, of course this is not a big problem. If the basic law does not make such a stipulation, of course there will not be a guarantee for it. That is why we say there is a question of linking up. We hope that the representative government will be linked up with the basic law. We do not hope that the representative government goes this way and the basic law goes that way.

Reporter: How do you think the basic law can be coordinated with the reform of the Hong Kong political structure?

Lu: This can be carried out by various means. The Sino-British Joint Liaison Group has made it clear that the question should be discussed in the liaison group. It can also be conducted by various other means. We can exchange views on, and discuss it, by official, non-official, or semi-official means. I am sure this question can be settled easily. It is not difficult to settle the question of linking up.

Reporter: Some members hold that democracy does not stand for direct elections and others hold that without direct elections there will be no democracy. What is your personal view on this?

Lu: My personal view is that democracy has wide implications. It is not simply a question of election. Even if there are direct elections, will there truly be democracy? Does it necessarily mean democracy itself? I think direct elections cannot be equated with democracy. For example, some countries, like the Philippines, practice direct elections, giving one man one vote. Can you say that the Philippines was genuinely democratic during the rule of Marcos? It is hard to say so. That is my personal view.

As for the Question of Land Leases, What Formalities Should Be Followed

Reporter: Apart from the political structure and travel documents, what other problems concerning the question of linking up remain to be solved?

Lu: There are many problems to be solved. For example, by the year 1997, what will be done with current land leases? Will they continue to be held good or will they be replaced? If they continue to be held good, what formalities should be followed? All these questions come under the category of linking up, a question of transition as we saw it. As far as the law is concerned, the Joint Declaration states that the laws previously in force in Hong Kong will continue to be held good, save for any that contravene the Basic Law. How will they continue to be held good? This is also a question of linking up, of transition. Should they go through formalities or other ways? Moreover, who will decide which laws contravene and which ones do not contravene the Basic Law? Hence, there is a question of linking up, which we should begin considering before 1 July 1997. This is because there should not be any vacuum in terms of the law and land leases. There are many problems in this regard which should be solved before 1997.

Reporter: It is said that the Land Fund is in violation of the Joint Declaration. It should be deposited in banks and not be used as an investment means, as stated by the Joint Declaration.

Lu: In my opinion, this problem can be discussed by the Sino-British Land Commission to find ways of using the fund in accordance with the Joint Declaration, which states that the fund shall be deposited in banks in the locality and shall not be drawn on except for the financing of land development. This stipulation is quite clear. If the fund is used for purposes other than financing land development, this will be in breach of the Joint Declaration. But if the fund, which amounts to nearly HK$1.2 billion at present and will, perhaps, reach HK$10 billion and more by 1997, is deposited in banks purely for interest, there will be the question of preserving the value of the dollar. Therefore, we should find ways of handling the fund, which will go to the government of the Special Administrative Region sooner or later, and from which Beijing will not take one cent. Since, at present, the government of the Special Administrative Region has not yet been set up, we, the Chinese side of the Land Commission, take care of the fund on behalf of the future government. Now that we are entrusted so to do, we should take good care of it. Failure to take good care of it will mean not showing responsibility to Hong Kong. To hold ourselves responsible to the Hong Kong people and to the future government of the Special Administrative Region, we should take good care of the fund, no matter what happens.

Reporter: You said that the Land Commission must discuss how to manage the money. Why does this concern the British side, because the money is entrusted to the care of the Chinese side.

Lu: No. What I mean is how we can avoid acting contrary to the Joint Declaration. It is a matter of interpretation based on the Joint Declaration and of how the relevant provisions are to be interpreted in line with the Joint Declaration.

Reporter: Is investment an act contrary to the Joint Declaration?

Lu: In my opinion, the Joint Declaration ways nothing about whether investment is allowed. It only says that the money can be invested in no area other than land development. The money is still there and lies untouched. It is only a matter of how to make it grow in value.

The Risk of Investment Should Be Reduced to a Minimum and a Loss Should Be Avoided by Any Means

Reporter: Who is responsible for any loss resulting from the business of investment?

Lu: A loss should be avoided by any means. Any investment made should be an investment with the minimum risk. Even with money put in the bank, there is also risk. Any bank can go bankrupt. In addition, depositing several billion Hong Kong dollars as such in the bank, is both unfavorable to Hong Kong and not feasible. Some of the money must definitely be converted into foreign currencies, probably partly U.S. dollars and partly marks and the like. But risk is also involved here. If the U.S. dollar and the mark should drop, what could we do? If we make an investment, the risk must be the smallest and reduced to a minimum. Safety of principal must be achieved by means. The value of money must be protected from erosion through inflation.

Reporter: The risk is at a minimum with the money put in the bank. There is also risk if we manage the money in other ways.

Lu: We may treat the money in other ways. For example, we may buy British and U.S. bonds. But if you want to eliminate all risk, this is out of the question. We, however, only seek a minimum risk. If a loss should be incurred, responsibility should be borne by the Chinese representatives on the Sino-British Land Commission. This is chiefly a matter to be viewed in light of the principle that we must be accountable to the Hong Kong people. It is the simplest thing to put all the money in the bank, but this would be an act of irresponsibility to the Hong Kong people.

Reporter: You said that there will be Hong Kong people on the Land Fund Consultative Committee. How would Hong Kong people be selected for participation?

Lu: The Land Fund Consultative Committee must include selected Hong Kong people. It is not just a matter of participation by these Hong Kong people. They must also take charge. It should be a case of all Hong Kong people being involved. This is because the money is their own, and the Hong Kong people should be allowed to think out ideas. How such Hong Kong people are selected -- must this be done through a general election?

Reporter: Some people said that the Chinese side's explanations on the use of premium income reflects the sense of "rule by men," what is your opinion on this?

Lu: The Joint Declaration only says that premium income shall be deposited in banks, and no more. When one's money is deposited in a bank, can one ask the bank to make certain investments with the money? The Joint Declaration says nothing about this. After all, I put the money in banks, not in my pocket; and in the local banks, not in the Chinese People's Bank. Putting the money in a Hong Kong bank to make certain investments does not run counter to the Joint Declaration. This is my personal view. In the future, the question of what is the safest way of investment should be discussed by the Consultative Committee.

Reporter: Is it not better to have the bank decide on the investment and assume all responsibilities?

Lu: I am not clear about specific matters. I am afraid we must discuss them with the various parties concerned, with the Consultative Committee, and with the bank. We must also study further how to enact this law. But generally speaking, we must hold ourselves responsible to the Hong Kong people.

Local Inhabitants Can Be Defined by Means of Drawing Circles

Reporter: The Consultative Committee recently discussed the definition of local inhabitant. Do you think those people who hold both foreign passports and Hong Kong's permanent identity cards can be included as local inhabitants?

Lu: In the joint declaration, the questions of who are local inhabitants and who has the permanent right of abode in Hong Kong is clearly stated in three sections. If we define them by means of drawing circles, the largest circle will be Hong Kong residents, including both temporary and permanent residents and Chinese and foreign residents. A smaller circle will be local inhabitants, which refers to the people who have the right of abode in Hong Kong and have permanent identity cards. Most of these are Chinese, but there are also some foreigners who, as was provided by the Joint Declaration, have resided in Hong Kong for a continuous period of 7 years or more and have taken Hong Kong as their place of permanent residence. These local inhabitants enjoy the right to elect and to be elected in Hong Kong. In other words, if a legislative organ is established in the future, these foreign inhabitants can also join the election and be elected members of the Legislative Council. The third circle refers to the Chinese citizens among the local inhabitants. They not only enjoy the right to elect and to be elected in local elections, but also enjoy the right to elect Hong Kong delegates to the NPC. Local foreign inhabitants do not have this right. There are roughly these three cirlces. But how do we determine whether a foreign inhabitant who has resided in Hong Kong for a continuous period of 7 years has taken Hong Kong as his place of permanent residence? This question needs to be studied further and can be resolved in various ways.

Foreign Nationals Can Be Elected to the Legislative Council and Be Employed as Judges

Reporter: Some people say that if foreign nationals are elected to the Legislative Council, they will not have a sense of dedication.

Lu: Hong Kong has long been an international city with residents of different nationalities. They should have their own councilors to speak for them in the legislature. Although they cannot represent all Hong Kong people, at least they can speak for foreign residents in Hong Kong, because government departments of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region can still employ foreign nationals, and they may also be employed as judges in courts. This is clearly stipulated in the Joint Declaration.

Reporter: If British officials have a different interpretation of the Joint Declaration, through what channels can they express their views?

Lu: If so, they can no doubt advance their views in the Sino-British joint liaison group. The Joint Declaration should be explained by governments of both countries, and should not be explained unilaterally. However, drafting the Basic Law is a matter for the Chinese Government itself.

Reporter: Will the British Government be given notice before China promulgates the Basic Law?

Lu: No. It is not necessary to do so. The Basic Law will be promulgated at the end. Before it is promulgated, the draft will be presented to all of you, as well as to the British, so there is no need to inform them beforehand. Moreover, before the Basic Law is promulgated, we will twice solicit opinion from the Hong Kong people, during their discussions of the first and second drafts.

Reporter: The two special sub-groups of the Basic Law Drafting Committee have called meetings with each other. In your view, what are causing the biggest headaches?

Lu: The political structure is regarded as the most difficult part of the Basic Law, because there are widely divergent views on the issue. For example, the initial session of the political structure sub-group was virtually a meeting at which "only Hong Kong members expounded their views on the subject," and there was divergence of views beween them. Now they have only come to an understanding with each other about relations between the central people's government and the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region.

The Elections Issue Should Be Settled and Selection of the Chief Executive Must Be Further Studied.

Reporter: What are the most vexing problems concerning the political structure?

Lu: That is the issue of elections. As the Joint Declaration stipulates, the legislature shall be set up by election. There is no objection to this point. However, specifically speaking, there are differences of opinion on how to conduct the election -- direct or indirect, partially direct elections or partially indirect elections, and on the specific methods of direct and indirect elections. At present, indirect elections are conducted through functional bodies and electoral college, but some people hold that these two channels are not perfect. How will direct elections be conducted? By direct voting among the five million inhabitants simultaneously, or in different districts at different times? How will these districts be divided? All these questions are very complicated. Another question concerns the relations between the executive and the legislature, involving the accountability of the executive to the legislature, the selection of the chief executive, and the arrangements for district organizations. There is also a divergence of views on these issues. Therefore, they should be studied further before they can be properly resolved. In my opinion, differences over these issues may still exist after the Basic Law is promulgated.

Reporter: Some people say that if there are direct elections, party politics will inevitably emerge. Do you personally think that there should not be party politics in Hong Kong?

Lu: It is better for Hong Kong that party politics do not emerge. This is my personal view. Things will be very complicated in Hong Kong if party politics are conducted there. One political party comes to power today and then another political party will come to power tomorrow. This is detrimental to Hong Kong's stability. In particular, at the time when party politics begin to emerge, political parties will proliferate and there will be a situation of a hundred parties contending with one another. It is impossible for two large parties to emerge at the very beginning. Judging by developments in all other countries, it takes quite a time for two large political parties to develop from many small ones. Will Hong Kong be able to sustain such a long process? Therefore, I personally think that party politics are unfavorable to Hong Kong. However, the question of whether political parties should be banned by law needs to be discussed by all the people concerned. I personally feel that in order to maintain Hong Kong's stability, party politics should not emerge in Hong Kong. However, perhaps when direct elections are held, party politics will become the trend of the times and political parties will inevitably emerge. If political parties are to emerge, we should also do our best to think out ways to prevent them from wielding too much influence on Hong Kong's political situation. This question should be discussed by the government of the Special Administrative Region in the future.

Reporter: Does this mean that direct elections will be restricted.

Lu: No, some practice is certain to lead to the emergence of political parties. For example, the implementation of the ministerial system. If this is the case, surely political parties should be organized. For without a majority party, it is impossible to implement a ministerial system. Personally, I am not for the ministerial system. In addition, the ministerial system does not conform to the Joint Declaration. For the declaration clearly says that the principal officials of the Special Administrative Region should be nominated by the chief executive and appointed by the central government and are not to be elected by the legislature. Neither does it say that the nomination should be approved by the legislature before reporting to the central government for the appointment. When this stipulation was made, it was considered that the chief executive had to have the power to organize his own cabinet and would be able to select those he thought could really work for Hong Kong. Only, such a government can work efficiently and can enable the chief executive to control the government. If the legislature elects an official of secretary rank who always opposes the chief executive, then it will be very hard for the government to operate. The Joint Declaration stipulates this for the precise purpose that in the future the chief executive will be able to lead a truly efficient and stable government.

HONG KONG TO MOUNT CAMPAIGN TO QUELL DAYA BAY CONCERNS

HK300301 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 30 Jun 86 p 1

[Excerpt] The Government is to mount an information campaign on the $27 billion Daya Bay nuclear power plant project to soothe public jitters.

Top Government officials believe the controversy has now become a political issue which could lead to a confidence crisis similar in scale to the one which occurred during the 1997 talks.

Uncertainty among local people mounted at that time as an information blackout was imposed over the progress of the talks.

On the nuclear project, officials reckon that the battle for public support should be carefully handled. Strong opposition to Daya Bay from local people might jeopardise the present delicate relationship between Hong Kong and China.

The decision to mount the campaign was reached last week after a series of high-level meetings. The Executive Council gave the go-ahead on Friday they will release the minutes of their meeting with experts from the Daya Bay contractors on safety aspects.

Opposition to Daya Bay has been mounting since the Chernobyl disaster in the Soviet Union on April 26.

Executive Councillors feel that a lack of communication and information about the project has fuelled fears and led most of the public to side with anti-nuclear groups.

CPC INTERNATIONAL LIAISON DEVELOPMENT DISCUSSED

HK041420 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jun 86 p 5

[Article by Lian Yan: "A Discussion on the Readjustment and Development of the CPC's International Liaison Work:")

[Text] The Chinese Communist Party has gone through a course of 65 years; it has scored splendid victories, and committed some mistakes as well. Regarding the party's international liaison work, the accomplishments have been tremendous; but of course, we have had shortcomings and mistakes, too. Having gone through some readjustment over the past decade, a new situation has emerged in our party's international liaison work.

How is the condition of the readjustment and development of the party's international liaison work? Why is it necessary for our party to establish ties with other political parties other than communist parties? Comrades both in and outside the party are all concerned about these questions.

I

From the day of its founding, the CPC started to establish and develop ties and exchanges with foreign communist parties. The just struggles of the CPC and the Chinese people won the support of the communist parties and peoples of all countries during the period of the revolutionary war in China and the international anti-fascist war; likewise, we voiced our support to their just struggles. After the birth of new China, as the country's ruling party, the CPC further expanded and developed ties and friendship with various communist parties and peoples. By the end of the 1950's, the CPC had established or was maintaining friendly ties with the majority of the world's communist parties. However, polemics broke out in the international communist movement in the early 1950's, and China then carried out the "Great Cultural Revolution"; the ties between the CPC and the majority of communist parties were borken.

After the fall of the "gang of four" the CPC changed this abnormal state of affairs and gradually readjusted its guidelines for international liaison work. At the same time, many communist parties expressed their wish to restore ties with the majority of communist parties. In 1977, President Tito of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia visited China at our invitation; during his visit, the Chinese and Yugoslav parties decided to recover their party relations. On our part, we were correcting a historical error, and it was a great turning point both in our party 's ideology and work. With this as a beginning, the CPC has actively recovered and developed friendly relations with a large number of communist parties, which had interrupted relations with the CPC, such as the Italian Communist Party. At present, the CPC has rather wide contacts and ties with many foreign communist parties, and the contents of the ties are richer, and more substantial, with a variety of forms.

The CPC began to establish relations with progressive and friendly parties and organizations in the Third World countries in 1978. Since the founding of the PRC, departments concerned in China have maintained friendly ties with many national liberation organizations and political parties, and actively supported them in their struggles for national liberation or safeguarding their national independence; however, the CPC had not established party relations with them. Generally, the progressive and friendly political parties of the Third World were formed and developed in their struggles for, or maintenance of, their national independence; the majority of them are now in power, taking part in the government, or have a legal place as a political party not in office.

They are very important forces in the political arena in the Third World countries. They are friendly to China, and are willing to exchange their views with the CPC on such important issues as the international situation, safeguarding world peace, defending the rights of the Third World countries and peoples, and establishing the new international economic order. And they are willing to promote mutual understanding and to exchange experiences on party building, cadre training, mass work and leadership in economic construction, as well as on promoting economic cooperative relations on the basis of equality and mutual benefits between the two countries. When we establish and promote party relations with these political parties, it is favorable to developing state-to-state relations and consolidating the friendship between the peoples, as well as safeguarding world peace and promoting the progress of mankind. Therefore, based on the principle of promoting friendship and seeking common ground while reserving differences, we have actively established and developed party relations with these political parties and organizations.

The CPC began to establish friendly ties with socialist parties, social democratic parties and labor parties in Europe and other regions in 1981. The Chinese leaders and mass organizations used to have friendly ties with the leaders of these political parties in the past, but no party relations had been established. Generally, these political parties have a long history, and a wide mass basis, and they have rather great influence on the working class, other strata of laborers, and the middle class and the petti-bourgeoisie as well. Many of them are in power, taking part in the government, or are major parties not in office, and they have great influence both at home and abroad. At present, these parties advocate relaxing the tense international situation, opposing the arms race, safeguarding world peace, promoting the North-South talks, and supporting the development of the Third World countries. They have many things in common, or similarities with our views in international affairs. They are friendly with China, and willing to establish and develop ties and cooperation with the CPC, which are helpful to both parties. The establishment of diplomatic relations with China was realized precisely when many of these parties came into power. Needless to say differences in ideologies exist between the CPC and these parties, nor do they take the same position as China on some international issues. Therefore, the CPC has adopted the guideline of transcending differences in ideologies, and seeking mutual understanding and cooperation in establishing and developing friendly ties with socialist parties, social democraatic parties and labor parties. Practice has proved that such ties are helpful to promoting state-to-state relations, friendship between peoples, as well as safeguarding world peace.

At present, the CPC's international liaison work has entered upon a new stage of liveliness. We have already established ties in different forms with some 200 communist parties and other progressive and friendly political parties. Based on the spirit of the more friends, the better, the CPC is willing to establish ties with all political parties and personalities that are willing to make friendly contacts with the CPC.

II

The ties between communist parties of various countries is a normal international phenomenon. In establishing and developing party-to-party relations, a principle acceptable to both parties is needed. Based on the historical experiences and realistic conditions of the international communist movement, the CPC proposed in its report to the 12th National Congress," In adherence to the basis of Marxism, the CPC will develop its relations with the communist parties and other working class political parties of various countries, based on the principle of independence and taking the initiative in one's own hands, complete equality, mutual respect and noninterference in each other's international affairs." This is precisely the CPC's basic guideline and principle for dealing with communist parties of various countries.

The CPC adheres to Marxism and internationalism as well as the principle of independence and taking the initiative in one's own hands. Independence and taking the initiative in one's own hands are harmonious things, and not inconsistent with each other. Without independence and taking the initiative in one's own hands, there will be no internationalism to speak of. Both the CPC and quite a few foreign communist parties of other countries advocate developing the relations between all parties on the basis of independence and taking the initiative in one's own hands. We can say that this is the universal demand in the international communist movement at present, as well as a basic experience proved by the practice of the international communist movement. Based on the viewpoint of historical materialism, the rise or decline, the success or failure of a political party is not determined by the political party of another country, but objective conditions and whether its own line and policies are supported by the people of its own country. Even if they have made some mistakes, they should be summed up and corrected by the party concerned itself, and only then, will the party be solid and sound. Therefore, the parties of various countries should all deal with their own affairs independently and take the initiative in their own hands. This is not purely a theoretical question, but a matter of practice in the main. Historical experiences have demonstrated that whenever the principle of independence and taking the initiative in one's own hands is observed in party-to-party relations, a good job will be done in their mutual relations, and it will be favorable to the development of the revolutionary cause; otherwise, the mutual relations will be injured as well as the revolutionary cause.

Then, what is independent and taking the initiative in one's own hands? Regarding this question, many parties have made brilliant expositions, and the CPC leaders have also undertaken profound discussions. To generalize, genuine independence and taking the initiative into one's own hands means that each party is responsible to its own country and people instead of being responsible to a certain foreign party or international center, that each party selects its own road of development in revolution and construction in line with its country's conditions under the guidance of the basic tenets of Marxism instead of copying another party's model, that each party decides on its own positions in international affairs instead of obeying a big party or country's foreign policy or struggle, that each party manages its own affairs and handles its relations with other parties and opposes any outside interference or control. We stress independence and taking the initiative in one's own hands, and simultaneously advocate the moral support of each other and the exchange of views on a voluntary basis. We oppose any restriction on the actions of another party with the so-called "common strategy" and "coordinated action," the practice of turning internationalism against independence and taking the initiative in one's own hands, and the behavior of intervening and controlling another party and country under the pretext of internationalism.

Party-to-party relations should be one of equality. All parties, whether they are big or small, powerful or weak, with a long or short history, in power or not in power, should all be completely equal. The postwar historical experiences of the international communist movement have demonstrated that it does not need and there should not be a leading center and party. Any party, no matter how long a history it has, no matter how early it won its victories in revolution, no matter how many rich experiences it has, has no special privilege to stand above other parties. Both the CPC and some other parties resolutely oppose the style of a paternal party.

We also believe that the parties of every country each have their own merits as well as shortcomings, and they should show respect to each other, learn from each other, and make up each other's deficiencies.

Because of the different environment and experiences of the parties of various countries, it is impossible for them to arrive at an unanimous view on the situation and their tasks. The disputes or different views on some issues between different parties is a normal phenomenon, which should not become a block in developing mutual relations. Regarding such differences in views, they can only be solved step by step based on the principle of seeking common ground while reserving room for differences, friendly negotiation on a voluntary basis, and patience by both parties in waiting for a solution. We should by no means force unanimity on others, or force the views of one party on the other. Concerning the questions left over by history in party-to-party relations, we should chiefly rely on each summing up its own experiences and lessons, with both parties looking forward to the future. It is precisely based on this principle that the CPC has recovered the friendly relations with many communist parties which had once interrupted ties with us.

Strictly observing the principle of nonintervention in the internal affairs between the parties of various countries is an important historical experience and lesson of realistic significance. Without this principle, there is no independence and equality to speak of as well as mutual respect and learning from each other. In its report to the 12th CPC National Congress, the Central Committee has explicitly pointed out, "Of course, mutual help is needed between parties of various countries, however, any external compulsion and taking on what ought to be done by others should never be allowed. Forcing one's views on others, and intervening in the internal affairs of the party of another country will only make the revolutionary cause of the country concerned suffer setbacks and failure. As to forcing the policies of other countries' parties to serve the policies of the party of one's own country, and even carrying out armed intervention in another country, that can only sabotage the international communist movement at its roots. "When the CPC stresses mutual nonintervention in internal affairs, it includes not only the nonintervention in any of the internal affairs of the party of another country, but also refraining from intervening in the internal affairs of another country by means of party relations, and refraining from using bilateral party relations to injure other parties or any third party. We have been good to our words these years.

The CPC has carried out unremitting struggles for ascertaining and safeguarding the correct principle for party-to-party relations. However, we had shortcomings and mistakes in dealing with foreign communist parties in the past, which have brought ill consequences to some parties. The CPC has earnestly summed up the experiences and lessons in this respect, made self-criticism in the open, and simultaneously corrected them in practice.

The four principles on independence and taking the initiative in one's own hands, complete equality, mutual respect, and nonintervention in each other's internal affairs proposed by the CPC are applicable not only to the relations between the CPC and foreign communist parties, but also the relations with other progressive and friendly political parties, from the angle of transcending ideologies. In recent years, the CPC has scored marked results in developing relations with other progressive and friendly political parties by strictly abiding by the four principles.

III

The CPC has adhered to the principle of seeking truth from facts, and the principle of combining Marxist tenets with actual conditions. The CPC has always regarded Marxism as the theoretical basis of its ideology. We believe that Marxism is the guide to actions, but not rigid dogma. Marxist tenets should be developed as well as adhered to. We should persist in dialectical materialism and historical materialism, as well as the Marxist stand, viewpoints and approaches in analyzing and solving problems.

However, Marxism is a developing science, and we should not stick to some outdated individual doctrines and conclusions which are no longer applicable to the new historical conditions, neither should we rigidly adhere to some individual principles which are suitable only to some particular conditions or are not quite complete or perfect, but we should combine Marxist tenets with the actual conditions. Practice has proved that not only some individual conclusions in Marxism need be broken through, or have already been broken through, but even the tenets themselves also need be continuously tested, supplemented, made complete and perfect, enriched and developed in practice. This is a principle which Marxist classical writers had long expounded repeatedly. In fact, the reason why Marxism has such great vitality lies in the fact that it has always combined itself with practice, linked itself with the practical struggle of certain times, and is capable of answering and solving the new problems that emerged in practice and opening a way for new tasks, when Marxism itself has been enriched and developed in practice. The great victory of the October revolution led by Lenin had proved this point, as well as the great victory of the Chinese revolution led by Mao Zedong, when the revolutionary practice of other communist parties have done the same.

It is precisely based on the above-mentioned guiding ideas that we advocate carrying out continuous exploration on the road of revolution and construction, and at the same time, support other parties to carry out their own exploration. Regarding communist parties in power and socialist countries, we advocate that views be exchanged internally on a voluntary basis regarding the socialist construction of those countries, when open criticism and censure should be refrained from, because this involves the internal affairs of other parties and countries, and no one whatsoever should intervene. The conditions of various parties and countries differ, so do the ways of their construction, which should be respected. As socialism is still in the course of developing, it needs continuous exploration, and mistakes are unavoidable to anybody. Historical experiences have demonstrated that the results of open criticism in the internal affairs of other parties and states are very bad. In short, we should respect and study the exploration and experience of all socialist countries. Likewise, many of the communist parties not in office are facing the tremendous changes in social, economic, and class structures, and they are thinking independently, summing up experiences, in pursuit of measures to suit the new situation in their program, organization and modes of struggles, as well as making theoretical exploration in search of new ways for development. The communist parties of these countries have the best conditions to understand the realities and historical conditions of their own countries; whether their explorations are right or wrong should be tested by practice, and judged by the people of their own countries, and summed up by the parties concerned. We welcome and respect these parties carrying on exploration and blazing new trails; we should not judge others' right or wrong based on our own experiences and understanding; the more so should refrain from drawing conclusions for others. We should also see that many progressive and friendly Third World political parties are exploring ways of developing suitable to the actual conditions of their own countries, and drawing up the strategies and policies for their own development. Regarding them, we can discuss each other's situations, but by no means should we force our experiences and views on others. This is a principle the CPC has adhered to.

IV

The CPC is a patriotic as well as an international party, and has always advocated the combination of patriotism with internationalism. The CPC's target and tasks for international liaison work at present are to serve China's socialist modernization, and to work for safeguarding world peace, strenghthening the friendship of the peoples of all countries in the world, and promoting the progressive cause of mankind.

Going all out to carry out socialist modernization is China's central task during the new historical stage. All work of our party, including international liaison work should be subject to, and render service to its general objectives and tasks. This is required by the basis interests of the Chinese people, as well as the first and foremost respect in carrying out our internationalist obligation. This is because, doing a good job in the four modernizations through reform, building China into a modernized power with a high level of civilization and democracy will be the greatest contributions we make to world peace, international economic prosperity and the progressive cause of mankind, as well as the greatest help to the working class and people throughout the world.

At the same time, the CPC adheres to the principled position of opposing imperialism, hegemonism, colonialism and racism, and continues to support the people of all countries in striving for, and safeguarding their legal rights, and to promote the progressive cause of mankind. This is also the obligation we should fulfill. When we say support, we refer to moral and political support, which of course includes necessary humanitarian assistance. We oppose "exporting revolution." What kind of social system a country chooses is strictly a matter for the people of the country concerned to decide.

At present, the questions of peace and development have become the two great basic questions that have a bearing on the fate and future of all of mankind. The Chinese Communists are willing to make contributions to the solution of these two basic questions. We believe that the danger of a world war still exists; however, the forces safeguarding peace, and the factors restricting war are continuously growing; therefore, the prospects of a lasting world peace are hopeful. We have repeatedly expressed our position of safeguarding peace, and advocating disarmament, and put our words into action. At the same time, we have resolutely implemented the policy of opening up to the world, actively developing economic cooperative relations with all countries, and promoting Third World development and international economic prosperity. The CPC has developed its relations with all foreign communist parties and other progressive and friendly political parties, and exchanged views with them on such issues as peace, disarmament, and development, which is an important channel to relaxing the tense international situation, and striving for the total prohibition, and thorough elimination of nuclear weapons, and safeguarding lasting world peace, and promoting the world's economic development. In short, safeguarding world peace and promoting economic cooperation are also the important tasks and objectives in our party's international liaison work.

The CPC is part of the international communist movement, and we are exerting our efforts in our international work to promote the healthy development of the communist movement. We have always been revolutionary optimists. It is our view that the international situation is continuously developing and changing, and the development of the international communist movement will undergo the ups and downs of high and low tides. By looking at it as a whole, the international communist movement is advancing in exploration, and developing on a tortuous course. The chief indication of advance and development lies in the fact that more and more communist parties are attaching attention to independent thinking, and doing their best to link Marxistr tenets with the actual conditions of their own countries, in search of a way for their own development. At the same time, more and more communist parties advocate independence and taking the initiative in their own hands, oppose the existence of a leading center and party, and seek to establish a new-type party-to-party relation on the basis of independence and equality and voluntary ties. Therefore, we are firm in the belief that through the long-term common efforts of the parties of all countries, no matter how arduous and tortuous the road of progress is, a brand new situation will appear in the international communist movement.

GOVERNMENT TO APPLY FOR GATT REINSTATEMENT

[Text] Beijing, July 9 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government will soon apply for resumption of its membership in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), a spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade said here today. The Chinese Government is willing to enter into substantive negotiations on terms of resumption with GATT contracting parties on the basis of tariff concessions, he added.

China was one of the original contracting parties to GATT, and a member of the executive committee of Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization, the spokesman said, adding that "due to historical reasons, the official relationship between China and GATT has long been suspended" since the establishment of the People's Republic of China in 1949. In recent years, he added, China has been making various preparations for resuming its membership in GATT, and now preparations are basically ready.

In view of the great changes that have taken place in both China and GATT in the preceding 30 years and more, the spokesman noted, the Chinese side deems it most practical to take an approach of mutual non-retroactivity to the issue of each other's rights and obligations during this period. As a developing country, he said, China expects to be entitled to a treatment equivalent to that accorded to other developing countries. And at the same time, he added, China is prepared to undertake obligations consistent with the level of its economic and trade development in accordance with the relevant GATT regulations and rules.

China's request to resume its membership in GATT aims at opening itself more fully to the outside world and developing its economic relations and trade with GATT contracting parties on the basis of equality and mutual benefit, the spokesman stressed.

CHIEF U.S. DELEGATE OPTIMISTIC ON GENEVA TALKS

[Text] Bonn, July 8 (XINHUA) -- U.S. chief arms negotiator Ronald Lehman said here today that the United States is ready to seriously consider the recent Soviet proposal to reduce strategic nuclear weapons and that progress in the Geneva arms reduction negotiations was possible. Lehman, chief arms negotiator at the U.S.-Soviet Geneva arms talks, made the remarks in a meeting with Federal German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on issues of East-West disarmament. Sources said that Genscher briefed Lehman on his talks with chief Soviet arms negotiator Viktor Karpov yesterday.

The latest Soviet proposal, made last month, calls for a U.S.-Soviet agreement on non-withdrawal from the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty for at least 15 years and on limiting the research of the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative to laboratory testing. The proposal also calls for the limiting of American and Soviet strategic offensive arms to 1,600 units each and limiting warheads to no more than 8,000 each.

Lehman, who arrived here this morning for a regular consultation on disarmament, also met today with Federal German disarmament representative Friedrich Ruth and foreign policy spokesman of the parliamentary group of the Liberal Party Helmut Schafer.

XINHUA ON REAGAN'S REACTION TO SOVIET PROPOSAL

OW081124 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1326 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 5 Jul (XINHUA) -- Commentary by XINHUA reporter Mei Zhenmin: Reagan's reaction to Soviet new proposal

Recently, U.S. President Reagan made a noticeably positive reaction to the Soviet Union's new proposal on disarmament.

Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on 16 June put forward an "interim proposal" calling for "a limit on the United States' Strategic Defense Initiative [SDI] to the experimental level" and for both sides to "adhere to the SALT II nuclear arms control trety for another 15 years." He also advocates "limiting the strategic nuclear arsenals of both nations to their current levels." The "interim proposal" lists the aforesaid points side by side, and has not set the first two points as a prerequisite to the last point. U.S. President Reagan praised the proposal as Soviet Union's "beginning of a serious effort" that "could represent" "a turning point" in arms talks and "an opportunity for improving the relations between the two nations." He said that he accepts it "in principle."

Reagan's reaction was positive because the "interim proposal" indeed shows some relaxation and is closer to U.S. demand. It is also because of the following two reasons:

1. Since the beginning of this year, the Reagan administration has rejected one Soviet disarmament proposal after another. Recently, it announced that it will no longer be bound by the SALT II treaty after the end of this year. In addition, it has put forward a "limited retroactive strategy [you xian tui hui zhan lue 2589 7098 2236 0932 2069 3970]" and launched two raids on Libya which has close relations with the Soviet Union. All of these have again strained U.S.-Soviet relations which had just been relaxed a little. Reagan has his own strategic consideration and attempts to hold in check Soviet Union's "acceleration strategy [jia su zhan lue 0502 6643 2069 3970]," but his strategy has caused serious anxieties and worries among the U.S. public and its Western European allies. At the recent NATO foreign ministers conference, the allies were unanimously opposed to U.S. abolition of the SALT II treaty. Most U.S. Congressmen also openly oppose the abolition. The U.S. House of Representatives specifically adopted a resolution calling on the Reagan administration to continue to abide by the treaty. A public opinion poll on 25 June showed that more than 60 percent of the American people are opposed to some foreign policies of the Reagan administration. As the mid-term election in November draws near, President Reagan must consider the sentiments of the American people and the aspirations of the Western European allies.

2. In the United States, the voices objecting to the "star wars" program has become louder, creating more resistance to this program of the Reagan administration. On 13 May some 6,500 scientists, engineers, and technicians issued a pledge not to take part in the "star wars" program and criticized the program as a "dangerous assumption." On 19 June some 1,600 scientists working with upper-level agencies of the Reagan administration and industrial laboratories (many of them are taking part in the "star wars" program) jointly wrote Congress a letter regarding the program as "unfeasible in the foreseeable future" and as "seriously endangering existing arms control treaties and future talks."

Under the impact of such surging opposition, the U.S. Congress' enthusiasm for the "star wars" plan is also diminishing. Forty-six senators have written a joint letter to the Reagan administration, demanding a drastic reduction of the proposed spending on "star wars" research. When the Senate and the House deliberated and approved the federal government's budget for fiscal 1987, they cut a considerable amount from the expenditure proposed by the Reagan administration for research on the "star wars" plan. Recently, there has been a rumor that the United States will gradually end the "star wars" plan, although this cannot be regarded as true because President Reagan, who considers it his "trump card," will not give it up easily. It seems, however, that because many factors are involved, he may have to slow down the pace of implementing the plan. This may have influenced the Reagan administration's attitude on the question of arms control.

While responding positively to the above Soviet proposal, President Reagan has indicated many times that he hopes that the second summit between the leaders of the two countries can be held within this year. On 3 July, he told USA TODAY reporters: The Soviet Union's recent proposals on weapons control, regional conflicts, human rights, immigration, and other issues "made me optimistic. We will not only hold a summit meeting with the Soviet Union, but I feel the meeting may reach agreements on some identical objectives."

Whether the events mentioned above will lead to an earnest U.S.-Soviet disarmament agreement needs further observation.

LI PENG MEETS WITH IBM VICE CHAIRMAN RIZZO

OW051454 Beijing XINHUA in English 1340 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 5 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Li Peng met here today Paul Rizzo, vice-chairman of the board of directors of the International Business Machines (IBM) of the United States, and his party. They discussed cooperation in the use of computers, software development, the production of microcomputers and personnel training.

Li told Rizzo that China is willing to cooperate with IBM, which has a large force of competent technical personnel, in various fields. Rizzo expressed willingness to contribute to the development of China's production and application of computers and electronics industry as a whole.

Rizzo and his party arrived here Thursday at the invitation of the Chinese Ministry of Electronics Industry. They exchanged views with relevant Chinese departments on cooperation.

NPC OFFICIALS MEET, FETE U.S. CONGRESS GROUP

OW090754 Beijing XINHUA in English 0735 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 9 (XINHUA) -- Wang Renzhong, vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, met a delegation from the budget committee of the House of Representatives of the United States led by the committee chairman W.H. Gray at noon time today.

Wang, also chairman of the financial and economic committee of the NPC, noted that the Sino-American contacts had increased year by year. In recent years, he said, although bilateral trade had grown, their volume only accounted for a small proportion of the total U.S. import and export trade.

He expressed the hope that the U.S. Congress and administration would approach the Sino-U.S. trade and U.S. technology transfer to China from a long-term point of view and adopt a policy of more preferential treatment toward their development.

Gray said that he was very pleased to note bilateral cooperation in many fields. The U.S. had become an important trading partner of China. "We are looking forward to further developing our relations," he added.

Later, Han Zheyi, vice-chairman of the financial and economic committee of the NPC, gave a luncheon in honor of the U.S. visitors. This morning, Han Zheyi held talks with Gray and his party on further development of bilateral economic and technological cooperation and trade. The delegation arrived here yesterday at the invitation of the financial and economic committee of the NPC.

Yao Yilin Discusses Exports

[Text] Beijing, July 9 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin met a delegation from the budget committee of the House of Representatives of the United States led by committee chairman W.H. Gray here this afternoon. Yao said China, as a developing country, should strengthen its economic and technological cooperation and trade with the developed nations.

While importing U.S. equipment and technology, he noted, China is keen to export more products to the U.S. because only when China exports more can it import more. Referring to U.S. investment in China, Yao said that the U.S. has funds, technology and equipment while China is rich in manpower. These advantages, once combined, will benefit both countries, he added.

BO YIBO MEETS WITH U.S. JOURNALISM SCHOOL DEAN

[Text] Beijing, July 5 (XINHUA) -- Bo Yibo, vice-chairman of the Central Advisory Commission of the Chinese Communist Party, met with James Atwater, dean of the School of Journalism, University of Missouri, the United States, and Mrs. Atwater here today.

Since the establishment of the Snow Foundation by the School of Journalism in 1981, the school has trained about 25 Chinese Snow fellows who are now working in the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, CHINA DAILY, Radio Beijing, China Central T.V., China Reconstructs and BEIJING REVIEW.

Bo expressed his thanks to the school for its help. He said that is a good beginning and will promote the mutual understanding and friendship between the two countries. Atwater said his school is willing to train more journalists for China.

Present at the meeting were Zeng Jianhui, deputy director-general of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, and Zhou Lifang, executive associate dean of the China School of Journalism. The Atwaters arrived here June 29 as guests of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY.

PRC TRADE, ECONOMIC EXHIBIT IN MOSCOW PREVIEWED

OW081128 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Excerpts] A PRC trade and economic exhibition will be held in Moscow from 25 July to 10 August. Like last year, it will be located in the same pavilion in Sokolniki, at the third Moscow international communal and repair service equipment fair building. Our correspondent recently obtained details on the preparations being made in Beijing for the exhibition and examined some of the displays which will soon be sent to Moscow. Here is his reportage:

The PRC trade and economic exhibition is being organized by the China Council for Promotion of International Trade. (Xie Jianqun), leader of the PRC exhibition delegation who will soon leave for Moscow, told us about the preparations for the exhibition. Here is what he said: According to the agreement on the mutual organization of exhibitions in the PRC and the Soviet Union signed by the governments of both countries in 1986, a PRC trade and economic exhibition will be held in Moscow. The exhibition hall area is 2,500 square meters. Five ministries and 22 PRC foreign trade companies will take part in the exhibition.

At the exhibition, Soviet visitors will see new products of our country's machine-building and electronic industries, including machine tools with digital controls and precision machine tools, new equipment for modern metallurgical enterprises, satellite communication system ground stations, and new models of domestic electric appliances. Models of the scientific expeditionary ship Taiyanghung No 10, a container carrier, a tanker, and a floating oil drilling platform designed and built in China, and models of the artificial earth satellite Great Mission 3 rocket will be exhibited. Products of the oil and chemical industries and ferrous and nonferrous metal items will be shown at the exhibition. Among the exhibits will also be traditional light industry goods such as textiles, art works, grain, oil and food products, well-known Chinese fur items, rugs, and down products, as well as books and magazines. There will be over 4,000 exhibits in all.

Soviet visitors will have the chance to see our domestic color TV receivers of the Gold Star, Beijing, and [word indistinct] brands. [passage omitted]. Exhibition workers told us that Gold Star sets are exported to over 20 countries and regions including Finland, Singapore, Thailand, and Hong Kong. Beijing color television receivers are exported to Hungary. [passage omitted]

We heard Russian spoken via the two-system, PAL/SECAM, (Pion) color TV receiver, which receives TV programs via a Soviet communications satelite. An exhibition worker told us that a domestic set for receiving television programs via communication satellites will be taken to Moscow. At some stands at the exhibition TV sets will show video recordings with captions in Russian. [passage omitted].

An exhibition worker told us that machine tools with digital controls are high-precision tools and can compete with advanced machine tools from the FRG, Japan, and other countries. [passage omitted] Before the departure of the PRC trade and economic exhibition delegation for Moscow, we asked delegation leader (Xie Jianqun) to say a few words for Soviet radio listeners. Here he is at the microphone: [Begin (Xie Jianqun) recording in Russian] The PRC trade and economic exhibition will be the first independent Chinese exhibition in Moscow since 1953. We sincerely hope that this exhibition will make a positive contribution to the development of trade and economic cooperation between the PRC and the Soviet Union, and to the cause of improving mutual understanding and friendship between the people of our two countries. We warmly invite Soviet friends to visit our exhibition in Sokolniki Park. [end recording]

PRC-DPRK AMITY ANNIVERSARY NOTED IN BOTH CAPITALS

Reception Held in Beijing

[Text] Beijing, July 9 (XINHUA) -- The 25th anniversary of the signing of the Sino-Korean Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance was marked at a reception here today. Among the 250 people attending were Chen Pixian, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of China's National People's Congress, a Korean radio and television delegation led by Chu Chang-chun, a delegation from the Korean-China Friendship Association led by O Mun-han, Korean Embassy officials, experts and students here.

In his speech, Zhang Wenjin, president of the Chinese People's Association for friendship with Foreign Countries, expressed satisfaction over the two countries' mutual assistance and cooperation in the political, diplomatic, economic, cultural and educational fields in line with the friendship treaty. He called for further strengthening of friendly cooperation between the two countries and the unity of the two peoples.

Korean Ambassador to China Sin In-ha expressed the belief that Sino-Korean friendship would be further consolidated and developed. The Korean people and party are determined to develop their friendship with China from generation to generation, he said.

Artists gave performances at the reception. The occasion was also celebrated today at the China-Korea friendship people's commune in the city's suburbs.

Leaders Send Message to DPRK

OW100806 Beining XINHUA in English 0747 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Chinese party and state leaders today sent a message to their Korean counterparts to congratulate them on the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance between China and Korea. The message to Korean President Kim Il-song and premier of the Administration Council Kang Song-san was written by General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party Hu Yaobang, President Li Xiannian, Chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress Peng Zhen and Premier Zhao Ziyang.

The message says that the cooperation treaty is of great significance in the history of the friendly relations between the two countries. The treaty reflected the sincere aspiration and firm determination of the two peoples of China and Korea to further their solidarity and maintain peace in Asia and the rest of the world, the message says.

Under the guidance of the spirit of the treaty and in accordance with the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, the message says, China and Korea have further promoted bilateral cooperation in the political, economic, military, cultural, scientific and technological fields.

The message says that the Chinese people are glad to have seen that the Korean people, under the leadership of the Korean Workers' Party led by Comrade Kim Il-song, have been maintaining the policy of political self-determination, economic independence and self-reliance in national defense.

The Chinese party, Government and people will continue their efforts to maintain friendly China-Korea relations and support the Korean people's efforts for the relaxation of the tense situaton on the Korean peninsula and the realization of Korean independence and peaceful reunification, the message concludes.

DPRK Leaders Send Greetings

[Text] Beijing, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Chinese leaders today received letters from Korean President Kim Il-song and Kang Song-san, premier of the Administrative Council, which referred to the signing of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance between China an Korea 25 years ago as "a significant thing." The late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai and Korean President Kim Il-song signed the treaty July 11, 1961 in Beijing.

In Kim's letter to General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China Hu Yaobang, President Li Xiannian and chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress Peng Zhen, the general secretary of the Central Committee of the Workers' Party of Korea said that the treaty has developed Korean-Chinese friendly cooperation to a high level. The treaty has contributed greatly to the socialist constructions of the two countries and the preservation of world peace, Kim said.

Kim also extended his firm support to China's efforts for peaceful reunification of the motherland. Kim also expressed his satisfaction with China's efforts in the acceleration of the friendship between the two countries.

In Kang's letter to Premier Zhao Ziyang, he hoped that the friendship between the two countries will be further strengthened based on reliable close relations.

Friendly Relations Praised

[Text] Pyongyang, July 9 (XINHUA) -- Korean and Chinese officials today highly praised the development of friendly relations between the two countries over the past 25 years. The statements were made at a ceremony held here to mark the 25th anniversary of the Korea-China Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance.

Korean party and Government officials including chairman of the Central Committee for Foreign Cultural Relations Yi Mong-ho attended the ceremony. Vice-President of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries Huang Shiming, who led a Sino-Korean Friendship Association delegation to attend the treaty anniversary celebrations, and Chinese ambassador to Korea Zong Kewen were also present on the occasion.

Speaking at the ceremony, chairman of the Central Committee of the Korea-China Friendship Association Li Cha-pang said the signing of the treaty has sealed in legal form the Korea-China friendship which was formed in their severe and glorious common struggle. The Korean and Chinese peoples, he stressed, are old comrades-in-arms who have cemented their friendship with blood and sacrifice in the protracted common struggle. The Korean people will always advance shoulder to shoulder with the Chinese people, he added.

Huang said the Sino-Korean Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance is of great significance in strengthening and promoting the friendship and cooperation between the two peoples and safeguarding peace in Asia and the rest of the world. The traditional Sino-Korean friendship has stood the test of strong winds and storms and no force can destroy it. "We will do our utmost to further enhance and develop the friendship and unity between us and hand it down to the future generations," he said.

A Chinese film was shown at the ceremony. In the afternoon, a photo exhibition on China's achievements in construction was jointly held here by the two parties. Meanwhile, a three-day Chinese film festival, which started yesterday, is being held in the cities of Pyongyang and Sinuiju to mark the occasion.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONTINUES EUROPE-AFRICA TRIP

Meets With SFRY Industrialists

OW091812 Beijing XINHUA in English 1804 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Ljubljana, Yugoslavia, July 9 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today that the economic cooperation between the Slovenian Republic of Yugosvalia and China has a broad prospect but requires greater joint efforts to expand it.

In a meeting with a group of industrialists from various local companies which have already established or are prepared to open business relations with China, the Chinese premier, after being briefed on their production and overseas operation, said Slovenia's cooperation with China has had a good beginning.

Slovenian industrialists are active in seeking suitable forms of cooperation based on mutual needs, equality and mutual benefit. and this is a very important condition to enable the economic and trade relations to develop smoothly, Zhao stressed. He also told them that China had a large market, but this market can play its role only when it has a necessary payment capacity.

Premier Zhao noted that Slovenia, a republic is northwestern Yugoslavia, is better developed economically than other parts of the country, and the industrialists are familiar with the international market situations. Because of these advantages, Slovenia can expect a bigger share in the country's economic cooperation with China in future, he added.

The companies represented at today's meeting with Premier Zhao are all associated with the Ljubljana-based "smelt" project management organization which has business relations with many developing countries and has opened an office in Beijing.

ZHU QIZHEN IN MEXICO RAPS U.S. AID TO CONTRAS

OW091222 Beijing XINHUA in English 1155 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Mexico City, July 8 (XINHUA) -- China deplores outside intervention in Central America, Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Zhu Qizhen declared here today. Speaking at the Institute of Diplomatic Studies of the Mexican Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Zhu said China opposes the recent approval by the U.S. House of Representatives of 100 million U.S. dollars in aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, also known as "contras."

Zhu praised the Contadora Group and the Lima Group for their efforts to reduce tension in Central America and find a political solution to the regional conflict.

In his speech entitled "China's Foreign Policy of Independence and Peace," the Chinese vice-foreign minister expounded on Chinese policies on a wide range of international issues and its relations with Mexico.

On the debt burden of Latin American countries, Zhu said China expects "the developing countries concerned and the international financial organizations to adopt a positive attitude of cooperation in order to help debtor countries to recover and develop firstly its economy in order to promote the payment of the debt by means of growth and to stop continuing to sacrifice the interests of the peoples of those countries."

He said "a fundamental principle of China's foreign policy lies in opposing hegemonism and safeguarding world peace. Everything that contributes to world peace and stability can count on China' support, while all hegemonistic acts, coming from wherever they may come and in any form they may take, will be the object of our repudiation."

"Independence and self-determination is a basic principle of China's foreign policy," he said. "China will not subordinate itself ever, and under no circumstnces, to big powers or blocs of countries, nor will it align itself, establish strategic relations with any big power nor cede to its pressures."

"The affairs of each country must be handled by its own people through consultation rather than be decided by one or two powers. The disputes between nations must be solved peacefully through negotiations on the basis of equality, without resorting to force nor to the threat of the use of force," he emphasized.

Zhu said since 1972, when diplomatic relations between China and Mexico were established, their relations have developed satisfactorily in all fields. He said among the Latin American countries, China has the largest number of scientific and technological cooperation programs and cultural exchanges with Mexico. He said friendly cooperation between Mexico and China has great potentialities.

More than 80 Mexican diplomats attended the conference.

Leaves Mexico for Cuba

[Text] Mexico City, July 9 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Zhu Qizhen left here to proceed to Cuba today after a two-day working visit here during which he and his Mexican counter-parts reviewed bilateral relations and a number of international issues.

Zhu Qizhen held friendly, cordial and frank conversations with Mexican under-secretaries Alfonso de Rosenzweig-Diaz, Victor Flores and Ricardo Valero on separate occasions, Chinese Embassy officials here said. They particularly discussed the question of economic and scientific cooperation between China and Mexico.

Zhu Qizhen told his hosts that China is satisfied with the developing relations of cooperation between the two countries. In the international arena, he underlined, China and Mexico coordinate with and support each other mutually since their positions and views with respect to important international problems are identical or similar.

The Mexican diplomats, describing the talks of the past two days as fruitful, expressed the hope that the bilateral relations be furthered. They also expressed their gratitude to China for its support to the Contadora Group and for its just position towards Central American problems.

ECONOMIST SAYS RENMINBI DEVALUATION 'GOOD THING'

HK091000 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0416 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Report: "Well-Known Qian Jiaju on Renminbi Devaluation as a Good Thing"]

[Text] Beijing, 9 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Well-known economist Qian Jiaju believes that China's initiative to readjust the renminbi [RMB] exchange rate is a good thing. This is a decisive measure by the relevant authorities in light of changes in domestic and international market price conditions.

Qian Jiaju was giving this reporter his view on the 15.8 percent devaluation of the RMB announced on 5 July. He said that for a long time, the RMB was overvaluated against foreign currencies, the official rate being incompatible with the actual worth of the RMB. The country is now revising commodity prices in a reform. It of course also wants to gradually solve the problem of overvaluation, where the foreign exchange market is concerned.

Since early last year, the RMB all along showed a trend toward depreciation. Qian Jiaju said that the substantial devlaution of the RMB this time was of course unexpected. It gave expression to China's determination to improve foreign trade conditions and stimulate enterprise competitiveness and reform.

Qian Jiaju stressed that a reduced foreign exchange rate has the effect of restraining imports and promoting exports and helps in overcoming an unfavorable trade balance. He said that China had for consecutive years shown a foreign trade deficit, the most serious being last year. According to trade statistics by the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, the deficit reached U.S. $7.6 billion. Despite improvemenmt in the first part of this year things have not been optimistic.

Qian Jiaju also said: Why has there been a foreign exchange black market? This is also because of the irrational exchange rate of the RMB. This has caused a gap between the foreign exchange certificate and the RMB. In Guangdong Province, this price difference is at least 1 to 1.4. This economist, who has all along keenly advocated the abolition of the foreign exchange certificate, said: Of course, after a great depreciation in the value of the RMB, it remains to be seen whether there will be a drop in the black market price. But it will help in abolishing the foreign exchange certificate at the next stage.

Qian Jiaju considers that the rapid reaction of the Hong Kong and foreign press to the devaluation of the RMB is normal. What surprises him is that the mainland press has been so slow in reacting to such a major economic change. Some economic journals have even said nothing about it.

RENMIN RIBAO ON DIRECTOR'S RIGHT TO USE PERSONNEL

["Commentator's article: "Guarantee the Plant Director's Right To Use Personnel"]

[Text] In enterprises in which the system of factory directors assuming all-round responsibility is implemented, the directors have the power to appoint and remove intermediate-level administrative personnel. [paragraph continues]

This is a major reform in the leadership system in China's enterprises. A correct view on and the ensurance of such power of enterprise directors is an important question in implementing the system of factory directors assuming all-round responsibility.

In enterprises in which the system of factory directors assuming all-round responsibility is implemented, the power to use personnel is essential. An important characteristic of modern enterprise management is the combination of responsibility and power. An enterprise director is the legalis homo representative, who bears entire responsibility for the command, operation, and management in the production of the enterprise. Hence, he must have authority, including the power in using personnel. The director has the power to appoint and remove intermediate-level administrative cadres based on the needs of production, operation, and management. Only then will it be possible to establish a powerful and highly efficient system of command, operation, and management in production, in order to realize efficient leadership in production operation and management. Since the system of factory directors assuming all-round responsibility was implemented in some enterprises on a trial basis, it has been proved that when the director has the power to use personnel, it is possible for him to make his command work, the decision making prompt, and to achieve high efficiency in handling affairs, which has promoted production development and improved economic results.

In China, the implementation of the principle of the party's control over cadres is correct. However, the party's control over cadres does not mean that the appointment and removal of all cadres should be directly conducted by party organizations. A kernel question in the reform of the leading body in enterprises is precisely to change the condition of making no separation between party and government, with the party taking the place of the government in economic activities. In his report delivered to the CPC 12th National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: "There must be appropriate division of labor between party and government work, and between party work and administration and production in enterprises. The party is not the power organization to issue orders to the masses, nor is it an administrative or production organization." This is an important principle guiding the reform of the leading body in enterprises. Such a practice will be favorable to the production and operational activities of the enterprise, as well as strengthening the party work in enterprises. As leadership of the administrative system of the enterprises, a factory director certainly has the power to determine the appointment and removal of subordinates. Without this power to appoint or remove subordinate administrative cadres, it would be unfavorable to both the production and the operation and management of the enterprise. This has been repeatedly proved in practice.

The director must have necessary power to use personnel, but this does not mean that the director can act arbitrarily and abuse his power. The director should use his personnel strictly according to the party's cadre policy and the criteria for cadres. In making an important decision concerning personnel, he should consult with the party committee and attend to the masses' opinions; however, the director must have the decision-making power in the appointment and removal of personnel. Of course, establishing sytems to ensure the necessary supervision of the party organization, congress of representatives of workers and staff, and administrative organs at a higher level is also very important. Based on the investigations of some provinces and cities on the enterprises in which the system of factory directors assuming all-round responsibility has been implemented, the overwhelming majority of intermediate-level administrative cadres appointed by directors is very good, and competent in their work. [paragraph continues]

Some individuals are inappropriately appointed, which is not because of directors abusing their power, appointing people by favoritism, but out of neglecting their supervisory duties. Such conditions are sometimes entirely unavoidable with party committees directly appointing cadres. Therefore, the correct view on and ensurance of directors' power in using personnel are necessary, and we should believe that the overwhelming majority of enterprise directors will correctly use this power and work hard to run the enterprises well.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES CADRES TO ABIDE BY LAW

[Commentator's article: "Office Cadres Must All the More Abide by Law"]

[Text] Five culprits involved in another major case of giving and accepting bribes and harboring stolen goods were sentenced in Shanghai according to the law. Yu Tiemin, the chief culprit, was sentenced to life imprisonment for taking more than 30,000 yuan in bribes.

As the deputy director of the general office of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, Yu Tiemin should have been more aware of party discipline and state law than anybody else. However, blinded by the lust for gain, he went so far as to defy party discipline and state law, and repeatedly abused his position and powers and misused the names of leading officials to pursue private interests at public expense in violation of the law, thus producing very harmful political repercussions. He served the severe punishment by the law.

People are surely given much food for thought on why a party-member cadres, who had assumed a relatively important post in a leading organ and worked directly under senior leaders over a long period of time, degenerated into an economic criminal.

Throughout the party and government are functionaries who as assistants to major leaders shoulder important tasks and are trusted by the leaders and respected by comrades of offices at lower levels, although these functionaries are not principal leading cadres. It is precisely because of this that people in such positions should pay special attention to their conduct; otherwise they will forget where they are and overstep their authority in violation of discipline. A few individuals will even break the law and degenerate into criminals. The cases of Yu Tiemin and others show that there are criminals who, in order to realize an evil objective, try to use those working directly under major leaders. They do succeed sometimes. This is a problem that merits our vigilance.

Needless to say, Yu Tiemin and other corrupt officials are, after all, a small minority in the party and the government. The overwhelming majority of office cadres have ideals, abide by law, work hard and conscientiously, and are willing to remain unsung heroes. They have performed meritorious services for the undertakings of the party and the people, and contributed to smooth progress of senior leaders' work and leading organs' effective operations. However, it should also be pointed out that bureaucracy, abuse of power to acquire private gains, unprincipled behavior, liberalization, and other unhealthy trends are popular among office cadres, and they should be prevented or eliminated. [paragraph continues]

These unhealthy practices may not be crimes, but the gap between them and crime is no impassable chasm. One ant hole may cause the collapse of a thousand-li dyke." Only by continuously strengthening our party spirit and taking the initiative to discover and block the "ant hole" can we be in an invincible position.

Another lesson to be drawn from the Yu Tiemin case is that major leaders should set strict demands on functionaries, especially those who work for them. Generally speaking, comrades selected to work directly under major leaders are reliable and outstanding and should be fully trusted and allowed freedom to do their jobs. However, as they are not living in a purified environment, they may be influenced by all kinds of unhealthy trends and change their thinking sometimes. Therefore, they should be carefully supervised. A vital part, if it loses vigilance, may become the weakest link. This is a lesson drawn from many bitter experiences in modern or ancient times, in China or elsewhere, and it should serve as a warning to us.

GUANGZHOU RAILWAY BUREAU REFORMS REPORTED

[Newsletter by reporters Lin Xi and Liu Guosheng: "Upholding Healthy Practices for the Sake of Reform -- An Account of Reforms Conducted by the Guangzhou Railway Bureau"]

[Excerpts] Censure, and even slander and frame-up, always come along with reform. However, in the Guangzhou Railway Bureau, we have seen an encouraging case: Braving censure, the cadres and staff members of this bureau have justly and forcefully carried out reform. They have not only managed to keep the momentum of reform but also achieved great success every year.

Old Conventions Cannot Be Taken as Infallible Laws

In 1982, the Guangzhou Railway Bureau set to rectifying its subordinate enterprises in accordance with the plan drawn up by the CPC Central Committee and the Ministry of Railways. In the course of rectification, the bureau has introduced a series of package reforms relating to the leadership structure, the management orientation, the distribution system, the cadre system, the labor organization, and the capital construction structure.

One of the long-standing major problems with regard to railway transport is the contradiction between the transport capacity and the freight volume. [passage omitted]

In April 1981, during his inspection of the railway bureau, Comrade Wan Li called for a change in this situation, demanding that the annual freight volume of the Hengyang-Guangzhou section of the Beijing-Guangzhou railway be raised by two million tons in 3 years. For a long time the railway transport setup had been placing undue emphasis on production output but ignored management efficiency. The Guangzhou bureau decided to make a breakthrough in the pure production mode and adopt the mode of integration of production and service management, since only the latter mode can really raise transport capacity. However, all the rules and regulations governing the operation of the railway transport setup were established by the higher authorities, and "shift from one mode to another" can hardly be effected without authorization by a "red headered document." [paragraph continues]

Yang Qihua, a tall northeastern native who has worked on the railway transport front since he was young, believed that it was a good idea to break the old conventions that fetter the development of railway transportation, tap the potential of the railway transport setup, and seek self-development. So he worked together with all the cadres of the bureau to find a new path. [passage omitted]

The reforms initiated by the Guangzhou bureau were applauded like wonderful opera acts. But there were also a lot of disputes: Is it right to set the rotation volume of freight transportation as a goal? Who will be held responsible if there is an accident under the shift duty system? Is it suitable for railway transport units to implement the system of taking full responsibility for profits and losses? And, is the operation of shopping arcades and hotels a proper duty for a railway station?

The leading cadres of the Guangzhou bureau held that the only criterion to judge whether a measure is correct is that it must be able to help to develop productive forces and raise the social economic results. One should boldly adopt any measure which meets this criterion.

Rumors and Slander Are Nothing To Be Afraid Of

Censures and slander on the reform are always directed first at the leading cadres.

In order to break the "life tenure system" for cadres, the Guangzhou bureau decided that from late 1982 onward, all over-age cadres at bureau level should withdraw to the second and third lines. Now, except for some individuals remaining in office with the special permission of the higher authorities, all other cadres at all levels have to retire as soon as they reach retirement age. Such a practice has already become the normal system.

However, acute contradictions have arisen from such highly sensitive issues as those relating to the system of administration over cadres and the system of staff appointments. The Guangzhou bureau has forsaken the old practice where the cadre department exercises unified administration over cadres, and has separated the administration over administrative and technical cadres from that over cadres in charge of party affairs and the work dealing with the masses, with a view to more efficiently selecting and appointing cadres with both ability and political integrity. Now the railway bureau and all its sub-bureaus have abolished their cadre departments (sections) but set up personnel offices (sections) to take care of administrative and technical cadres, while the cadres in charge of party affairs and dealing with the masses are administered by the organizational department of the party committee. At the same time, the power of administration over cadres has been delegated to lower levels. [passage omitted]

So far the Guangzhou Railway Bureau has selected and appointed more than 700 young and middle-aged cadres to take up leading posts at all levels in accordance with the party's line government organizational work and the criteria for staff appointment for the new period. As a result, both the structure and quality of the bureau's cadres' contingent have been substantially improved. However, some people have spread rumors and slander, saying that "Bureau Chief yang is forming a clique." Yang Qihua openly declared: "What do you mean by forming a clique? I will continue to draw into my 'clique' whoever can make contributions to the 'four modernizations'!"

Never Flinch From Slanders

While the Guangzhou bureau was actively promoting reform, a leading cadre at the bureau level who had withdrawn to the second line wrote a letter to the CPC Central Committee purely to attack Yang Qihua. To be sure, it is every CPC member's legitimate right to report the situation to his superior or even directly to the CPC Central Committee. But joint investigations conducted by several superior departments show that the so-called "problems in seven aspects" reported by that cadre were sheer fabrication! [passage omitted]

Reform is by no means an easy job, and carrying on reform in the face of censure, slanders, and frame-ups is still more difficult. Now the central department in charge and the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee have clarified the truth of the matter: Yang Qihua is innocent and the spirit he has shown in boldly enforcing the reform is admirable. [passage omitted]

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Reform Can Hardly Be Promoted When Right Is Confounded With Wrong"]

[Text] Some people say: "Carrying out a reform is even harder than climbing to heaven." They may have somewhat exaggerated the difficulty, but undoubtedly there is reason in what they say. However, despite the difficulties, there are still a lot of people trying to climb to heaven. They are people who are steadfastly, bravely, and vigorously enforcing reform. Only through steadfast and dauntless efforts can one constantly make progress in reform and achieve success. This is the inspiration we have drawn from the Guangzhou Railway Bureau's experience in reform.

Like other units, the Guangzhou Railway Bureau has carried out its reform in eliminating "leftist" influences. No reform in the world is free of obstacles. The important point is one's attitude toward the difficulties and obstacles in reform. If one stops at the sight of a "red light," gets nervous when a "yellow card" is shown, and feels frustrated when hearing "complaints," one can hardly succeed in reform. The reason the comrades of the Guangzhou Railway Bureau are admirable is because they have shown their courage and insight in upholding correct principles and persisting in reform, and have acted as strong men in reform. Why do they have their courage and insight? It is because, on the one hand they have a thorough understanding of the principles and policies of the reform laid down by the central authorities, as well as the actual situation in their own enterprises. On the other hand, they have been brave enough to ignore personal gain or loss, and farsighted enough to see the developing trend of things. Therefore they can have a firm faith in reform under all circumstances.

"Success invites censure and those with moral integrity are liable to slanders." This is one of the outstanding problems with which some units undergoing reform are currently faced. While onlookers are making wanton and indiscreet remarks and nitpicking, our men of action are under attack. In consequence, many reformers have "fallen from the horse's back." The Guangzhou Railway Bureau's experience shows us that a reform leader needs a sober mind and indomitable willpower so that he can distinguish right from wrong in the face of censures, be brave and skillful in surmounting obstacles, and gain the initiative.

What is more, they have fortunately achieved success in reform because departments in charge at the higher level have given no credence to slanders, but have taken the whole situation of the reform into consideration and made a clear distinction between right and wrong in light of in-depth and meticulous investigations, upheld justice, and supported the reform.

At present, many localities and units are carrying on the reform through compromise. This is because the leading people there do not want to concern themselves with censures and slanders against reform in their own units or in their subordinate units; or they just blame both sides of the disputes without discrimination; or they just do not want to declare where they stand although the truth of the matter has been clarified. Such an irresponsible attitude will do nothing but further encourage evil tendencies. In the course of the present reform, the prime duty of our leading departments is to distinguish clearly between right and wrong. And the only ultimate criterion to distinguish between right and wrong is to see whether a matter can help to expedite the development of social productive forces.

We must be brave in exposing and opposing all rumors and slanders against reform. And slanderers are subject to criticism and education in minor cases and to penalty by law in serious cases. Only by firmly supporting reform, skillfully distinguishing between the principal and secondary aspects of reform, and enthusiastically preserving the reformers' initiative, can we create a favorable environment for reform, and thus enable a large number of progressives emerging in the reform to go all out with their righteous cause.

PAPER VIEWS IMPLEMENTATION OF PARTY POLICIES

[Commentator's article: "What Is Meant by True Implementation of the Party's Policies?"]

[Text] On 4 April, this paper carried a commentator's article entitled "It Is Necessary To Adhere to the System in Which the Director Assumes Full Responsibility." Soon after this, one of our readers wrote to criticize the article for going against what the party Central Committee requires of us. The letter pointed out: The "circular" issued by the party Central Committee with regard to the promotion of cadres stipulates that "promotion of cadres must be collectively discussed and decided on by all members of the party committee and should not be decided by some individuals. However, your commentator's article advocates that in enterprises where the system in which the director assumes full responsibility is introduced on a trial basis, the director has the right to appoint or dismiss middle-level cadres. The motives of the comrade who wrote the letter are not bad. However, he failed to understand the central document in an all-round way and neglected another stipulation in the "circular" that enterprises which are selected to stage an experiment in reforming their leading system can use the circular for reference. Using it for reference does not mean acting strictly according to it. In regard to some people who often mechanically call for acting in accordance with regulations, we think it is necessary to put forward a question: What exactly is meant by true implementation of the party's policies and by maintaining political and ideological unity with the party Central Committee?

Some comrades believe that to maintain political and ideological unity with the party Central Committee, they must copy "classified documents" word for word, proceed in everything from documents not from actual conditions, and do everything "in view of the above." Whatever they do, these people usually ask whether what do they is specified in "classified documents." They accept "classified documents" blindly, mechanically and dogmatically, and then in a manner of pinching the foot rather than changing the shoe. They adapt their outdated conventional ideas to actual conditions. As a result, they usually take a one-sided approach to the party's policies and cannot unswervingly implement them. Whenever they do or say something, they must first think about "where the instructions come from" and see where the "wind" comes from. They dare not say anything beyond what the higher authorities have said and they dare not do anything beyond what are specified in documents. Consequently, they can do nothing useful. Such "unity" with the party Central Committee is nothing but formal unity. This is just a shoddy sketch which is similar in appearance not in essence.

To really maintain political and ideological unity with the party Central Committee, on the one hand, we must grasp the spirit of "classified documents" and understand well the essence of the central principles and policies; on the other, we must conduct a careful investigation and study of actual conditions. Only by so doing will we be able to work in a creative way. Ours is a socialist country which has a vast territory and a very large population. Therefore, highly concerted action provides a guarantee for victory. However, when we stress concerted action, we should in no way ignore creativeness. Under the guidance of the central principles and policies, at present we should particularly encourage people to have the spirit of daring to think, assume responsibility, conduct explorations, and blaze new trails.

Reform is a mass undertaking of making explorations and blazing new trails. In the execution of the reform, we are often confronted with unexpected new problems. Our country is vast in territory and the situation varies from area to area and from department to department. It is therefore impossible for the central authorities to specify everything in too much detail. To speed up reform, we should depend on the enthusiasm, initiative, and creativeness of vast numbers of cadres and people. The central policies sum up the actual conditions in various parts of our country. They are highly principled and are of universal guiding significance. To iron out specific problems appearing in different localities and departments in accordance with these policies, we must know how to combine general calls for action with specific guidance. All specific policies are limited by time. They must be tested in practice and develop with the development of objective reality. When we make bold explorations according to actual conditions, instead of violating the central policies, we will contribute to enrich them.

Implementing the central policies creatively is fundamentally different in nature from the practice of "adopting countermeasures against the central policies." In saying implementing the central policies in a creative way, we mean that we must realistically apply the central instructions to different localities, departments, and units by proceeding in everything from actual conditions there, so as to devise solutions to problems and promote the progress of reform and economic construction. However, the practice of "adopting countermeasures against the central policies" is entirely different. It proceeds from departmental selfishness and the interests of individuals and small groups, violates the party's policies, and hinders or even damages the development of the productive forces. The political and theoretical levels of cadres have a direct bearing on the implementation of the party's policies.

Therefore, cadres should enhance their understanding of theories, use the basic Marxist stand, viewpoint, and method to understand the theoretical basis on which the party's general principles and policies are formulated, and understand the concretive objectives of all specific policies, of their scope of application, and their mutual connections. Only by so doing will they be able to have a complete and correct understanding of the central policies and work in a creative way.

ECONOMIC LAW SOCIETY TRAINS MORE PEOPLE

OW071932 Beijing XINHUA in English 1734 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 9 (XINHUA) -- The training center of the Chinese Economic Law Society has trained in the past two years about 450 people for provincial and municipal governments, banks, enterprises and universities.

Addressing the closing ceremony of the third training class, Sun Yaming, vice-president of the society, said that the purpose of the class has been to train people well versed in economic laws to meet the needs of the ongoing economic reform in China.

He said students from the previous two classes reported what they had studied here was very useful to their work.

Teacher Sun Guohua, an associate law professor from the Chinese People's University, pointed out that Deng Xiaoping's remark "economic construction and law must go hand in hand" is essential.

Spread of economic law, he noted, "is not intended to bind the people hand and foot, but to teach them to use the weapon to protect their own interests."

Last Thursday, the professor gave a lecture to members of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, and discussed some issues involved in economic legislation with them.

He pointed out that different laws must be correlated with one another so that the existing problems can be solved more reasonably.

The four-month training class run by the Chinese Economic law society offered courses on civil and economic laws.

At present, training classes on economic law have also been sponsored by many departments.

CRIME, DIVORCE UP AMONG PRIVATE ENTREPRENEURS

HK100453 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 10 Jul 86 p 3

[Text] Crimes by private entrepreneurs have increased over the past two years, and divorce cases among them have also gone up, the Chinese press reported.

Last year, 395 people who owned or ran small businesses in Shanghai were sentenced to prison or reeducation camps for various offences, SOCIETY NEWS (WEN HUI BAO) reported.

The figure was double the number of offenders among private entrepreneurs in the city in 1984, the paper said.

Their convictions were mainly for stealing state or private property, evading taxes, threatening customers and buying and selling stolen goods, the paper said.

A police station in Shanghai confiscated the fake products of nearly 100 private businesses last year. One entrepreneur at Fuminlu Market evaded 10,000 yuan in taxes and another stole scrap from State-owned factories to earn an illegal profit of more than 20,000 yuan by reselling them to profiteers, the paper said.

The increasing divorce rate among the self-employed was revealed by an investigation in a Wuhan City district where many people run their own businesses.

In 1983, the district saw 20 divorces among private entrepreneurs. There were 64 in 1984 and 144 in 1985 -- the rate more than doubling each year, the WEN HUI BAO newspaper said.

The paper said the increase occurred because after families got money, husbands and wives argued over it. "With their social contacts widened because of their businesses, some became involved with 'third parties' and such involvements have led to divorces," the paper said.

China has permitted private business since the late 1970s.

EDUCATION OFFICIAL INTERVIEWED ON STUDY ABROAD

OW090801 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1118 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 7 Jul (XINHUA) -- Recently the news media has received quite a number of readers' letters asking questions about studying abroad. To find answers to these questions, reporters from XINHUA and ZHONGGUO JIAOYU BAO [CHINA EDUCATION NEWS] called on and had an interview with a responsible person of the State Education Commission.

Question: Some people say that our country will send fewer people to study abroad. Is that true?

Answer: No, it is just the contrary. From now on, our country is expected to send more rather than less people to study abroad. In the first place, the total number of personnel sent to study abroad at state expense during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period will remain by and large at the present level, while more personnel will be dispatched by various localities, departments, and units, using their own funds to financially support these personnel in their study abroad; there will also be more personnel sent to foreign countries under student-exchange programs compared with present. Second, with the expanded exchange with foreign countries, more people will be selected in a planned way and sent to study and receive scholarships, education loans, and other kinds of aid as their financial support. They include those personnel selected and sent abroad by the state and various localities and units as well as individuals studying in foreign countries with the concurrence of their respective units.

Question: The State Education Commission has stressed the need to implement the principle of dispatching personnel to study abroad according to needs. What are the specific measures in this regard?

Answer: We are prepared to adopt five specific measures: First, we will strengthen macro-guidance. That is, we will send more people abroad to study the applied disciplines urgently needed in our country's four-modernizations program as well as those disciplines that are new or are still lacking in our country. On the other hand, fewer people will be sent to study in those fields that are already rather developed in our country. In addition, emphasis will be put on sending out visiting scholars and personnel going abroad for further study. Second, we will gradually cut down on the number of college graduates going abroad to study for master's degrees, while increasing the number of those going abroad to study for doctoral degrees after obtaining master's degrees at home. In the meantime, efforts will be made to open up avenues for our higher educational institutions and scientific research units to cooperate with their counterparts in foreign countries to jointly train Chinese doctors. Third, the present regulations governing the selection of students for postgraduate study abroad will be changed. Beginning this year, most of the quotas for government-sponsored students engaged in postgraduate studies abroad will be allocated to those units that are in need of more trained personnel. These units will select personnel to be sent out for postgraduate studies according to state construction needs and their own requirements. Fourth, when a unit sends personnel to study abroad, it should take into consideration the use of their services when they return home and should provide conditions for using their services in a timely manner. Fifth, more efforts will be made to guide and control the dispatch of students studying abroad not at state expense (including those so-called "self-financed but government-dispatched students" in the past) so that their selection and dispatch will conform with state requirements, meet certain goals, and are carried out in a planned way. [passage omitted]

Question: What are the state's new rules for people studying abroad at their own expense?

Answer: Allowing people to study abroad at their own expense is another way to train competent personnel. The state will continue to support this. Those studying abroad at their own expense and government-sponsored students studying abroad will politically be given equal treatment and will receive the same solicitude and care.

Those who have a reliable guarantee of financial support by their relatives either at home or abroad and who have obtained admission to a school may apply to their respective units for permission to go abroad. In the case of graduating students of higher educational institutions and incumbent personnel, however, their applications must first be examined and approved by their respective institutions or units and then submitted to the competent authorities for final approval. In general, graduate-school students cannot apply for permission to go abroad to study at their own expense. [passage omitted]

Question: Recently it has been said that people who want to study abroad are required to pay a 20,000-yuan education and training fee to the state as a deposit before they are allowed to go abroad. Has the State Education Commission set any such stipulation?

Answer: There is no such stipulation. [passage omitted]

Question: What is the State Education Commission's attitude on "postdoctoral" studies carried out by those sent to study abroad?

Answer: First, we have to make clear two points: One, "postdoctoral" studies are aimed at achieving a higher academic degree. Two, we have never opposed any "postdoctoral" studies. The ultimate purpose of "postdoctoral" studies is to help develop domestic science and technology. From this viewpoint, we require our postgraduate students who have obtained doctoral degrees abroad to come back first and work for some time at "postdoctoral" personnel service stations or educational or scientific research units at home and then go abroad again for further studies according to need. This will enable them to better coordinate their studies abroad with the needs at home. [passage omitted]

Question: What are the new regulations governing visits to students studying abroad by their spouses?

Answer: Personnel studying abroad and visiting scholars sent by the government stay only for a relatively short period in a foreign country, usually 1 or 2 years. In view of the current actual situation in our country and domestic regulations on travel to visit relatives abroad, their spouses are generally not permitted to go abroad to visit them.

As for government-sponsored postgraduate students who will study for a relatively long period abroad (over 3 years, for example), we encourage them to come back for a vacation. The state has established a system allowing such students to return home for a vacation at government expense after staying 1 year and a half or 2 years abroad. If their spouses wish to go abroad to see them on a short visit and if there are guaranteed sources of funds to cover expenses abroad, the spouses may file an application for permission to travel abroad. The application may be approved provided that the spouses' work units agree to grant them leave and arrangements have been made so that work will not be affected by their absence. They will continue to receive wages while they are away if their absence is within the approved period of level for visiting relatives abroad.

Another point we must bring up is that in the past some people have left their work posts and gone abroad for the so-called purpose of accompanying their spouses to study. This practice is unacceptable.

CIRCULAR ON HIRING COLLEGE GRADUATES FOR JOBS

OW081306 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1032 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 7 Jul (XINHUA) -- The State Education Commission, the Ministry of Public Security and the Ministry of Commerce recently issued a joint circular, calling on the various localities and departments concerned to resolutely refrain from hiring graduates or postgraduate students of institutions of higher learning who already have been given job assignments by the state.

The circular said: In recent years, some localities and basic-level personnel departments have wilfully hired graduates and post graduate students of institutions of higher learning who already have been given job assignments according to the state plan. Some of these localities and departments say: No household registration is required, and no permit for the purchases of food grain is needed. Personnel references, job assignment certificates, or party or CYL affiliations are also not required. Some of them even offer better pay and living conditions to attract college graduates who already have been assigned by the state to work in other units.

Still more serious is the fact that these activities to illegally hire college graduates are being carried out in the name of local governments or enterprises. These activities seriously interfere with the practice of assigning jobs to college graduates according to the state plan; they must be resolutely stopped.

The circular pointed out: Those departments in charge of making job assignments to college graduates in various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central authorities must issue "work assignment certificates for graduates from institutions of higher learning" when then assign a college graduate a job according to the unified state plan. Those units that do the hiring must ensure that the college graduates they accept have such certificates in their possession. The public security organs and grain departments in the various localities will help the college graduates in applying for permits for the purchase of food grain on the basis of the job assignment certificate issued by the department in charge in the locality where the college is located, the certificate issued by the unit receiving the college graduate, and the permit for changing one's residence from one place to another. All certificates will be considered as void in accepting a college graduate or applying for a permit for the purchase of food grain on a household basis if the name of the designated unit on the job assignment certificate differs from that of the unit that has actually accepted the college graduate, or if the certificates are issued by units other than those authorized to do so.

ROLE OF COASTAL OPEN CITIES, AREAS STRESSED

HK090927 Beijing JINGJIXUE ZHOUBAO in Chinese 22 Jun 86 p 8

[Article by Lin Wenyi: "A Brief Talk on the Market and Commerce in the Coastal Open Cities and Areas"]

[Text] Following the setting up of the 4 special economic zones in our country, 14 port cities and some coastal areas have also been opened to the outside world. Why should these cities and areas be opened up? What are the differences between them and other cities and areas? What changes will take place in the market and commerce in these cities and areas? What should we do to expand the market and commerce in these cities and areas? These questions must be answered through practice. In running the special economic zones, we have achieved considerable experience through practice and made repeated explorations from the theory angle. The 14 port cities and some coastal areas were recently opened to the outside world, therefore, we have to accumulate more experience through serious explorations from these cities and areas.

1. Opening Port Cities and Coastal Areas to the Outside World Is a Measure To Further Implement the Opening Up Policy.

Opening port cities and coastal areas to the outside world is not an expedient measure but a measure to further implement the opening up policy. This means that to carry out the policy of opening to the outside world, the four special economic zones are not sufficient. To meet the needs of economic construction and development, ensure the impeded progress of reform of the economic structure, and particularly to increase exports, use foreign capital, and import advanced foreign technology and management knowledge that suit our country's actual conditions, it is necessary to open up coastal cities and areas which can establish extensive economic ties with other countries.

The four special economic zones are close to Hong Kong and Macao and adjacent to Southeast Asian countries, but they are located in part of Guangdong and Fujian provinces. Geographically, they cannot meet the needs of opening our country to the outside world after all. These open cities and areas, which range from Guangxi in the south to Liaoning in the north and extend all over the coastal provinces of our country, have close and extensive economic ties with the developing eastern and western parts of our country. They are well developed economic centres and have great capacity for export. They have wide external relations by virtue of their favorable harbor facilities. With these cities open, our country will be able to open up widely to the outside world.

"Opening up to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy" is a long-term, basic national policy and major strategic principle formulated since the 3d plenum of the 11th CPC Central Committee for building socialism and the four modernizations. Viewed from Chinese history, we may see that opening up to the outside world is an important sign of power and prosperity for a dynasty of our country. For example, the Tang Dynasty was a very powerful feudal dynasty, just because it opened up widely to the outside world, and the Qing Dynasty was weak and corrupted only because it closed the country to international intercourse. In the present age, all countries in the world must have wider external relations because of close economic ties among them and the vigorous development of high technology and socialized production. Whether to open up to the outside world or not is a matter of great importance which is related to the rise or decline of our country and has a bearing on the effort to gradually enhance the level of our country's productive forces to the world advanced level. We have no alternative but to open up to the outside world. This is our basic national policy and we should not adopt a casual attitude toward it but should carry it out conscientiously and creatively. To achieve it, we must open up more cities and areas along our country's coast to the outside world.

2. The Difference and Links Between the Coastal Open Cities and Areas, and the Special Ecnonomic Zones in the Fields of Market and Commerce

The special economic zones are a common sight in international economic intercourse. In order to promote foreign trade and absorb foreign capital and modern technology, some countries or regions specially designate a part of their land with good transport services to create a favorable investment climate and provide preferential conditions for production, management and allocation of profits such as reduction of and exemption from customs duties and special measures to manage harbours and urban administrations. Such special economic zones differ in name such as free trade zones, free ports, export processing industrial zones, export processing industrial villages, or border free zones. However, in our country they are often referred to as the special economic zones.

In terms of opening up to the outside world, there is no difference between the open cities and areas, and the special economic zones. This means that on the premise of adopting some special policies and administrative measures, they all manage to establish wide external economic connections, promote foreign trade, and absorb foreign capital and modern technology. However, differences only arise in the flexibility of these special policies and administrative measures. The special economic zones afford every convenience to foreign investment captial.

While safeguarding the independence and sovereignty of a socialist country and sticking to the socialist legal system, they absorb and use foreign investment capital by means of their natural resources, labor force and preferential economic policies. Their economy is basically of the nature of state capitalism because they carry our socialist economic construction by using mainly foreign captial under state supervision and readjustment. However, in the open cities and areas, the socialist economy still predominates, but state capitalism takes up a greater proportion there than in the cities and areas which do not open up to the outside world. The open cities and areas do not relay on foreign investment capital in economic construction as much as the special economic zones do, but wide relations are established with the outside world, not only in the fields of industry and commerce in urban areas, but also in the agricultural production field in rural areas.

We have now opened 14 port cities such a Guangzhou and Shanghai, as well as Hainan Island, the Zhujiang Delta, the Changjiang Delta and a triangular area in the southern part of Fujian Province. Later, we may open up the Liaodong and Jiaodong Peninsulas to the outside world too. In terms of opening to the outside world, there is no differenoe between the open cities and areas, and the special economic zones. There is only a difference in the flexibility of policies. Since it is so, the open cities and areas can use the experience of the special economic zones for reference. We cannot say that there is nothing in their experience which is useful for the open cities and areas only because the special economic zones give first place to state capitalism while the open cities and areas give priority to the socialist economy. As a matter of fact, in strengthening foreign economic relations, the open cities and areas will certainly increase the factor of state capitalism in their economy, and they should use the experience of the special economic zones for reference in absorbing foreign capital and technology.

The special economic zones take up a large proportion of state capitalism in their economic structure, industry, and import and export trade. Therefore state capitalism manifests itself prominently in the market of the means of production and in commerce. This is the main point which distinguishes between special economic zones and open cities and areas. However, there is no big difference between them in their market and commerce in consumer goods. Therefore, the open cities and areas should not mechanically copy the methods adopted by the special economic zones in the market and commerce of the means of production. As a matter of fact, the open cities and areas depend mainly on planned circulation and supply by state commerce (the material supply system) in the means of production. Of course, they can still use the experience of the special economic zones for reference in the means of production relating to the import of foreign capital and technology. With regard to the market and commerce of consumer goods, they certainly can learn a lot from the special economic zones, but should not copy mechanically and apply indiscriminately, because the special economic zones carry out some special policies and managerial methods which are not applicable in the open cities and areas and the former open their door more widely than the latter. In terms of market, both take state commerce as the main force, encourage different economic sectors and forces to coexist and compete with each other, arrange commodity circulation in a coordinated way, lay stress on exports, give full play to market mechanism, and apply the system of floating prices for the daily necessities and the system of free prices for many kinds of consumer goods. However, the market in the special economic zones is much more competitive and is mainly export-oriented and the system of free prices is applied to the greater part of consumer goods.

Therefore, the experience of how to strengthen control of macroeconomic activities under such circumstances can be used for reference in the open cities and areas. With regard to commerce, both the special economic zones and the open cities and areas encourage competition, lay emphasis on exports, and give full play to market mechanism. Enterprises in the special economic zones are much more independent in commercial business, assume sole responsibility for their profits or losses more extensively and their methods of business are more flexible. Moreover, in the special economic zones. There are more associations and group companies which are established on the lateral economic basis; there are no bounds between domestic and foreign trade; many enterprises account their costs on the basis of foreign exchange; enterprise business is much more affected by world market prices; and good foreign experience in enterprise management is widely cited. All this is also useful as references for the open cities and areas in their commercial activities.

3. How Do the Open Cities and Areas Act on Other Areas of Our Country in the Field of Market and Commerce?

China has opened the special economic zones as well as the 14 port cities and some coastal areas to the outside world. The opening up policy is an established national policy of our country. Since it is so, we will certainly open up our whole country to the outside world. This should not be done overnight but should be done step by step. The special economic zones, the 14 open cities and some coastal open areas have constituted an open economic belt along the coast of our country. This open economic belt will certainly play an experimental, guiding and exemplary role for the central and western parts of our country, which will open to the outside world later. This means that the open economic belt can furnish useful experience to the central and western parts of our country in absorbing foreign capital, technology and advanced management method as well as in developing their markets and commerce.

The market in the open cities and areas works as a window, bridge and gangplank toward the outside world. It absorbs foreign capital, modern technology and advanced management methods and uses them to process raw materials from the interior into primary products for export, or it helps the interior to promote their products for export, or it helps the interior to promote their products for export. Practically it works as a link between the domestic and international markets and as a bridge between internal and external economic activities. Moreover, the market in the open cities in particular, plays a pivotal role between the domestic market of our country and world markets in different scopes and degrees. The level of the commodity economy in the coastal open areas, and in particular in the open cities such as Shanghai and Quangzhou, is higher than that of the interior as well as the central and western parts of our country. These open areas and cities play an important role in organizing and coordinating the unified socialist market of our country and in promoting foreign trade and establishing foreign relations so that China will be able to squeeze into world markets and build up a solid base in world economic activities. In order to build socialist modernization, we should not overemphasize one at the expense of the other between home and external resources, between domestic and world markets, and between our own and foreign experiences. To achieve it, we should give full play to the pivotal role of the open cities and areas. A high degree of commodity economy is a prerequisite for socialist modernization and socialized production. Therefore, we should have wide markets. We must first depend on our own unified market and then on the world market. [paragraph continues]

The two markets are closely connected. Without the domestic unified market we can hardly open up the world market and without the world market we can hardly consolidate the domestic unified market. However, in both consolidating the domestic unified market and opening up the world market, we should depend on the open cities and areas, and particularly the open cities which play an active role in enlivening and unifying the market in the interior as well as the central and western parts of our country. The market is the coastal open areas, and particularly in the open cities, should take the market in the interior and in the central and western parts of our country as its hinterland and backup force and help to build the market into a new, open one.

At the same time, the open cities and areas should also play an exemplary role for the interior and the central and western parts of our country in commercial activities such as doing business in a civilized and flexible way, modernizing commercial management, enhancing commercial service to a new level, improving service attitude, raising professional levels and training a large number of professional personnel. In short, we should build up new, open commerce as quickly as possible.

For this reason, the coastal open cities and areas should take a major step forward before others in reforming their market and commercial structure. They should formulate their own special policies in this aspect, build themselves into experimental bases for our economic restructuring, and work as a window and filter in boldly absorbing and using foreign advanced management experiences applicable for our country to develop socialized large-scale production. In short, the coastal open cities and areas should make their due contributions to our economic restructuring through the useful experiences they explore and gain in this respect.

DENG LIQUN INSPECTS ANHUI 5-21 JUNE

OW091101 Hefei ANHUI RIBAO in Chinese 22 Jun 86 p 1

[By reporter Li Chaosheng]

[Text] "Material and spiritual civilization should be promoted simultaneously. Both are indispensable, and neither should be overemphasized at the expense of the other." These remarks were made by Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, during an inspection tour of Anhui from 5 to 21 June.

Comrade Deng Liqun came here primarily to investigate factories, rural villages, schools, stores, neighborhoods, and other grassroots units to find out about the development of socialist spiritual civilization in our province. During his 17-day, 4,000-li tour, Deng Liqun inspected Hefei, Bengbu, Maanshan, and Wuhu Cities as well as Luan, Chuzhou, and Huizhou Prefectures. He was accompanied on separate occasions by Wang Yuzhao, deputy secretary of the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee and governor; Xu Leyi, deputy secretary; and Niu Xiaomei, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial party committee.

In his conversations with the relevant responsible comrades on the trip, Deng Liqun repeatedly used a line from a poem by Lin Zexu to encourage them. The line reads: "I will act in the interest of the country, even if it means death; and never will I act for personal benefit." [paragraph continues]

Comrade Deng Liqun explained: Building socialist spiritual civilization is an undertaking of vital and lasting importance benefitting the country and the people. It is also an arduous task requiring systematic efforts. Leaders at every level should have the country at heart and dedicate themselves to the cause of the party and the people; they should not think about personal interest, worry about personal gains and losses, or try to avoid danger and hardships and pursue confort and fortune.

During his inspection, Deng Liqun explained over and over again the relationship between material and spiritual civilization. Citing numerous cases observed on his tour, he pointed out: Spiritual civilization advances are often successful in building material civilization. Material civilization is the foundation of spiritual civilization, which in turn promotes the development of material civilization. Socialist spiritual civilization dictates and guarantees the socialist orientation of our material construction. Therefore, material and spiritual civilization should be promoted simultaneously. Both are indispensable, and neither should be overemphasized at the expense of the other.

During his inspection of the building of spiritual civilization in cities, Deng Liqun set great score by the tremendous role of the masses in building spiritual civilization. He visited streets, stores and stands, and ordinary people's homes to examine the situation and listen to views and suggestions. When he saw that Bengbu City, once noted for its dirty streets, had become a city with clean streets, a beautiful environment, and civilized manners after 2 years of efforts, and that the residents were vigorously trying to beautify their streets and courtyards and establish harmonious, cooperative ties with their neighbors, he was pleased, saying: "Well, it shows that building spiritual civilization has taken root in the hearts of the people and accords with the people's wishes." He praised the city's leaders: "You have done a fine job. Keep up the good work!" In Wuhu City, Deng Liqun visited the scenic Jinghu Park. Members of the city party committee told him that former residents living in the park area had moved out in a very short period to show their support of the expansion of the park. Deng Liqun highly praised their action, saying: "Let us set up a table recording their lofty deeds. Let us set up monuments to people who make major contributions to the development of spiritual civilization!"

While inspecting factories and enterprises, Deng Liqun showed special interest in the work of party committees after the system of directors assuming full responsibility was introduced. Many factory party committee secretaries told him that after the system was introduced, factory party committees had more, not fewer, things to do, their tasks had become more defined, and their roles could be displayed more effectively. Deng Liqun was pleased with this change in the course of economic structural reform. He said: "the institution of the system of directors assuming full responsibility has restored the work originally belonging to the party committee." At the Maanshan Iron and Steel Corporation's machinery repair plant, he learned that the plant had performed exceedingly well in both ideological and political work and business management. He joyfully took up the brush and wrote: "Keep you honor and go for more." In Wuhu, Deng Liqun also held a meeting of party committee secretaries of seven factories in Wuhu and Maanshan Cities to discuss "exactly how to carry out the party committee's work after the institution of the director's responsibility system." [paragraph continues]

He seriously listened to the reports and views of the party secretaries and raised a number of issues for discussion. The forum was held in a lively atmosphere. He told the party secretaries: "The introduction of the director's responsibility system means, in short, that the director should establish his administrative authority and the party committee secretary should establish his ideological authority. The two are in unity with each other, not opposite to each other."

On his inspection tour of the countryside, Deng Liqun was immensely pleased to see the great changes due to the implementation of the responsibility system. After inspecting a number of villages in Chuxian Prefecture, he was so delighted that he picked up a writing brush and wrote down this inscription: "If you want to see a scene 1,000 or 10,000 li away, you must go up to the upper floor of the tower or still higher." He gave many concrete instructions on how to further strengthen the building of socialist spiritual civilization in those rural areas where people have already become better off. He told rural cadres and peasants: Now that reform has been launched in rural areas, peasants should try to become well-to-do by working hard while abiding by the law. At Houyang Village, Damiao Township, Fengyang County, Deng Liqun saw the newly built two-story house of Yang Jinli, the head of a specialized grain-growing household. He also made a special trip to see the poor thatched cottage which formerly housed four generations of this household. He then said in real earnest: "This is historical evidence. We should not pull down all these poor cottages. Each village should keep some of these poor cottages so that they may be used to educate the younger generation." At Daying village in Laian County, Deng Liqun, in high spirits, inspected the rural cultural facilities and attended a performance by an amateur theatrical troupe made up of peasants. He told the leaders accompanying him on the tour that every effort should be made to satisfy the peasants' spiritual and cultural needs and speed up the pace in building rural spiritual civilization. Deng Liqun also showed deep concern for building rural grass-roots party organizations. He pointed out: "In rural party organizations, the proportion of young party members is too low. Attention should be paid to cultivating more young party members so as to gradually improve the composition of these organizations in terms of the members' average age and education."

On his inspection tour of Anhui, Deng Liqun also visited some universities, middle and primary schools, and kindergartens, where he extended cordial regards to the faculty members, who were devoting themselves to the educational cause. At Hefei Associated University, he told 76-year-old Professor Yang Chengzong: "You still work so hard for the party's educational cause in spite of your advanced age. You spirit is really touching." He wrote an inscription, reading "a new method for a new thing," for Hefei Associated University, which came into being in the course of restructuring the educational system. On his visit to the Chinese University of Science and Technology, he inquired with deep concern about the living conditions of young and middle-aged backbone teachers. Speaking to students of the university's juvenile class, he urged them to pay attention to their health. He also asked the university authorities to take good care of the students of this class. When visiting the Hefei Normal Shcool for Kindergarten Education, Deng Liqun praised the future teachers, saying: "Your work has boundless prospects, and your responsibility is heavy." [paragraph continues]

At the Agricultural School of Fengyang County, Deng Liqun asked the prefectural and county leaders to be concerned about the teachers' well-being and told the principal of the school: "This is a significant cause. I hope you will take agricultural education as your lifetime career." In Shexian County, Deng Liqun visited the memorial hall for Tao Xingzhi, a well-known people's educator. He wrote down the following characters with vigorous calligraphic strokes. "Genuine knowledge gained through practice. Resolute action taken to put knowledge to use." He did this to show his respect for Mr Tao Xingzhi.

Deng Liqun also traveled to Huang Shan on his inspection tour. He rode a cable car up the mountains as one of the first passengers in a test run of the Huang Shan cable car service. Deng Liqun met with personnel of the Huang San TV transmission station at the Beihai Guest house. He extended regards to the comrades who stayed all year round on Huang Shan to transmit information about socialist spiritual civilization and inquired with deep concern about their work, daily life, and study. In conversations with responsible persons of the Huang Shan administrative bureau, Deng Liqun gave them many important suggestions on promoting spiritual civilization and building scenic tourist areas. In Tunci City, he visited an old folks' home to see the aged people there, inquiring about their living conditions and wishing them a happy life in their late years.

HU QILI JOINS VETERAN CADRES' 1 JUL GATHERING

OW050143 Beijing International Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] The 65th founding anniversary of the CPC fell on 1 July. In Beijing, close to 20,000 veteran CPC cadres and their dependents attended an entertainment gathering last night in the Great Hall of the People to mark the occasion. Party and state leaders, includng Hu Qili and Chen Pixian, also attended and watched the entertainment.

The entertainment began with the majestic songs of a veteran cadre choral group. The group, composed of veteran revolutionary comrades, presented songs of the Revolutionary War period. Then, many rich and colorful programs, includng songs, dances, Beijing operas, and other entertainment were staged for the veteran cadres.

After China abolished the lifelong-tenure cadre system, a large number of veteran cadres have left their work posts and retired or have withdrawn to the second line. How to help these veteran comrades to put their remaining energy to use and live a happy life during their late years has become a matter of great concern for the CPC and the whole society.

LI PENG URGES GOOD EQUIPMENT-MANAGEMENT WORK

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Dong Huanliang and XINHUA reporter Xu Yaozhong]

[Text] Beijing, 2 Jul (XINHUA) -- Speaking at today's national meeting to commend outstanding units in equipment management, Li Peng, vice premier of the State Council, stressed that it is a plant director's unshirkable responsibility to ensure the successful management and utilization of equipment.

The economic benefits of an enterprise should be judged not only by the output of its production and the profits it realizes, but also by how well it maintains its equipment, he said.

Hu Ziang, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, also attended the meeting in Beijing and made a speech. Hu Zuewen, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, sent a representative to read his written speech.

The fixed assets of our country's industrial and transport enterprises are currently valued at more than 700 billion yuan. Of this, equipment accounts for some 400 billion yuan. This is an important material and technological basis for our people to carry out the socialist modernization program. The successful management, utilization, and maintenance of all kinds of industrial equipment are of vital significance for improvng the quality of equipment of enterprises and ensuring the sustained, steady, and well-proportioned development of various sectors of our national economy.

Li Peng pointed out in his speech: Some enterprises have the erroneous tendency of attaching importance to production while ignoring the management of equipment. This tendency must be corrected. The plant director's responsibilities and the work-target responsibility system of the plant director and workshop foreman should unequivocably include the task of properly maintaining the equipment as a major requirement of managerial work. At the end of the tenure of the plant director or workshop foreman one of the criteria for deciding whether they should be reappointed to their posts is the condition of the equipment. If an enterprise has a very high rate of productivity and earns very large profits but its equipment is in serious disrepair, will have poor overall operational results in terms of the benefits it produces, and as a result, the plant director should be considered negligent in his duties.

Li Peng continued: In recent years, we have manufactured or imported quantities of large automated equipment, both mechanical and electrical for continuous production processes. Departments in charge of various industries and all industrial enterprises should take various measures to train proficient equipment-maintenance teams. This is the only way to achieve success in managing and utilizing the new equipment. In addition, positive efforts should be made to modify the original equipment so that new technology may be adopted. At the same time, equipment that is old, antiquated or not energy efficient should no longer be used.

In addition to the above, Li Peng said: A system of comprehensive management of equipment centered on improving economic benefits and raising the overall utilization rate of equipment should be put into practice. The planned equipment inspection and maintenance system, which has been carried out by industrial enterprises since the 1950's, has played a certain role in ensuring industrial production. With the development of production technology, however, the original system, which requires the periodic inspection and maintenance of equipment on a preset timetable, should now be changed into an inspection and maintenance system based on the actual technical conditions of the equipment. That is, the rigid managerial method should be changed into a flexible one so as to constantly improve the condition and raise the utilization rate of enterprise equipment.

Li Peng expressed the hope that all localities, competent authorities, and equipment-management association would attach great importance to the management and maintain work on equipment, earnestly strengthen leadership in this regard, and assign full-time personnel to do the work as necessary.

At this commendation meeting, 100 units, including the Chengdu Measuring and Cutting Tools Plant in Sichuan, the Anshan Iron and Steel Company, and the Jilin Chemical Industry Company, were awarded the title of "National Outstanding Units in Equipment Management" by the State Economic Commission. Ninety-seven units were given the title of "National Advanced Units in Equipment Management."

The Second National Work Forum on Equipment Management and Maintenance and the second annual meeting of the China Equipment Management Association concluded at the same time.

LI PENG ADDRESSES VOCATIONAL EDUCATION FORUM

OW070213 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1052 GMT 6 Jul 86

[By Central People's Broadcasting Station reporter Li Renzhu and XINHUA reporter Yang Zhaobo]

[Text] Beijing, 6 Jul (XINHUA) -- The 5-day national forum on vocational and technical education successfully concluded today. Vice Premier Li Peng spoke at the forum.

The forum made arrangements for China's vocational and technical education in the coming years. Participants exchanged experiences and decided the tasks, guidelines, and policies.

What was special about this forum was that it was jointly convened by the State Education Commission, Planning Commission, Economic Commission, and the Ministry of Labor and Personnel. Vice Premier Li highly praised their practice, saying they had "taken a good lead." Delegates from various localities agreed that vocational and technical eduction is an undertaking that concerns the whole society and that the educational departments and the planning, economic, and labor and personnel departments should strengthen their cooperation, closely coordinate their work, support each other, and take concerted action to promote the development of vocational and technical education.

Comrade Li Peng fully affirmed the necessity of the forum. He said: Since the central authorities made public the decision on educational reform more than a year ago, the understanding of education in the whole society and party, and especially in the leadership at all levels, has notably improved. People have gradually come to understand that qualified personnel hold the key to the success of the four modernizations and that education provides the foundation for solving the shortage of qualified personnel. Education can be classified into four categories: basic, vocational and technical, higher, and adult. Each of these four categories is indispensable. While there is some improvement in the people's understanding of vocational and technical education, looking down on vocational and technical education is still common in society. This is also true among many people in education circles. Therefore, it is necessary to further enhance our understanding of vocational and technical education before we can develop it.

He said: Our workers' standards are the key to improving our product quality and economic results. Given the same equipment and administration, the standard of the workers will decide the quality of the products. Our rural economy requires more input to maintain sustained growth, and technology is a major input required. This requires us to promote education as a means of raising the cultural and scientific and technological standards of our rural workers.

After affirming the achievements in our vocational and technical education, Li Peng said: The development of vocational and technical education in recent years was uneven for the country as a whole. While a small number of areas developed rapidly, the rest of the country lagged behind. The development in most of the rural regions in particular, was extremely slow. I believe that we need to stress development in the whole country, especially in most of the rural areas, where vocational and technical education is rather weak. Current vocational and technical education has not been able to train enough personnel to meet the needs of society.

Li Peng said: The policy of requiring pre-employment training was specifically put forward in the central decision on educational reform. It is an important measure for reforming both the educational structure and the labor and personnel system. Its very goal is to raise the standards of workers. Labor, education, and all other departments should firmly implement this policy. Graduates of vocational and technical schools should have priority in employment.

Li Peng also stressed: It is necessary to implement the policy of developing vocational and technical education at various levels, in various forms, and by everyone. In other words, education departments, factories and enterprises, and labor departments should all promote vocational and technical education and bring their initiatives into play. The question of teachers should also be resolved through multichannels. The State Education Commission and education departments in various provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions should build a contingent of teachers for vocational and technical education in 3 or 5 years. It is necessary to create a new situation in vocational and technical education in order to contribute to the socialist modernization.

YU QIULI SPEAKS ON PLA PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW070344 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0811 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 6 Jul (XINHUA) -- On 3 July Yu Qiuli, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and director of the General Political Department, addressed a meeting held by the Central Military Commission on the PLA's party rectification and efforts to improve the party style. He said: When carrying out education in the current situation on the party's line, principles, and policies the PLA should pay attention to enhancing the servicemen's understanding of the reforms. Servicemen should correctly understand and support the ongoing reforms in various fields while further carrying out the reform of the Army itself.

Yu Qiuli said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee our country has carried out a series of major reforms in both rural and urban areas and has achieved remarkable success. The people throughout the country warmly support the reforms. The vast number of commanders and fighters also resolutely support the reforms.

Under the situation of comprehensive reforms the PLA should take further steps to educate the servicemen in the current situation. Persistence in the reforms is a firm and unshakable policy of the party Central Committee. We may say that without the reforms today's excellent situation would be nonexistent. In order to enhance the excellent situation we must continue to thoroughly carry out the reforms. Since the reform is a deep social change and something new, a process of gradual probing and experimentation is necessary. Problems in the process are unavoidable due to lack of experience at the beginning. It is wrong for some people to blame the reforms for problems concerning the party style and the standards of social conduct. It is also wrong for someone to view the reforms from his personal standpoint in consideration of his own benefit. We should educate the cadres and fighters to know the situation of reforms clearly, affirm their confidence in the reforms, and further unify their thinking with the policy decision of the party Central Committee.

He pointed out: In last few years our Army has inaugurated important reforms in military affairs, political work, logistics, scientific research for national defense, and military schools. The reforms have yielded, and will continue to yield, important effects. However, many other things in our Army remain to be reformed. In particular, many important issues have yet to be probed since we adapted our guiding principle for Army building to peacetime needs. We may say that our Army will be unable to continue its development and advance if it does not carry out reforms. We should also know that the Army reform is a component part of the reform program of our country as a whole. Our country's reforms in various fields also involve our Army in many respects, and require our Army to carry out corresponding reforms. For this reason, leading cadres at all levels should further emancipate their minds and continue to promote reforms in the Army.

Yu Qiuli said: The reforms carried out by the Army are designed to further modernize the Army and constantly enhance the troops' fighting power. Therefore, the reforms must be carried out in consideration of the Army's realities. Our Army is an armed group performing revolutionary political tasks and a combatant organization with a high degree of centralism and unity. We must consider these characteristics of our Army when we do things. We may learn from and draw lessons from any experiences of local people in reform, but we must not copy them mechanically. We should note the similarities and differences between the Army and the civilian community, as well as the commonality and differences between laws of Army building and economic construction. Some reforms may be undertaken by both the civilian community and the Army, while other reforms are exclusively for the civilian community to undertake but not for the Army. When we use foreign experience we should pay particular attention to considering the conditions of our country and our Army and to always maintaining our Army's characteristics. In addition, we must stress real effects of reforms and must not do things only in name but without substance. In the course of the reform we should respect the masses' creativity and protect their initiative. At the same time we should organize and guide them well, so that the reforms will proceed in a sound way.

RECTIFICATION STRENGTHENS PARTY IN PLA UNITS

OW070406 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0136 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 6 Jul (XINHUA) -- Party rectification is going on intensely in PLA units at and below the regimental level. So far, a considerable number of brigades and regiments have already completed party rectification, which is also being conducted in battalions and companies. Party rectification in grass-roots PLA units has strengthened the party organizationally and improved ideology, style, and discipline among a vast number of party members, thereby giving a strong impetus to work in all fields.

Grass-roots PLA units have followed a clear guiding ideology in carrying out party rectification. The Central Military Commission has set two demands for party rectification -- to rectify and overcome negative aspects and to strengthen the party organizationally by building party branches into fighting forces. It has specifically called for rectification in 12 negative aspects and outlined solutions to them. Earnestly implementing the Central Military Commission's guidelines, all PLA units have strived to eliminate the negative aspects and strengthen the party organizationally in various phases of the party rectification. Party committees of PLA units at various levels have attached great importance to the party rectification by organizing forces and giving specific guidance in solving problems. In solving the problem concerning party members' ideology, many units concentrated efforts on explaining things and enhancing party spirit and consciousness. They have also conducted mass discussion about a few typical erroneous views and confused ideas in order to help party members distinguish between rights and wrongs. According to comrades who have participated in the party rectification, in the study session they have undergone the most systematic and thorough education in basic knowledge on the party and in party spirit since they were admitted to the party. The study session has enabled them to understand the duty of a communist and the qualifications of a good communist.

Due to the penetrating and solid work in the party rectification, grass-roots PLA units have scored remarkable achievements in the following aspects:

(1) Party spirit has been strengthened and party members' political consciousness raised. Before the party rectification, some confused ideas and erroneous views had corroded and adversely affected party members' thinking. Thanks to study and discussion sessions in the course of party rectification, all units have straightened out erroneous views among party members and changed their mental outlook. By attending a discussion on "how should a communist view gains and losses," party members of a naval unit, who used to think that by staying in the PLA they were at a disadvantage, now understand how to deal with gains and losses. Quite a few comrades said that the motherland's security and the people's happiness are the greatest gains of a communist party member, and that it is a glorious duty to sacrifice personal interests for such "gains." Now they feel at ease serving in the PLA and are eager to dedicate themselves to the defense undertaking.

(2) Problems existing in some party committees and among party member-cadres have been uncovered and resolved. Earnestly implementing the Central Military Commission's guidelines, many brigade and regiment party committees have boldly exposed contradictions, eliminated undesirable phenomena, and focused attention on solving problems involving party member-cadres, leading cadres in particular.

The party committee of a regiment under the Jinan Military Region that was previously confronted with problems concerning unity, discipline, and style took a positive approach by mobilizing commanders and fighters alike to expose contradictions and ferret out undesirable phenomena, and solved problems in a relatively satisfactory way through education, examination, rectification, or punishment as deemed necessary.

(3) Party style has been improved. Tackling the problem of improving party style in particular, PLA units at and below the regiment level have examined and rectified problems of abusing one's position and powers and seeking personel interests at public expense, criticized the vulgar practice of seeking special connections, firmly stopped the trend of giving extravagant dinners, and corrected other fraudulent practices, thereby solving many long-standing problems in the units. As a result of party rectification, many party member-cadres now perform their duties according to the party Constitution and the "guiding principles," are honest in words and deeds, and refrain from seeking special connections. Through party rectification, leadership style has been improved and the idea of serving the grass roots has been fostered in many PLA units.

(4) Grass-roots party organizations have been strengthened, as seen from the changes that party branches have become more effective fighting forces, party members have brought their vanguard exemplary role further into play, a healthly atmosphere has prevailed in the Army, and a trend of steady progress has emerged in grass-roots construction and work in other fields. Relations between the party and the masses and between officers and soldiers have been improved. Many party members maintain close contacts with the masses and take the initiative to carry out the mass work. Party branches have achieved remarkable results in giving expression to democracy, exercising collective leadership, and conducting regular activities of the organization, criticism and self-criticism, and ideological and political work.

YANG DEZHI STRESSES QUALITY IN NEW PLA RECRUITS

[Text] Beijing, 7 Jul (XINHUA) -- The PLA must adapt itself to the new situation by doing a good job in work with troops and ensuring the quality of soldiers in order to upgrade the Army to a new level, said Yang Dezhi, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and chief of general staff of the PLA, at a all-Army troops work conference today.

Yang Dezhi pointed out that, to do a good job in work with troops and ensure the quality of soldiers is of great importance in building up the troops' combat capability and accelerating their modernization. "The foundation of an army lies in its soldiers." With the strategic change in the guiding ideology for our Army-building during the new period, the number of troops has decreased in the course of the reduction-in-force reorganization, which has set a higher demand on the quality of soldiers. Training crack soldiers and good generals is the way to command troops and win victories at all times and in all countries. Upgrading the quality of soldiers is not only necessary for the PLA's moderization, but also beneficial to the training of dual-purpose personnel to serve national economic construction. Therefore, it is a basic Army construction project, as well as its important task, to train talented personnel for the country.

Yang Dezhi said: In order to do a good job in conscription work and upgrade the quality of soldiers, people's governments at all levels, all military districts and subdistricts, and county and city People's Armed Forces departments have carried out reform, focusing mainly on local conscription, in recent years. The reform has brought in better qualified new soldiers and ensured the quality of soldiers in general. He urged PLA units to fully cooperate with local governments in doing things strictly according to the Military Service Law and other relevant policies, enhance the sense of political responsibility, and ensure a good job in conscription, perferential treatment to compulsory servicemen, and placement of retired soldiers. It is necessary to vigorously carry out ideological and political work, and publicize the Military Service Law, the position and role of the Army, and good people and good deeds in conscription and demobilization work, in order to deepen the sense of responsibility and honor among the broad masses of young people to join the Army and dedicate themselves to the undertaking of national defense.

In his speech, deputy director of the PLA General Political Department Zhou Wenyuan said that it is necessary to pay close attention to conscription work, which is an important factor upgrading the quality of soldiers. He urged military service organs at all levels to enlist qualified soldiers with a profound sense of responsibility. After new soldiers report to the Army, the PLA units must conduct ideological foundation to upgrade their quality.

The all-Army troop work conference opened in Beijing on 2 July. The conference mainly discussed questions on how to adapt Army-building to the new situation, enlist additional soldiers this year, and upgrade their quality, and drew up plans for work with troops.

MINISTRY CIRCULAR URGES SUPPORT FOR ARMY

[Text] Beijing, 7 Jul (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Civil Affairs recently issued a circular on launching activities to support the Army and give preferential treatment to families of revolutionary armymen and martyrs around the 1 August Army Founding Day in 1986. The circular said: In order to strengthen the unity between the Army and the government and between armymen and civilians, all localities should set up efforts to institutionalize the system of giving perferential treatment to, and settling families of, revolutionary armymen and martyrs, and support the Army's reform and construction, while striving to do more solid work for the Army and for families of revolutionary armymen and martyrs.

The circular said: Every locality should base on its tradition, as well as on the new situation, the further implementation of the "Circular on Respecting and Cherishing the Army and Actively Supporting Its Reform and Construction," issued by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, vigorously publicizing the important role and position of the Army in the modernization drive, and striving to respond to the central authorities' call for fostering an atmosphere of respecting and cherishing the Army in our community. It is necessary to mobilize and rely on all social forces in launching activities through various channels and at different levels, and setting up grass-roots networks for such activities in order to implement them on a massive scale in accordance with the guidelines for social security in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and with the guiding principles for the work of giving preferential treatment to, and settling families of, revolutionary armymen and martyrs.

The circular called on all localities to conduct systematic inspection of the work of giving preferential treatment to, and settling families of, revolutionary armymen and martyrs, study and solve problems cropping up in the work in rural and urban areas, actively help a few demobilized servicemen living in rural areas solve practical problems, discover and use dual-purpose personnel among retired armymen, give proper attention to wounded and disabled soldiers, and do a good job in placing retired Army cadres. It is also necessary to commend newly-emerged advanced units and individuals in supporting the Army and giving preferential treatment to families of revolutionary armymen and martyrs, publicizing their advanced deeds, encouraging them to explore methods of reform, and teaching them to set good examples for the masses, promoting the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

MILITIA ORGANS PLACED UNDER LOCAL JURISDICTION

OW080445 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0044 GMT 6 Jul 86

[By reporter Gai Yumin]

[Text] Beijing, 6 Jul (XINHUA) -- The task of transferring county (city) People's Armed Forces departments to the jurisdiction of local governments has been successfully completed throughout the country on schedule, and China's militia work has entered a new stage of development.

After the CPC Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Military Commission issued the circular on transferring county (city) People's Armed Forces departments to the jurisdiction of local governments last March, all provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal governments paid close attention to the transfer work and regarded it as an important task in supporting the Army's structural reform and reduction-in-force reorganization. They took the initiative in cooperating with the Army to help solve specific problems confronting it, thereby creating favorable conditions for smoothly transferring People's Armed Forces departments to the jurisdiction of local governments. In order to transfer to the local government a People's Armed Forces Department with sound ideology and style and well versed in administrarive work, all military regions and provincial military districts readjusted and replenished the leading bodies and cadres of People's Armed Forces departments. At the same time, they did a tremenmdous job in preparing for the transfer by making an inventory of weapons, equipment, and other materials, checking financial accounts, and repairing motor vehicles. Close cooperation between the Army and local governments in study and drawing up plans for the transfer and experimenting at selected points ensured smooth trnsfer of the militia organizations under the jurisdiction of local governmemts.

According to regulations, Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Tegion will complete the transfer before the end of this year.

Since being transferred to the jurisdiction of local governments, county (city) People's Armed Forces departments in China have become the Military Affairs departments of their local party committees and the military service organs of the local people's government at the same level have assumed the dual leadership of local government and PLA units. In order to ensure the continuity of militia work after completion of the transfer, party and government leaders in all localities should take measures to strengthen leadership and cooperate with the People's Armed Forces Department in studying and drawing up plans for intensifying militia building and achieving a breakthrough in militia and reserve service work.

In light of the new situation arising from the transfer of People's Armed Forces departments to the jurisdiction of local governments, Military Affairs departments at all levels should sponsor training classes for militia cadres, and help them adapt themselves to the new situation, follow a correct guiding ideology in the administrative work, and improve their work performance. Militia cadres should make determined efforts to inherit and carry forward the glorious tradition of the People's Army, actively lead militiamen in the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization, and open up a new situation in militia work.

PLA DEVELOPS MODERN CARTOGRAPHIC TECHNOLOGY

HK100205 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0645 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] JIEFANGJUN BAO today reported that the cartographical work of the Chinese Army is developing from a single-form mode to a comprehensive mode designed for combined army units, and the traditional surveying and mapping technology is being superseded by modern cartographical technology.

The Chinese Army is now able to precisely determine the exact land coordinates of missile and satellite launching sites, the orbits for satellites, and the splashdown points of missiles on the sea surface. The new comprehensive technology for processing diagrams, graphs, and pictures on the basis of microelectronics and the numerical control system has been widely used for automated command and automated mapping in military actions. The Army groups have used computers to manage maps, analyze topography, and conduct tactical mapping operations. This effectively helps Army commanders analyze topography rapidly and correctly, work out operation plans, and organize combined military operations.

SHANGHAI MAYOR ON ROLE OF GARRISON DISTRICT

OW060746 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Reorganization of People's Armed Forces departments into local governments has been successfully completed in Shanghai's districts and suburban counties. The Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, the municipal government, and the Shanghai Garrison District jointly held a summing-up meeing on 2 July. Jiang Zemin, deputy secretary of the municipal party committee and mayor of Shanghai, addressed the meeting.

He said: According to relevant provisions issued by the party Central Committee, the garrison district is a military work department of the municipal party committee. Generally speaking, it is through the garrison district that the municipal party committee exercises its leadership over the military work of the municipality. In military work, all district and county party committees and governments should respect, obey, and accept the leadership of the garrison district, and do the work of the People's Armed Forces department well in accordance with relevant plans of the garrison district.

Ba Zhongtan, commander of the Shanghai Garrison District, made a summing-up report at the meeting. Present at the meeting were Huang Ju, deputy secretary of the municipal party committee; Zhang Dinghong, member of the Standing Committee of the municipal party committee; and Qian Xuezhong, secretary general of the municipal government.

SHANGHAI EXPERIMENTS WITH LABOR CONTRACT SYSTEM

OW080554 Beijing XINHUA in English 0543 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Shanghai, July 8 (XINHUA) -- Having worked two years for the Kaiping Loading Company at Shanghai harbor, the 64 loaders are thinking about their future.

They are part of the 4,500 workers employed by Shanghai harbor in line with the labor contract system which was first tried in 1981, said an official of the company. This experimental system is aimed at breaking the former "iron-rice bowl" system, under which workers were paid the same, no matter how well or badly they worked. Out of more than three million workers employed by the state-owned enterprises in Shanghai, some 150,000 are hired on contracts of varying lengths, according to a municipal official. The labor contract system enables enterprises to employ people on a selective basis, and workers can also choose their careers to bring their talents into fuller play.

"I am enjoying good health, and am competent at loading. I am paid a monthly wage of 200 yuan," said Yuan Lijun who was a peasant two years ago. He and many of his colleagues have decided to renew their contracts with the Kaiping Loading Company.

"The experimental system helps my enterprise improve productivity," said an official of the first department store of Shanghai which was one of the pioneers of the contract system in the city. China's biggest department store has total sales of 480 million yuan annually, and it has hired 200 contract workers, one-tenth of the store's total.

All new employees of state-owned businesses will be hired on contracts of varying lengths, according to a local regulation issued in 1984 by the Shanghai municipal authorities, said a local labor official. The new system would create groups of people waiting for new jobs, which would be a problem, the official said. But this could be solved by the social insurance system.

Contract workers enjoy the same labor rights and treatment as regular workers, and pay into state-run health-care and pension schemes.

Meanwhile, the contract workers have to pay social insurance premiums which will operate as a sort of unemployment insurance.

ZHEJIANG PARTY RECTIFICATION TRAINING CLASS ENDS

OW040404 Hangzhou ZHEJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 25 Jun 86 p 4

[Excerpts] A training class on rural party rectification work for cadres from provincial organs has concluded. Through 10 days of study and training in the class, the more than 500 cadres, who are all party members, have become more clearly aware of the vital significance of party rectification in rural areas. They have deepened their understanding of the need for cadres from leading organs to go to the countryside as a way to change the cadres' work style and forge ties between those at the higher and lower level. With this correct thinking in mind and having grasped the policy, they have been fully prepared to do a good job of helping and guiding the party rectification work in rural areas. [passage omitted]

Some 40,000 cadres will go to the rural areas this time. They are from five different levels and will participate in the work of rural party rectification. Among them will be more than 500 cadres with party membership from the various provincial organs. They will be sent to the rural areas by the provincial CPC Committee. Since these cadres have experienced the first-stage party rectification, they should set a good example for the cadres at the grass-roots level. In the training class all study groups formed by these cadres expressed the determination to make friends with grass-roots cadres and masses when they arrive in the rural areas. They pledged that they would act as good propagandists to give publicity to the party's policies and principles and as good guards in ensuring the rectification of party style. In addition, they said that they would do their best to serve as advisers in promoting rural reform and developing the commodity economy and, where conditions permit, as "matchmakers" to help establish lateral economic ties. As a comrade who has been appointed leader of a liaison group puts it will, the cadre sent by the provincial authorities to rural areas should behave as good models instead of showing arrogance and putting on airs. They should place strict demands on themselves and set an example with their own conduct at all times and under any circumstances. They should have correct thing, a conscientious work style, and a simple and plain way of life. In no way should they cause any inconvenience to the local people. What they should do is to make a success of rural party rectification under the leadership of the local party committees.

GUANGDONG CONFERENCE PROMOTES REGIONAL, FOREIGN TRADE

OW051250 Beijing XINHUA in English 1213 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Text] Guangzhou, July 5 (XINHUA) -- An eight-day economic and trade conference focussing on mountainous counties in Guangdong Province has promoted lateral economic exchanges between the coastal, plain and economically developed areas, and the underdeveloped mountainous areas, according to a local official here today.

He said the conference aimed at promoting further understanding of the present economic situation and advantages of the mountainous areas.

The conference, the first of its kind held here, closed this week at the Guangzhou International Exhibition Hall. On display were products of the forestry, minerals, machine-building, textiles, light industry, foodstuffs, electronics, animal husbandry and arts and crafts industries from 39 out of 47 mountainous counties in Guangdong.

The conference was attended by 30,000 people from over 60 cities and counties in Guangdong's coastal, plain and developed areas. Also represented were enterprises, research institutes, colleges and universities, and economic, trade and commercial departments of ten other provinces and municipalities, as well as foreign and Hong Kong businessmen.

Some 465 letters of intent and 53 contracts for economic and technological cooperation were signed during the first six days of the conference, with a total investment of 220 million yuan.

Guangdong's 47 mountainous counties, covering 54.4 percent of the province's total area, have rich natural resources, but they don't have enough funds and technology to exploit them.

The government is now encouraging economic cooperation between more developed areas and underdeveloped regions. Premier Zhao Ziyang said earlier this year at the National People's Congress that "it is essential to promote mutual economic cooperation and association" between poorer areas and the economically developed areas so that the former will be able to rid themselves of their economic and cultural backwardness as soon as possible by mainly relying on their own resources.

GUANGDONG CONFERENCE ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK080225 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] This morning, the party rectification guidance group of the provincial CPC Committee held a conference on rural party rectification in our province to convey and implement the spirit of the forum of six coastal provinces and cities on party rectification work which was held by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification in Nanjing, to sum up experiences of the rural district level in party rectitication, and to make further arrangements for rural party rectification in our province. Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Wang Ning Presided over the conference.

Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Guo Rongchang spoke at the conference. He made specific arrangements for party rectification at the township level. He said: In party rectification at the township level, it is necessary to solve four problems:

1. It is essential to solve the problem of how to suit the situation in rural reform and how to correctly understand and implement all rural principles and policies of the party.
2. It is necessary to solve the problem of strengthening party spirit and the concept of party discipline and of wholeheartedly serving the people.
3. It is imperative to solve the problem that leaders of the party do not take care of the work of the party.
4. It is essential to solve the problem of being shackled by the ideas of the small-scale peasant economy among party members. We must teach the party members to establish ambition and to lead the masses to speed up the development of the building of the two civilizations in the rural areas.

GUANGXI PEOPLE'S ARMED FORCES DEPARTMENT REORGANIZED

HK271353 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] The work of placing the country, city, and district People's Armed Forces departments of our region under local authorities began in the middle of March this year and was entirely completed on 25 June. The handover of the 70 county, 5 city, and 6 urban district People's Armed Forces departments to be placed under local authorities and of the 16 newly established urban district People's Armed Forces departments were done respectively by the military subdistricts and all county, city, and district people's governments. The cadres of the People's Armed Forces departments followed the allocation by the organizations, changed their active service to reserve service, and continued to embark on the People's Armed Forces work.

To welcome the handover work, in conjunction with party rectification, People's Armed Forces departments at all levels strengthened ideological and political work, conducted education in obeying the overall situation and in fervently cherishing Guangxi, mountainous areas, and People's Armed Forces work for their cadres, and unified the cadres' ideology and understanding on the basis of the policy decision of the CPC Central Committee and the Central Military Commission so that the cadres conscientiously stressed party spirit, the overall situation, and discipline and obeyed the party's arrangements in everything. Through education, the work of readjusting the cadres was speeded up.

The work of placing the country, city, and district People's Armed Forces departments under local authorities was pressing and arduous and involved many departments. It was of a policy nature. In view of this, the region and all prefectures and cities promptly organized handover leadership groups with the participation of leaders of the party, government, Army, and departments concerned and set up offices to strengthen leadership.

With the vigorous support of all departments concerned, the practical problems of the handover work were solved relatively well. People's governments at all levels also appropriated funds to support the capital construction of People's Armed Forces departments. All this educated and encouraged the People's Armed Forces cadres. They declared that they would turn the deep love of the CPC Central Committee and CPC committees and governments at all levels to practical actions and work hard to create a new situation in the People's Armed Forces work.

CHEN HUIGUANG AT GUANGXI FORUM ON COMPULSORY EDUCATION

HK040226 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The recent regional forum on enforcement of the compulsory education law and conference on educational work seriously studied and arranged for the work of enforcing the compulsory education law, straightening out the ideology of doing educational work, strengthening teachers' training, and improving the quality of education in our region.

During the meetings, leading comrades of the regional party and government, including Chen Huiguang, Gan Ku, Hou Depeng, Shi Zhaotang, and Wu Keqing, spoke about the relevant issues of enforcing the compulsory education law and so on in our region.

The meetings put forward: It is necessary to organize the cadres and the masses to seriously study the compulsory education law so as to strengthen their sense of responsibility and sense of urgency. In accordance with the different situation in economic and cultural development in all places of our region, the region has decided to organize relevant personnel to investigate the situation in enforcing the compulsory education law in three different kinds of areas of our region. On the basis of the results of investigation, the regional People's Congress Standing committee will formulate as soon as possible the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Regional regulations governing enforcement of the compulsory education law. The regional education department will also formulate detailed rules and regulations on enforcement. All places must seriously conduct investigation and study and explore the program for enforcement. [passage omitted]

The meetings also studied the aim, principled, method, and steps of building the ranks of middle and primary school teachers of our region. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, it is essential to train and readjust the existing teachers so that over 90 percent of the unqualified teachers will be competent or basically competent at the teaching job. It is imperative to strengthen the building of teachers' training schools at all levels, to establish a network of training middle and primary school teachers, to put it on a sound basis, and to make full use of television education to train teachers.

The meetings also demanded: Schools at all levels and of all kinds must straighten out the guiding ideology of doing educational work and establish the idea that education must serve socialist construction. It is necessary to strengthen ideological and political work in the schools and to attach importance to the development of vocational education.

SECRETARY ATTENDS GUANGXI PROPAGANDA DIRECTORS FORUM

HK020511 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Regional CPC Committee Secretary Chen Huiguang and regional propaganda department director Jou Depeng delivered speeches at the regional forum of propaganda department directors which concluded yesterday.

Since the 3d plenum of the 11th CPC Central Committee, under the leadership of the regional CPC Committee, the comrades of propaganda departments at all levels of our region have done a lot of work and have gradually eliminated and abandoned the past leftist method of going in for political campaigns, criticism, and struggle.

They have strived to use the method of conducting discussion on an equal basis and to take the form of pursuasion and education to influence and masses. This has made propaganda work lively and convincing and appealing to a certain extent. [passage omitted]

In a word, the achievements in our region's propaganda work over the past few years are marked. However, our propaganda work has still not been done sufficiently. One of the most salient problems in our propaganda work is that our propaganda work has not suited the practice of current reform and economic construction and not been done sufficiently to serve reform and the building of two civilizations.

In his speech, Comrade Chen Huiguang pointed out: Whether our propaganda work can suit the practice of reform and economic construction not only in a crucial problem of whether we can do propaganda work well in the new period, but also will directly affect the overall situation of reform and construction.

Regarding the problem of how our propaganda work must be linked with reality. We must resolve the ideological problems of the cadres and the masses in the course of reform and create a fine environment for reform. We must help the cadres and the masses overcome the idea of the small-scale peasant economy and establish the new concept of the socialist commodity economy. The ideological and cultural fronts must create a well-off and harmonious environment. [passage omitted]

In his speech, Comrade Chen Huiguang demanded: CPC committees at all levels must really strengthen leadership over propaganda work and give full play to the role of the propaganda departments so that propaganda work can still better meet the needs of reform and economic construction.

In his speech, Comrade Hou Depeng stressed the problems of creating a well-off and harmonious environment. He said: In all-round reform of the economic structure, a well-off environment is needed. In reform of the political structure, likewise, a well-off and harmonious environment is needed. When we persist in reform of the cultural structure, we must also create a well-off and harmonious environment together.

Regarding how we can create such an environment, he said: We must maintain the continuity and stability of the party's policies. We must take a clear-cut stand to support and protect reform. We must pursue a high degree of democracy. Leaders on the ideological and cultural fronts must act in accordance with the laws of ideology and culture.

With a view to whipping up public opinion on creating a well-off and harmonious environment, Comrade Hou Depeng demaned: In its work in the second half of this year, the propaganda front must closely link all-round reform with straightening out party style and doing well in conducting education in the situation, policies, ideals, and discipline:

1. Ideological and political work must still better serve all-round reform and economic construction. [passage omitted]

2. We must make overall plans, take all factors into consideration, conduct education in all ideological theories in a coordinated way. [passage omitted]

3. It is necessary to extensively and penetratingly launch the emulation drive of three goods and one learn [emulation drive to build good environment, to establish good order, and to provide service of good quality and to learn from Lei Feng and the progressives, which was launched in 14 cities and towns in Guangxi region, as broadcast on 28 February] as well as the drive of building civilized villages and towns.

4. It is imperative to work hard to improve the quality of the propaganda cadres. [passage omitted]

The propaganda departments of all prefectures, cities, and counties must step up training their cadres and should train the propaganda commission members of the township and town CPC committees once by rotation around the 6th plenum of the 12th CPC Central Committee. [passage omitted]

The forum of the propaganda department directors of the whole region was held in Nanning from 24 to 29 June. The forum emphatically conveyed and discussed the spirit of the national forum of the propaganda department directors and conveyed and studied the latest series of important speeches of leading comrades of the central authorities on building spiritual civilization. This forum was another important meeting on the work of building spiritual civilization after this year's regional conferences on grass-roots party rectification and ideological and political work.

HUBEI LEADERS INSPECT RADIO, TV TRANSMISSION TOWER

HK060307 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Yesterday afternoon, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Guan Guangfu and Governor Guo Zhenqian visited the Hubei radio and television tower to inspect and guide work. This tower, located between Wuhan and Guishan, is now in use. The four-channel television transmitter was officially brought into operation on 20 Jaunary.

Guan Guangfu and Guo Zhenqian listened to work reports given by (Zhang Xinxian), director of the provincial radio and television department, and a responsible person of the Guishan tower construction office.

This tower is China's first reinforced concrete radio and television transmitting tower which can also be used for tourist purposes. Its main functions consist of transmitting and relaying five FM channels and five television channels. It can also provide services for meteorology, fire fighting, atmospheric environmental surveys, and tourism. When completed, the tower will further extend radio and television coverage in the province and improve reception conditions. [passage omitted]

Guan Guangfu and Guo Zhenqian visited the television transmitting room and extended regards to those on duty there. They then climbed higher up the tower for a view of the impressive scenery of the triple city of Wuhan.

YUNNAN OPENS MEETING ON IDEOLOGICAL WORK

HK090303 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Excerpts] A conference on ideological and political work convened by the provincial CPC Committee opened in Kunming on 8 July. This is the largest Yunnan meeting on the topic since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. [passage omitted]

Zhu Zhihui, depty secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, spoke at the opening of the conference. He said: The main aim of this conference is to solve four problems: 1) Study the spirit of the relevant central documents, enhance understanding of the importance of ideological and political work in the new situation, and gain a clearer idea of the guiding ideas and tasks for ideological and political work. 2) Sum up and exchange experiences and further probe new ways of conducting ideological and political work in the new situation, so that the contents, methods, and forms of this work will better meet the requirements of reform and clear the way for developing the social productive forces and socialist commodity economy. 3) Study the problem of strengthening the building of the province's ideological and political work force. 4) Make arrangements for current ideological and political work.

He Zhiqiang, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor, made a report. He first spoke on the blueprint for the province's Seventh 5-Year Plan and introduced the current situation and the main tasks in economic structural reform. He then put forward specific demands on how to strengthen ideological and political work in the new period. [passage omitted] He said: In the new historical period, ideological and political work must penetrate into economic work. First, we must conduct correct propaganda on reform and create an excellent social environment for reform. Second, we must help the cadres and masses to establish the commodity concept, and bring the whole province's economic activities onto the track of planned commodity economy. Third, we must change outdated customs and habits, and ease the masses' mental burdens. Fourth, we must conduct vigorous propaganda for running the economy according to the law. Fifth, the whole party must pay attention to strengthening ideological and political work.

Also present at the conference on 8 July were provincial CPC Committee Secretary Pu Chaozhu and Standing Committee members Qiu Chuangjiao, Zhao Tingguang, and Yin Jun. [passage omitted]

LI XIMING RELAYS CPC DIRECTIVES ON SERVICE WORK

SK090739 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 27 Jun 86 p 1

[Text] Li Ximing relayed the important directives of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee on the work of Beijing Municipality at the Beijing municipal service work conference which concluded on 25 June. The directives state: The commerce of Beijing Municipality is a key window for developing our country's commercial work. Thus, the service quality of the Beijing municipal commercial departments can produce a comparatively great impact on commercial work at home and abroad. Thus, these departments should adopt feasible measures to improve their service attitude and service quality and strive to play an exemplary role for the commercial departments throughout the country.

HEBEI HOLDS 12TH CPPCC STANDING COMMITTEE MEETING

SK031244 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] The 12th Standing Committee meeting of the 5th provincial CPPCC Committee was held in Shijiazhuang City from 24 to 25 June. Yin Zhe, chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee, presided over the meeting.

The meeting first relayed the important directive of the central authorities with regard to carrying out the united front work in the new historic period.

At the meeting, Xu Chunxing, vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee, delivered a speech on the issue of how to better carry out the united front work in the new historic period.

During their discussions at the meeting, participants unanimously expressed the view that efforts should be made to earnestly study and implement the spirit of the central directive, to foster new ideas and work style, and to go all out in carrying out the united front work in the new historic period. Efforts should be made to bring into play the strong point of the CPPCC Committee in maintaining wide contracts with the outside world in order to extensively carry out the work of making contacts and establishing friendship with the compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao, and with the Overseas Chinese, and to make more contributions to reunifying the motherland and realizing the one-country two-system policy.

The meeting also heard and discussed the report given by Du Jingyi, vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee, with regard to the work done by the work group under the provincial CPPCC Committee during the period since the founding of the group; and the report given by Zhu Zeji, vice chairman of the committee under the provincial CPPCC Committee in charge of research on the historical accounts of past events with regard to the 1986 work in this regard.

SUN WEIBEN AT HEILONGJIANG PLA UNIT'S PARTY CONGRESS

SK081055 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2100 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] On 5 July, the PLA unit stationed in the province held its sixth party congress. (Dong Weizhong), political commissar of the PLA unit, delivered a work report in which he emphatically put forward the issues of how to further carry out the Army-civilian campaign of building a socialist spiritual civilization under the new situation and how to vigorously enhance unity between the army and the government and between the Army and the people.

Over the past few years the PLA unit has continuously carried out the campaign in depth and breadth and brought about a gratifying situation in this regard. As of now, the PLA unit has set up 647 centers in which both Army personnel and civilians are devoting themselves to building a spiritual civilization. Of these centers, 249 work teams have been commended as advanced and civilized units.

At the party congress, the delegates were not satisfied with the achievements scored in this regard in past years in reviewing their experiences. They pledged to regard as a central task the work of improving social morale during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period in order to steadily deepen the campaign of jointly building spiritual civilization.

Attending the party congress were Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Li Genshen, Liu Chengguo, and Zhou Wenhua, deputy secretaries of the provincial CPC Committee; and He Shoulun, vice governor of the province. Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech in which he highly praised the achievements scored by the PLA unit in party building, conducting military training, and in carrying out the Army-civilian campaign of building a spiritual civilization. He urged the broad masses of commanders and fighters to make persistent efforts to win still greater glory.

LIAONING'S QUAN SHUREN INVESTIGATES UNHEALTHY TRENDS

[Text] On the afternoon of 9 and 10 June, Quan Shuren, secretary, Sun Qi, deputy secretary, and Shang Wen, Gao Zi and Wang Julu, Standing Committee members of the provincial CPC Committee, went to some departments and bureaus to investigate and study their work of correcting unhealthy trends, and to work out plans for carrying out this work more thoroughly.

The leading comrades of the provinial CPC Committee pointed out: To thoroughly correct the unhealthy trends of various trades and realize a fundamental turn for the better in party style and social conduct as soon as possible, party organizations at all levels should earnestly pay attention to the following issues:

1. They should enhance their understanding of the work to correct unhealthy trends. At present, obstacles to the work mainly come from vocational leading organs. With regard to the unhealthy trends of various trades, some leading organs resort to the policy of nonrecognition, others are afraid of losing face and raking up their faults, and still others are making comparisons with one another. Leading persons should start from rectifying their own ideological understanding, regard this work as an important content of the improvement of party style and social conduct, and grasp it firmly and persistently.

2. They should uphold the principle of combining the efforts of various departments and regions, with the focus on those of departments. As the unhealthy trends are reflected in trades, it is the departments in charge of various trades that can best understand the manifestations and the crux of the unhealthy trends, and it is them that can put their fingers on the right spot. Therefore, beginning with the division of labor at the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee, the responsibility system for correcting unhealthy trends of trades should be implemented at every level. From now on, departments in charge should be the first to examine the progress of the work to correct unhealthy trends. CPC committees at all levels should take the initiative in coordinating with the vocational leading organs of various trades to grasp the work on every front.

3. They should combine the work to correct unhealthy trends with the development of the exemplary role of leading organs. Bearing in mind the already exposed problems in their own trades, leading organs should check to see what their weak links are in playing their exemplary role, pursue their liabilities, and further expose similar problems existing in their own organs so that the work to correct unhealthy trends and the development of the exemplary role of leading organs can promote each other.

4. They should give full play to the role of public opinion and mass supervision. All trades and professions should adopt various effective measures to mobilize the masses in a down-to-earth manner in order to form a powerful public opinion force to correct unhealthy trends of trades. The problems already brought to light should be made known to the people through certain methods. At the same time, we should have the courage to check the negative examples in correcting unhealthy trends, and should commend and publicize the good examples in correcting unhealthy trends.

5. They should replenish their staffing and establish and improve various rules and regulations. Efforts should be made to strengthen their contingents of personnel and, in particular, to conduct successful ideological education. Persons harboring selfish purposes who have been promoted to the work posts with certain authority, and who have not repented despite education should be resolutely transferred to other posts. We should make use of the exposed problems to find out the loopholes in the systems of our own trades, and then establish or improve our systems.

6. They should pay attention to the implementation of party policies. In the course of correcting unhealthy trends of various trades, we should see to it that unhealthy trends are corrected, the enthusiasm of staff members and workers is protected, that problems are solved whenever they are discovered, and the spearhead is not pointed at the masses. Focusing on this general requirement, all vocational leading organs should go into the reality of life to conduct investigations and study, ascertain the situation, and draw a clear demarcation line. With regard to the problems that have arisen due to mistakes in work, leading persons, not the persons at lower levels, should be held accountable. In handling problems that should be redressed and cases involving discipline violation, we should also clarify the problems to enable the masses of staff members and workers to distinguish right from wrong so that the phenomenon in which people dare not tackle problems in work can be avoided. Issues involving the economic benefit of staff members and workers should be handled in a prudent manner so that their enthusiasm will not be dampened.

PREMIER YU WELCOMES U.S. CONGRESSMEN

[Text] Taipei, July 9 (CNA) -- Premier Yu Kuo-hwa received U.S. Senator and Mrs. Malcolm Wallop and Congressman Bob Livingston Wednesday afternoon at the Executive Yuan.

Premier Yu extended warm Welcome to the American visitors. He said that the Republic of China [ROC] and the United States have a long-standing friendship and that he hopes cooperation between the two countries will be further expanded through frequent exchanges of visits.

The U.S. lawmakers arrived in Taipei Sunday to attend the seminar on the ROC-USA free trade area. During their stay here, they also visited various economic and cultural establishments of the Republic of China.

Sen. Wallop told Premier Yu that he was impressed by the economic prosperity and social stability of free China.

Also present at the meeting was John Chang, director of the Foreign Ministry's Department of North America.

The American visitors left here shortly after the meeting.

EXCHANGE RATE ADJUSTMENTS UNNECESSARY

OW091211 Taipei CNA in English 1040 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 9 (CNA) -- Economics Minister Lee Ta-hai said Tuesday that the nation's current foreign exchange rate against the Japanese yen is appropriate and there is no need for any larger adjustment to meet the yen's rising value.

The present exchange rate between the new Taiwan dollar and the U.S. dollar is also reasonable, Lee said.

Lee said he sees no reason why this country should conduct a large-scale adjustment of the exchange rate between the local currency and the Japanese yen.

Officials of the Ministry of Economic Affairs pointed out that the exchange rate of the yen against the U.S. dollar has risen to a record high in the past two days. The situation could affect economic and trading circles in Taiwan.

Meanwhile, some highly placed officials of the Ministry of Economic Affairs held the opinion that maintaining present levels of foreign exchange rates has proved to be the best way to cope with the strong yen.

Vice Economic Minister Li Mo said that the rise of the Japanese currency may affect import costs of local manufacturing firms.

The yen's rise will affect spare partes and other imported products from Japan, but it will also be more favorable for the export of locally manufactured goods, Li explained.

Li called on traders and exporters at home to take advantage of the situation by better promoting their products.

Another vice economics ministers, Wu Mei-Tsun, said that the great rise in the value of the yen will force some Japanese enterpreneurs to open operations overseas.

The vice economic minister said that Hsu Kuo-an, director of the Industrial Development Bureau, will lead an investment promotion mission to Japan at the end of the month to try to attract some strategic policy industries, including automotive spare parts manufacturers, to invest in the Republic of China.

At the same time, a report from Japan Tuesday said that Ma Chi-Chuang, a representative of the Association of East Asian Relations in Tokyo, said he believed that the substantial relations between the ROC and Japan will continue to become closer and stronger. His statement was seen as an indication that there may be an increase in Japanese investments here.

IMPROVED ECONOMIC TIES WITH PHILIPPINES URGED

OW090557 Taipei CHINA POST in English 6 Jul 86 p 8

[Text] Delegates at the second joint meeting of the ROC-ROC economic councils agreed yesterday that the present is the most appropriate time for the two countries to expand their economic and trade cooperation. They also forecast that trade will grow greatly this year.

This was the first such meeting between the two councils since the Aquino government initiated a series of economic reforms in the Philippines.

Aurelio Periquet, Jr. Chairman of the Philippine-ROC Council, headed a 58-member mission to the meeting and Jeffery L.S. Koo, chairman of the ROC-Philippine Council, led the 90-member delegation.

During the talks, delegates fully exchanged opinions on the present economic situations in the two countries. They also discussed how to step up cooperation in trade, banking policy, industrial development and investments.

Vice Minister of Economic Affairs Wu Mei-Tsun delivered a special speech analyzing close economic relations between the two countries. The Philippine delegation also reported present economic situation there and investment incentives the government has planned.

According to statistics from the Ministry of Economic Affairs, last year the ROC's two-way trade with the Philippines amounted to U.S.$343 million, representing a growth of U.S.$18 million over that of 1984: Of the total U.S.$329 million came from exports while U.S.$104 million was from imports.

In the first five months this year, the ROC exports to the Philippines reached U.S.$124 million against imports of U.S.$62 million.

To promote its foreign trade, the Philippines recently opened its market to more than 360 items of foreign products, most of them industrial raw materials, which are not produced there. To decrease import costs in the wake of the recent appreciation of the Japanese yen, its industrial and trade officials suggested that imports from the ROC, South Korea, and Hong Kong be increased.

The Aquino Government is also seeking economic and technology assistance from developing countries and newly developed Asian countries. In June, an ROC industrial and trade mission led by legislator Chien Yu-hsin received a big welcome during a visit there. They called on several related units of the Philippine Government.

PRC THREE-YEAR RECTIFICATION CAMPAIGN 'BIG FLOP'

OW082041 Taipei CNA in English 1446 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 8 (CNA) -- The following is a commentary by the Broadcasting Corporation of China in Taipei entitled "Another Big Flop":

The Chinese Communist Party has promised to spend at least another decade conducting a rectification campaign to root out economic crime, the latest edition of the theoretical journal RED FLAG was quoted as saying.

The bi-monthly said in its words "since the hotbed for economic and other crimes will exist for quite a long time to come, the struggle against these crimes will also persist."

RED FLAG said the party promises to spend two years of intense efforts, followed by another 10 years of work to change party conduct and the social atmosphere for the better.

The RED FLAG article is nothing if not an open admission by Peking that its three-year party rectification campaign launched in late 1983 has been a dismal failure like many other similar attempts before.

The 1983 drive was launched with ballyhoo. The party leadership vowed to wipe out leftism, corruption and other unhealthy practices by the end of this year. Now they are saying that at least another decade will be needed to accomplish the task.

The RED FLAG's tacit admission of failure is another proof that the Chinese Communist regime is long in making promises but short in delivering on them.

The first official indication that the rectification campaign has faltered came last February when party chief Hu Yao-pang announced a new crackdown on economic crimes among senior cadres and their offspring at an 8000-cadre rally.

Since then, nothing has been accomplished. Only a few middle-ranking cadres have been disciplined for "unhealthy tendencies." Not a word has been said about the "tigers" that have reportedly come under investigation for their economic offenses. They include the children of Hu himself, Premier Chao Tzu-yang and Peng Chen, chairman of the National People's Congress.

Peking's party rectification drive is doomed to failure because it is an impossible task. The RED FLAG is right in saying that "corruption and economic and other crimes may have something to do with the reform and open door policy, but they are not the inevitable outcome of the policies."

That had been borne out by the fact that the Chinese Communist Party had become rotten to the core long before Peking started economic reforms. The open door policy has only made the situation worse.

The underlying cause is the totalitarian nature of the communist rule. As the saying goes, "power breeds corruption. Absolute power leads to absolute corruption."

By upholding the so-called "four basic principles," the Chinese Communist Party has condemned itself to perpetual corruption until the day of its inevitable destruction.

CHENG MING REFLECTS ON TWO PROMINENT ARRESTS

HK020439 Hong Kong CHENG ING in Chinese No 105, 1 Jul 86 pp 6, 7

["Notes on the Northern Journey" by Lo Ping: "Two Shocking Major Cases"]

[Text] Liu Shikun Was Handcuffed and Thrown Into Prison

The tiger-hunting movement of the CPC looked powerful, vivid, and dynamic at first. But before long it looked as if it would have a brave beginning but weak ending.

Why has it come to this? The principal reasons are known to all: It is difficult to hunt tigers and to find Wu Song [legendary hero who killed a tiger bare-handed]. Although some tigers have been caught, it is difficult to hit them.

For example, the CPC finds it difficult to handle the Liu Shikun case.

Liu Shikun, an outstanding pianist of China and a former favorite son-in-law of Marshal Ye Jianying, has engaged in business in recent years and made money. Some time ago he went to the United States. He made a stopover in Hong Kong when he returned. In May, however, he was arrested by personnel from the Ministry of State Security with handcuffs and thrown into prison.

He Was Suspected of Carrying Drugs and Engaging in Gold Traffic

This news was quite explosive because Liu Shikun was suspected of "carrying drugs" and "engaging in gold traffic." The case is now being investigated. It was originally decided that Liu Shikun was to take part in a musical performance in Hong Kong and to meet with his fans. The plan must now be canceled.

The concert is to be conducted by the symphony orchestra of the Central Philharmonic Society. Its conductor, Li Delun, has been in Hong Kong since early June making the necessary preparations. It has a very interesting program. The piano concerto is to be played by Liu Shikun.

Plan for Putting on a Performance in Hong Kong is September Has Been Canceled

Many people in Hong Kong have a profound impression about Liu Shikun's superb skill when he played the piano in Hong Kong in the early 1960's. Now that he has been thrown into prison, his place will have to be taken by another pianist. The 40-year-old Shi Shucheng, who graduated from the piano department of the Central Music Institute, will probably take Liu's place.

After Liu's arrest, people in the Beijing musical circles were talking about the matter. Many people said that a successful and well-known musician should not have ignored his proper occupation and committed offenses against law and discipline. Who knows Liu Shikun's personal concept of value? They found it difficult to understand Liu's degeneration.

The Number of Girls With Whom Liu Has Dallied Is Uncountable

A friend in the musical circles told me, however, that there were indications of Liu's degeneration as far back as the early 1960's. When he was studying at the Central Musical Institute, he had perfectly known how to "enjoy life." Before and after he married Ye Jianying's daughter Ye Xiangzhen (Lingzi), he was always unconventional and unrestrained. The number of girls with whom he had dallied was uncountable. [paragraph continues]

Out of "good intentions" (everybody knows that President Zhao Feng is a good man), liberal-minded president Zhao of the musical institute did not report this to the higher authorities. More important, Liu Shikun was secure in the knowledge that he was in the good graces of his father-in-law and was inordinately proud of his skill in playing the piano. Thus, although the sound under his touch is sweet and melodious, his soul has gradually been stained with dirt. Over the past few years, he has thrown himself into the money-making business and, as the saying goes, "it was like going to a fish market and getting used to the stink." His artistic life has ended. He has fallen into a bottomless chasm.

Rumors About Ye Jianying Often Going Into a Coma

It is believed that it will take a long time to handle the Liu Shikun case because he was once Ye Jianying's favorite son-in-law. If Liu should be sentenced to severe imprisonment for his crimes, it would certainly represent a serious psychological blow to Ye Jianying. For this reason, in dealing with Liu Shikun the CPC "hesitates to pelt a rat for fear of smashing the dishes beside it."

People have always been concerned about Marshall's Ye's health. Several months ago, a photograph showing Marshall Ye sitting in a wheelchair with his family members was carried in newspapers. Recently, however, there have been rumors that the old man ofter goes into a coma. Some people guess that it is precisely for this reason that Liu Shikun has been imprisoned.

Sixteen Females File Charges Against Hu Qiaomu's Son

There is another case which the CPC finds even more difficult to handle than the Liu Shikun case. It is the case of Hu Qiaomu's son Hu Shiying.

Some people in Beijing hold that this is a fast knot and that, if the Hu case cannot be dealt with appropriately, it will be even more difficult to handle other cases.

The Hu Shiying case is a headache for the CPC because it is not only a criminal case of swindling as disclosed before, but is also similar to the Hu Xiaoyang case.

An informed person said that from the day he worked as a RENMIN RIBAO reporter to his arrest, Hu Shiying was always a playboy dallying with females. After his arrest, nobody filed charges against him at first. Recently, however, 16 victimized females have decided to file charges against him. Many people in Beijing have been talking about the matter. They said that if Hu Xiaoyang, the son of Shanghai Municipal People's Congress Standing Committee Chairman Hu Lijiao, had been sentenced to death for raping women, there is even more reason to sentence to death Hu Shiying who is both an economic and a criminal offender.

The Moral Court Has Sentenced Hu Shiying to Death

In the eyes of Beijing residents, Hu Shiying has been sentenced to death.

In truth, the CPC will be placed in a very awkward position even if it sentences Hu Shiying to life imprisonment instead of death. This is because Hu Qiaomu is an "theoretical authority" of the CPC. Hu Yaobang said: "The commander in chief on the political and ideological fronts is Hu Qiaomu." How can the commander in chief," who has failed to educate his son, convince the people after his son is sentenced to imprisonment? This is a big question.

As a matter of fact, Hu Qiaomu's popularity has been dropping to the zero point. His ugly behavior before and after his son was arrested, in particular, has made him even more unpopular.

Hu Shiying Will Probably Be Executed by Shooting

Obviously, on the question of whether the CPC will adhere to rule by law, the Hu case has put the CPC to a severe test. If the sentence "all people are equal before the law" is not a lie or empty talk, Hu Shiying can hardly escape death if his crimes do not prove graver than those of Hu Xiaoyang.

Can the CPC stand up to the test?

An authoritative source says that Hu Shiying will probably be sentenced to death and that no reprieve will be granted. Some people hold that this is only a trial balloon and others say that it is aimed at ironing out the grievances of the people. Of course, there are also people who accept it as true.

In dealing with any criminals or suspected criminals, the CPC should act with care. In CHENG MING No 5, I pointed out that the CPC was unjust in dealing with Zhang Changsheng and Ye Zhifeng (Ye Fei's daughter). Some people on the mainland have also openly aired similar viewpoints. For example, in an article recently carried in SHANGHAI FAZHI BAO (SHANGHAI LEGAL NEWS), legal expert Lu Husheng raised the question of inappropriate penalties having been imposed on Zhang and Ye. Hu Shiying may have committed more serious crimes than Hu Xiaoyang because, besides gaining a huge sum of money by cheating, he has also committed other criminal offenses. Nevertheless, I also pointed out in the "Notes on the Northern Journey" that it was excessively severe to sentence Hu Xiaoyang to death.

What About Another Master Hu -- Hu Deping?

There is Hu Xiaoyang in the south and Hu Shiying in the north. Both can be regarded as typical representatives of the degenerated "prince party."

Another master Hu -- Hu Yaobang's eldest son Hu Deping -- is another model of senior cadres' children. Hu Deping was once suspected of irregularities, but it was a groundless suspicion. In an effort to verify various reports on Hu Deping, I have spent much time gathering news. In the next issue of CHENG MING, I will make a report to the readers on the results of my investigation.

CHENG MING ON PRC LITERATURE, ART WORLD LEADERSHIP

HK030609 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 105, 1 Jul 86, pp 8-9

["Notes on a Northern Journey" by Lo Ping: "Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun Suffer Heavy Casulities"]

[Text] The Downfall of a Hatchet Man

Although officials in the higher echelons of the CPC have repeatedly denied the existence of reformers and conservatives in the party, the objective facts are that not only do factions exist in the party, but that faction-fighting within the party is going on uninterruptedly. The recent round of struggle centered on the leadership of the nation's literature and art circles. The outcome of the struggle was that the reformers removed one of Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun's capable persons -- Zhao Xin, secretary of the leading party committee of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art, was removed from his post between May and June.

Zhao Xin is not well-known abroad. Nevertheless, he is one of the top people in the CPC's literature and art work. He has had the leadership of the Chinese Dramatists Association in his hands for quite some time and eventually, he managed to assume the high leadership position in the All-China Federation of Literature and Art. What is extremely detestable is that this veteran communist, who has written plays, has always been strangely "leftist" in thinking and has served as the hatchet man for Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun in literature and art circles for many years. He was very active in the movements to "eliminate pollution" and to "combat bourgeois liberalization." He participated in attacking such people as Zhou Yang, Xia Yan and Wu Zhuguang, and in banning the staging of the drama "Wm (We)." The fact that the fifth National Congress of Writers, which was scheduled to be held last year, did not materialize, is not unconnected with Zhao Xin, who made a stormy sea stormier, and recklessly created disturbances in the literature and art community.

Xi Zhongxun Acts as a "Peacemaker"

At the dramatists' representative conference held last year, Wu Zhuguang shot his mouth off attacking Zhao Xin. He quoted the remark: "Knowing shame is akin to courage," meaning that Zhao Xin did not know shame. Zhao Xin and his followers flared up at this and lodged complaints against Wu Zhuguang with Xi Zhongxun, accusing Wu of swearing at them. Then Xi Zhongxun had a conversation with Wu Zhuguang but did not know the right way to solve the problem, because the latter maintained that he had only said "knowing shame is akin to courage" and had sworn at no one. Wu Zhuguang's speech at the conference enjoyed immense popular support, because he had said what many people did not dare utter.

Zhao Xin -- "Another Zhou Erfu"

After the case of Zhou Erfu, Zhai Xin had a good reputation as a "another Zhou Erfu." The so-called "another Zhou Erfu" refers to Zhao Xin's sexy news during his previous overseas tours. One year, a female Spanish interpreter accompanied Zhao Xin on an overseas tour. She was already betrothed to a boyfriend with whom she was passionately in love, and was ready to get married immediately after she returned home. But later it turned out that the bridegroom who appeared at the wedding ceremony was, unexpectedly, Zhao Xin. When visiting Japan, Zhao Xin was involved in "romantic" hearsay. It was said that the hearsay was backed up with a relevant photo showing Zhao Xin embraced a Japanese geisha from the back, with his hands on her chest. Nobody knows who took the photo and sent it to the CPC's leading figures. Hence, there is a document stating that Zhao Xin is not suitable for participation in future foreign affairs work. Mrs Zhao was extremely indignant over the case. Zhao Xin had to lead a gloomy life for quite some time. However, Deng Liqun protected Zhao Xin in the end. Deng made personal phone calls to various literature and art associations, asserting that Zhao Xin was not problematic, his post remained unchanged, and he would do his work as usual, thus saving Zhao Xin from embarrassment. With the occurence of the Zhou Erfu case, people maintained that Zhao Xin's behavior was similar to Zhou Erfu's and even out did it. The only difference was their lots. Hence, people gave him the nick name of "another Zhou Erfu."

This hatchet man for Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun has now fallen from power and Wu Zhuqiang, younger brother of Wu Zhuguang, president of the Central Conservatory of Muic, has taken over the post as secretary of the leading party committee of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art. Writers and artists were all overjoyed with this outcome, saying that the CPC policymakers had done another good thing.

The Antithetical Couplet Sent to Zhu Muzhi

The "good thing" done prior to this was in replacing Minister of Culture Zhu Muzhi with Wang Meng.

Before assuming the post of minister of culture, Zhu Muzhi was director of RENMIN RIBAO. While in office as the newspaper director, Zhu Muzhi in effect played the role of a manager who looked after matters, such as buying paper. During his tenure of office as the minister of culture, his subordinates sent him an antithetical couplet. The first vertical line reads "having a great determination while one is still not clear about the situation." The second vertical line reads "making a lot of proposals while one does not know for certain how things stand." The horizontal line reads that "the Ministry of Culture is culturally illiterate." This is a sound portrayal of His Excellency the Minister of Culture. Being made use of by Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun, Zhu Muzhi spared no effort in movements such as that to "eliminate pollution," thus arousing dissatisfaction in the literature and art community. Wang Meng is far more learned than Zhu Muzhi. Before and since assuming office as minister of culture, Wang Meng has done some good things. (For example, he twice helped Bei Dao get approval to go to Europe. Another example was when a group of young writers who had freely stated their enlightened remarks during their European tour returned home and were secretly investigated by certain people, Wang Meng personally acted as sponsor for them, thus getting them out of the danger of being investigated.) Therefore, he has been well received by writers and artists. Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun are dissatisfied with the reorganizaton of the Ministry of Culture, including the appointment of the fairly open-minded Gao Zhanxiang as vice minister.

The Reorganization of the Central Propaganda Department

What made writers, artists, and theoretical workers feel particularly happy is the reorganization of the Central Propaganda Department. In the early days after Zhu Houze took up his post as director of the Central Propaganda Department, people took a wait-and-see attitude. Later it turned out that he did fairly well in handling the Ma Ding and Liu Zaifu cases. It was Zhu Houze who was most energetic in protecting Liu Zaifu. He Jingzhi, a subordinate of the former director Deng Liqun, is one of the five members of the leading body of the Central Propaganda Department, ranking last. However, being senile and unwell, He Jingzhi cannot play any significant role in the body. The days of Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun in the higher echelons of the Central Propaganda Department have gone and will never return.

However, Deng Liqun has not yet lost power and influence in the intermediate echelons of the Central Propaganda Department. Before leaving office, he had put large groups of his followers in key positions, forming a considerably large force. Commenting on the situation, some people said: "The Liu Zaifu case is the beginning and not the end of the struggle." But as to whether this is really the case will be disclosed in the ensuing chapter.

Chen Yong's Behind-the-Scenes Backers -- Xiong Fu -- Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun

Of course, it would not be true to say that the power and influence of Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun have completely disappeared from the higher echelons of the propaganda front. Besides He Jingzhi, Xiong Fu at least is also their man. He is the chief editor of the magazine HONGQI. Xiong Fu has been "leftist" in thinking and action for quite sometime, although sometimes he manages to dress himself up. A diehard "leftist," Xiong Fu is a man of the Hu Qiaomu, Deng Liqun, Lin Mohan, and Chen Yong school. [paragraph continues]

When informed that Chen Yong was writing an article critical of Liu Zaifu, Xiong Fu gave counsel to publish it in HONGQI. This exposed his sides and viewpoints opposed to conducting reforms and concentrating on developing the productive forces. Xiong Fu must be held responsible for the "Liu Zaifu case." Had Zhu Houze not meddle in the case, GUANGMING RIBAO would have reprinted Chen Yong's article, lashing out at the literature and art as well as theoretical circles and at the forces of reform. Now the "Liu Zaifu case" is over. Deng Liqun, Chen Yong, and Xiong Fu lifted a rock only to drop it on their own feet. Instead of being frightened by the case, writers, artists, and theoretical workers are marching ahead with full courage.

This has become a law: Whoever bludgeons popular writers and theoreticians, whose works have been well received by the masses of people, will have bad luck.

There is another law: In the literary world, if the "leftists" attack people and their works, this will create a wave of combating "leftism," leading to the continued development of explorations in literary creation and in theory.

We hope that the CPC will understand these laws. The guiding thought in the ideological field must not be to withdraw but to open. To do a good job of reforms, it is necessary to genuinely and sincerely let a hundred schools of thought contend and not to set up forbidden zones and impose administrative intervention. Otherwise, one will keep going round and round pursuing sham democracy and economic restructuring will not succeed.

U.S. PROTECTIONISM TERMED 'DUPLICITOUS'

HK030224 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 3 Jul 86 p 10

[Editorial: "Shameful Display of American Duplicity"]

[Text] A few years ago General Alexander Haig described the British as "duplicitous.' The protectionist mania in the United States demonstrates that duplicity is not the sole prerogative of one nation.

On the one hand we have a White House incumbent who has paid so much lip service to free trade his mouth must hurt. On the other we have the Jenkins Bill just waiting for a chance to "sock it" -- as the Americans would say -- to countries which have the audacity to produce cheap, attractive clothes which Americans would buy up by the container-load if they were given the chance.

On the one hand, also, we have American industrial clamouring for ever more stringent restrictions on textiles, cars, electronics and other goods from overseas. On the other, we have American industry bleating because its goods are denied access (on a very limited scale) to certain countries who are sick of being bullied by the U.S.

A further example demonstrates duplicity is not unique to the eastern shores of the Atlantic: the Americans send delegations junketing around the globe looking for deserving cases among Third World countries to whom preferential export treatment is then given. Their assessment of what constitutes a worthy cause caused one U.S. diplomat to comment recently that unless they see a water buffalo roaming the streets outside the airport, these delegations consider their host country to be fully developed.

Hong Kong is well placed to feel the full force of U.S. hypocrisy. If a U.S. manufacturer can find a market for his products in Hong Kong, he is welcome to exploit it. The U.S. Government responds by demonstrating its utter ignorance about Hong Kong's unique situation, and while making strenuous efforts to woo the Chinese it forgets that Hong Kong is China's prodigal son about to return to the fold.

The temptation to demand a boycott of American goods by Hong Kong consumers is hard to resist, but it is unlikely to have any beneficial effect. What is needed is a massive education effort aimed at dissuading U.S. legislators from lumping Hong Kong along with South Korea and Taiwan. We are a special case and should be treated as such.

The fear now is that ill-informed members of Congress -- seeing this week's U.S.-Hong Kong textile agreement as a victory for the wily Orientals rather than a shameful display of narrow self-interest by the Americans -- will be spurred into over-riding President Reagans' veto of the appalling Jenkins Bill. The need to educate America is more urgent than ever.

CHANGE IN REFUGEE POLICY NEEDED URGENTLY

HK071159 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 7 Jul 86 p 10

[Editorial: "Refugee Policy Must Be Changed -- Now"]

[Text] The need for a change in the policy of the Hong Kong Government towards Vietnamese refugees is more urgent than ever. Saturday's arrivals mean that more refugees have arrived so far this year than turned up on our shores in the whole of 1985. While the Danish Government will accept the 131 picked up by the Charlotte Maersk, the refugee "season" is only just beginning and the prospect is that many more will be on their way.

Hong Kong has been almost totally abandoned by the international community; we have extended a great deal of humanity towards earlier refugees but our reward has been a drying up of resettlement offers from third countries. Our closed camp policy -- widely reviled by British politicians with finely-tuned headline-grabbing instincts but little common sense -- now seems to have lost any deterrent effect it may have had. The result is that, with all signs pointing towards an alarming increase in boat people, Hong Kong could be permanently stuck with an ever-growing refugee population.

We must learn, simply and bluntly, to say "no." Other countries in the region have been doing just that for some years now. The result is that refugees give them a wide berth. Why should Hong Kong -- which has enough problems of its own to deal with -- become a haven for people whose reasons for fleeing their native land is highly suspect?

Unless some sort of repatriation scheme can be arrived at with the irresponsible and feckless Vietnamese Government, future arrivals should, at the most, have their vessels patched up, their stores replenished, and then be sent on their way. Hong Kong has had enough.

Rather than trying to close its eyes to what is happening here and hoping the problem will go away, the British Governments should be acting as Hong Kong's voice in the United Nations. It must demand a stepping up of resettlement efforts and, more important, should put every pressure on the world community to force Hanoi to put its own house in order. The current wave of refugees -- if they deserve that name -- are leaving Vietnam because their homeland is in an intolerable economic mess. And the suspicion of official collusion in the current exodus is more than a passing thought.

CELEBRATION OF PRC-DPRK AMITY ANNIVERSARY CONTINUES

Wan Li Hosts Banquet

OW101404 Beijing XINHUA in English 1348 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Acting Premier Wan Li gave a banquet here this evening to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Sino-Korean treaty of friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance.

Among those present were the Korean party and government delegation led by Yi Chong-ok, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers' Party and vice-president of the Democractic People's Republic of Korea, two other Korean delegations as well as Korean Embassy officials, experts and students here.

Wan said, "Since the beginning of the treaty, friendly cooperation between the two countries in the political, economic and cultural fields have yielded fruitful results, effectively promoting the socialist construction of the two countries."

Wan, also member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, reiterated China's consistent support to the just stand of the Korean party and government for a peaceful and independent reunification of their fatherland. "The great friendship which is based on Marxism and Leninism between our two countries will surely stand all kinds of test and continue to grow," he stressed. He urged the United States and South Korea to stop large-scale military maneuvers so as to remove obstacles to the resumption of South-North contact and dialogue.

Korea's proposals for tripartite military-level talks and for the establishment of a non-nuclear peace zone in the Korean peninsula, he said, are conducive to easing the tension on the peninsula.

Yi Chong-ok said that Korean-Chinese friendship is consolidated and dynamic, a friendship between class brothers based on genuine revolutionary justice. He pledged that the Korean people will work to develop the friendly relations of cooperation with China.

Chinese leaders Xi Zhongxun, Qiao Shi, Wu Xueqian, Chen Pixian and Hao Jianxiu were present.

Late this afternoon, Wan Li presided over a ceremony at the Plaza East of the Great Hall of the People to welcome Yi Chong-ok and his delegation.

Hu Yaobang Recieves Delegation

OW101038 Beijing XINHUA in English 1017 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, said here today that consolidating and developing Sino-Korean friendship is the common aspiration of the two parties, two governments and two peoples of China and Korea. "It concerns not only the fundamental interests of our two peoples but also the fundamental interests of the people of the whole world," he added.

At a meeting here this afternoon with a radio and TV delegation from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea led by Chu Han-chun, chairman of the central broadcasting and television committee, Hu spoke highly of the achievements made by the Korean people in socialist construction. "The Nampo water conservancy project you have just completed is a magnificent project," he noted.

Generally speaking, Hu said, Third World countries have two major tasks: seeking national liberation and independence, and speeding up economic development. "We should sum up our experience so as to make our country and people well-off faster," he said.

Chu said broadcasting and television workers of the two countries should expand cooperation and exchange to strengthen the friendship between the two peoples. Ai Zhisheng, Chinese minister of radio, film and television, was present at the meeting.

Kang Song-san Greets Zhao

OW101744 Beijing XINHUA in English 1730 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Kang Song-san, premier of the Administrative Council of Korea, today described the conclusion of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance between Korea and China as "an important event in the consolidation of Korean-Chinese friendly relations."

In his message of greetings to Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Friendship Treaty, Kang also noted that the bilateral treaty has played an important role in the two peoples' joint struggle against imperialism and for the success of socialism and communism.

The Korean premier also expressed his belief that the blood-cemented Sino-Korean friendship and unity will, as always, be further expanded and developed on the basis of a reliable alliance.

Tian Jiyun Speaks at Rally

OW102301 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1528 GMT 10 Jul 86

[By reporter Li Tu]

[Text] Pyongyang, 10 Jul (XINHUA) -- The Pyongyang City WPK Committee and the City People's Committee held a report meeting to mark the 25th anniversary of the Korean-Chinese Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance in the February 8 Cultural Hall this afternoon.

Korean party and government leaders O Chin-u, Kang Song-san, Yon Hyong-muk, Kim Yong-nam, O Kuk-yol and So Yun-sok attended the meeting.

A Chinese party and government delegation led by Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council, attended the meeting on invitation.

Kang Song-san, member of the Political Bureau of the WPK Central Committee and Premier of Korea, and Chinese Vice Premier Tian Jiyun each addressed the 6,000-people meeting.

Kang Song-san emphasized in his speech: The signing of the Korean-Chinese Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance was an epoch-making event. The treaty has further strengthened and developed the Korean-Chinese friendship that was cemeted with blood during a long, common anti-imperialist struggle, and has put it on a solid legal foundation.

Kang Song-san pointed out: In the past 25 years, the treaty has contributed to constantly expanding and developing the friendly relations and cooperation between the Korean and Chinese peoples, promoting the socialist construction in the two countries, and safeguarding peace in Asia and in the world.

Kang Song-san also spoke highly of the Chinese people's achievements in construction. He said: The Chinese people are making positive efforts to seek Taiwan's return to the embrace of the motherland, reunify their country and safeguard peace in Asia and in the world. The People's Republic of China is growing in strength to become a great force for peace in Asia and is playing a great influential role in international relations. We believe that the Chinese party and government will make greater achievements in implementing their independent, peace-loving foreign policy.

In conclusion, Kan Song-san said: The Korean people will, just as in the past, always be devoted to their obligations to the Korean-Chinese Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance. We will always join the fraternal Chinese people in fighting side by side on the glorious road of struggle for peace and for the victories of socialism and communism.

Tian Jiyun pointed out first in his speech: Our respected and beloved Comrade Zhou Enlai and the Korean People's great leader Comrade Kim Il-song signed the Chinese-Korean Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance and added a brilliant page to the history of Chinese-Korean relations 25 years ago. He emphasized: Facts in the past 25 years have shown that the treaty has stood the severe test of time and the changeable international situation and displayed a great vitality.

He said: Abiding by the treaty, the parties and governments of China and Korea have strengthened unity, promoted friendship, sincerely cooperated with each other, and helped each other. They have not only promoted the relations between the two parties and between the two governments, but have also played an important role in safeguarding peace in Asia and in the world.

On Korea's reunification, Vice Premier Tian Jiyun said: Over may years, the WPK and the DPRK Government have put forward many reasonable propositions for easing tension on the Korean peninsula and for independent and peaceful reunification of the motherland. In particular, the proposal made by President Kim Il-song on the establishment of "the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo" advocates a reunification on the basis of mutual recognition and mutual tolerance of each other's ideology and political system between the North and the South. The proposal has pointed the way for Korea's independent and peaceful reunification and embodied the common aspirations of all Korean people.

He emphasized: China, as a close neighbor and comrade-in-arms of the DPRK, is very concerned about the situation on the Korean peninsula. We firmly support your just stand and all your reasonable propositions. We hope that the United States and South Korea will make a positive response and do something helpful to ease tension on the Korean peninsula, restore North-South dialouge, and hold tripartite talks.

Tian Jiyun also praised the Korean people for their achievements in socialist construction, and told about China's construction.

Also this afternoon, the Chinese party and government delegation, accompanied by Yon Hyong-muk, laid wreaths at the tombs of Korean revolutionary martyrs in Taesongsan and at the tower of Korean-Chinese friendship. In the evening, the Korean Wansudae Art Troupe gave a performance for the Chinese party and government delegation.

Hu Yaobang Meets DPRK Group

OW110818 Beijing XINHUA in English 0756 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 11 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary Hu Yaobang of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee said here today that China will continue its efforts to promote the Sino-Korean friendly relations and cooperation.

Hu made these remarks at a meeting at Zhongnanhai here with a Korean party and government delegation headed by Yi Chong-ok, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Workers' Party of Korea and vice-president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

He said China resolutely supports the Korean people's just stand for an independent and peaceful reunification of the fatherland. It is the common desire of 60 million Korean people, he added.

Yi Chong-ok said since China and Korea signed the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance in 1961 they have tremendously contributed to the development of their friendship forged in a long and protracted struggle and to safeguarding peace in Asia and the rest of the world. It is a firm policy of the Korean Workers' Party and government to strengthen and development the Korea-China friendship, he stated.

Following the meeting, Hu gave a luncheon for the Korean delegation.

Present on the occasions were Wu Xueqian, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and state councillor, and Zhu Liang, head of the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee.

Also present was Choe Chong-kun, member of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers' Party and minister of foreign trade, who is accompanying Yi Chong-ok on the visit.

Sino-Korean Friendship Viewed

HK110328 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 11 Jul 86 p 2

[Editorial: "The Great Sino-Korean Friendship Is Everlasting]

[Text] Today is the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Aid between China and Korea. With profound fraternal feeling for the Korean people, the Chinese people warmly celebrate this historical day.

On this very day 25 years ago, our beloved Comrade Zhou Enlai and the Korean people's great leader Comrade Kim Il-song signed a treaty on behalf of the two countries. This was a tremendous event in the history of friendly relations between China and Korea. Since then, the militant friendly relations cemented in the Chinese and Korean peoples' prolonged common struggle has been fixed in the form of a treaty. Through various tests over many years and the constant changes in the international situation, this treaty has displayed its great vitality. It has not only promoted the continuous development of the great friendship and close cooperation between the two countries, but also played a tremendously great role in safeguarding the security of the two countries and peace in Asia.

The fighting friendship between the Chinese and Korean parties, states, and peoples has a solid historical foundation. Over the past years, the frequent exchange of visits and cordial meetings between the leaders of our two countries have further strengthened the unity and cooperation between the two countries and pushed the relations between them into a new stage of profound development. Compared with 25 years ago, the exchanges and cooperation between China and Korea in politics, economics, culture, education, science and technology, and other spheres have grown not only in quantity but also in scope. The forms of the exchanges and cooperation have become increasingly diversified and the contents increasingly rich. In the process of the friendly exchanges and cooperation in many spheres, our two peoples have learned from and helped each other, supplied each other's needs, learned from each other's strong points to offset their weaknesses, and thus further consolidated and developed the great friendship between China and Korea.

Under the leadership of Comrade Kim Il-song and the Korean Workers Party and through prolonged hard efforts, the industrious and ingenious Korean people have built Korea into a prosperous socialist country. Today, the Korean people have realized their 10 major long-term goals for the 1980's, created a happy life for themselves, and scored new achievements. Through continuously expanding its friendly contacts with other countries, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has greatly heightened its prestige in the world. The Chinese people are very happy about the magnificent achievements scored by the Korean people.

What is similarly heartening is that the spirit of friendly cooperation between our two countries has been fully displayed in the course of supporting each other to achieve the reunification of our countries and safeguarding Asian and world peace. We will never forget the Korean party's, government's, and people's valuable and persistent support for the Chinese people in the Chinese people's struggle to realize their great cause of reunification. The Chinese party, government, and people also always give vigorous support to the Korean people's just struggle for the independent peaceful reunification of their motherland and regard this as their bounden international duty. For a long time, the Korean Workers Party and the government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea have put forth various reasonable ideas and proposals to ease tension on the Korean peninsula, facilitate dialogue between northern and southern Korea, and realize the unification between North and South. In particular, the scheme put forward by President Kim Il-song on the establishment of a highly Democratic Federal Republic of Koreas has pointed out a feasible direction and way for the peaceful reunification of Korea. Over the past few years, initiated by the northern party of Korea, the northern and southern parts have conducted contacts and dialogue through many channels. We steadfastly support northern Korea's just stand and all its reasonable views. [paragraph continues]

We are deeply convinced that through unremitting efforts, the situation of division on the 3,000 kilometers of Korea's beautiful land will finally end and the over 50 million northern and southern Korean peoples will finally realize their great national reunion. The Chinese people sincerely hope that the friendly Korean people score even greater new achievements in their socialist construction and in their sacred cause of independent and peaceful reunification of their motherland.

DISTORTIONS REMAIN IN REVISED JAPANESE TEXTBOOKS

OW101849 Beijing XINHUA in English 1811 GMT 10 Jul 86

["Distorted Facts Remain in Approved Japanese Textbook, Observers Say (by Zhang Huanli)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Tokyo, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Several facts concerning the 1937-45 war of aggression against China launched by the Japanese militarists remain distorted in a revised Japanese textbook for high schools approved by the Japanese Government Monday, political observers here said.

Some even believe that the revised textbook still does not explicitly recognize the war of aggression during that period, although appreciation should be given to the Japanese Government for having repeatedly called for correction.

As not a word was mentioned about the aggressive policies of the Japanese militaries, the textbook, compiled by the National Council for the Defense of Japan, evoked sharp criticism by the media within and outside of Japan when it was first approved by the Japanese Ministry of Education in late May. Some Asian countries and regions concerned demanded that the Japanese Government correct the distorted textbook.

The Japanese Government instructed and urged for four times the compiler to revise it in a bid to soften dissatisfaction of the Asian nations and people. Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone also repeatedly stressed that the textbook should be revised based on a 1982 promise by the Japanese chief cabinet secretary. After a month-long postponement due to thwarting by a handful of people, the revesion of the textbook was completed basically at the promptings of the Japanese Government.

According to local press reports, there are records and narrations in over 30 places concerning the history of Japan with Asian nations in the reapproved textbook.

As to the "nation of Manchuria," a puppet regime in northeast China created by the Japanese militarists in 1931, the revised textbook takes out the narration about establishing "the rule of right and the land of happiness."

As to the "Lugouqiao incident" staged by Japan near Beiping (now Beijing) in July, 1937, which set off Japan's all-out war of aggression against China, the original textbook said that the Japanese troops were forced to meet the attack from China. Now the revised one says that "the Japanese troops stationed there took an active military action, despising the already-signed truce agreement on the spot."

As to the "Shanghai incident" in August of the year, the original also said that the Japanese troops were forced to meet the attack from the Chinese troops. The revised one says that "facing the increase of troops by Japan, Chiang Kai-shek issued an order of general mobilization, and the troops of the communist party also joined the battlefront, thus expanding the front into the whole territory of China."

As to the holocaust perpetrated by Japanese troops in Nanjing in that year, which was glossed over in the original textbook, the revised one says that "the Nanjing battle was extremely fierce. The Japanese troops were condemned by the international community (for the so-called 'rape of Nanjing') for the killing of many Chinese soldiers and civilians by the Japanese troops after the fall of the city."

Relating to the Pacific war, which was whitewashed as "the sacred war of greater East Asia," the revised textbook has deleted the narration in the original one that the war was Japan's efforts to "liberate Asia from the rule of European and American powers and to build a greater East Asia co-prosperity sphere."

JAPAN'S GSDF REGARDS USSR AS 'MAIN ENEMY'

OW091555 Beijing XINHUA in English 1513 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, July 9 (XINHUA) -- A "future conception" by Japan's Ground Self-Defense Force [GSDF] today indicated it will explicitly "regard the Soviet Union as the main enemy" and make itself a "competitive force" in the Western World. The Ground Self-Defense Force, Japan's name for its Army, began work last year on the program, which details and forecasts strategy, equipment needs and establishing army units from the 1990s to the early 21st century, the newspaper "ASAHI SHIMBUN" reported today.

The force will "make itself a wing in the Western bloc, and enable itself the strength to prevent war," according to the paper. The newspaper said the force's equipment in the future will be increased one or two times. The force believes that to prevent Soviet forces from landing, it is urgent now to improve its ability of a coastal counterattack and strengthen its air defense.

The paper said that the force will dispose its main units and equipment to northern Japan -- the Hokkaido islands -- and the troops in southwest Japan will establish "light infantry divisions" to give the north prompt assistance in case of a war.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONTINUES EUROPE-AFRICA TOUR

Arrives in Greece

OW101028 Beijing XINHUA in English 1007 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang arrived here at 11:10 this morning for an official goodwill visit to the Hellenic Republic after winding up his tour of Romania and Yugoslavia. When Zhao alighted from the special plane, he was greeted by Greek Prime minister Andreas George Papandreous and Foreign Minister Karolos Papoulias. Papandreous welcomed him with a warm hug before he introduced greek high-ranking officials to the Chinese premier.

This is a return visit by the Chinese premier at the invitation of his Greek counterpart, who visited China last April.

In a statement released at the airport, Premier Zhao said the purpose of his visit is to deepen mutual understanding, promote friendship and cooperation, and safeguard world peace. He said he was looking forward to continuing talks with Prime Minister Papandreou which were started in Beijing three months ago.

"I would like to avail myself of this opportunity to meet my old friends and make new ones, and to acquaint myself with and learn from the achievements and experience gained by the Greek people in their national construction," Zhao said. He said he hoped that the visit would further the relations of friendship and cooperation between China and Greece.

After the playing of national anthems of the two countries, the Chinese premier reviewed a guard of honor. He was then welcomed by diplomats and staff of the Chinese Embassy and representatives of the Chinese students studying here.

Accompanied by the Greek prime minister, Zhao drove to Astir Palace Hotel where he stays during the visit. He is expected to meet his Greek counterpart at the host's villa by the seaside before noon.

Greece is the third leg of Zhao's Balkan-Mediterranean region tour. The tour also includes Spain, Turkey and Tunisia.

Speaks at Banquet

OW101956 Beijing XINHUA in English 1944 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, July 10 (XINHUA) -- The Mediterranean should become a sea of peace and friendship instead of a place to show off arms, visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today.

Speaking at a welcome banquet given in his honor here this evening by Greek Prime Minister Andreas George Papandreous, the Chinese premier said he was deeply concerned about the grave situation that appeared not long ago in the Mediterranean region and urged all sides concerned to restrain themselves and ease the situation through conversation and consultation.

Zhao arrived here this morning on the third leg of is Balkan-Mediterranean tour following a visit to Romania and Yugoslavia.

"The Chinese Government has always held that relations between states should be strictly governed by the principles of mutual respect for each other's sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, mutual non-interference in each other's internal affairs, mutual benefit and peaceful co-existence," he said.

"Disputes between states should be settled peacefully instead of by resorting to arms or military threats. We oppose all forms of terrorism and the practice of using terrorism as a means in political struggle," the premier said.

"We also oppose acts to encroach upon the territorial sovereignty of other countries under the pretext of attacking terrorist activities," he added.

The premier stressed that the maintenance of tranquility and peace in the Mediterranean region not only conformed to the interests of the people of the countries around the sea but will also have a positive impact on the situation in Europe and the Middle East and will be of great significance to world peace.

The premier expressed his appreciation of the standing of Greek Prime Minister Papandreou and the Greek Government in promoting peace and cooperation in the Mediterranean and Balkan regions.

Premier Zhao condemned the arms race and contention for hegemony by the superpowers. "The people of the world strongly demand that the superpowers give up their attempt to seek military superiority and reach an agreement on large-scale reduction of arms through negotiation in real earnest and stop aggression against other countries and interference in their internal affairs," he said.

He expressed the conviction that the tense international situation can be eased and world peace maintained with joint efforts by the people of all countries and all peace-loving forces.

Papandreou Addresses Banquet

OW102009 Beijing XINHUA in English 1959 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Greek Prime Minister Andreas George Papandreou today promised continued efforts to strengthen friendly and cooperative relations among the Balkan states and to make the region free from nuclear and chemical weapons.

Speaking at a banquet he gave here this evening in honor of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, the Greek prime minister stressed that national independence, safeguarding world peace, opposition to hegemonism, non-interference in other countries' internal affairs and respect for the rights of small and weak nations should be the basis for developing international relations, all the more so at present than in the past.

Zhao flew in this morning from Yugoslavia on the third leg of his Balkan-Mediterranean tour. This is his return visit to Prime Minister Papandreou who went to China thre months ago.

The Greek prime minister expressed appreciation for China's stand on ending arms race as the first step toward a thorough reduction of arms and China's support for the peace and arms reduction proposals put forward by leaders of Argentina, Sweden, Tanzania, Greece, India and Mexico.

He noted that the Soviet Chernobyl accident, which has made ordinary citizens feel clearly the threat of nuclear power, was a strong indication to the necessity for international cooperation in the peaceful use of nuclear enegry and to the correctness of the struggle waged by governments of various countries to reduce step by step and ultimately destroy all nuclear weapons on this planet.

He said that China' efforts toward settling disputes by peaceful means and eliminating sources of crises in the world were beneficial to consolidating the reapproachment and peaceful atmosphere expected by all.

The Greek prime minister said that the supported Premier Zhao's efforts to help improve the economic and social conditions of Third World countries, which, he said, suffer the most from underdevelopment and world economic crises the aggravate the already tense international situation.

Zhao, Papandreou Hold Talks

[Text] Athens, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Zinyang held what he described as "fruitful" talks with his Greek counterpart Andreas George Papandreou here this evening.

Premier Zhao, in a brief interview with the press right after two hours of talks, said that the discussions were focused on new developments in international relations over the past three months. The two sides also exchanged views on how to further promote bilateral relations, economic and trade relations in particular, Zhao told reporters.

"I am very much delighted that we share identical or similar views on the issues we covered during the talks," he said. "Last April, Prime Minister Papandreou's China visit greatly enhanced the friendly and cooperative relations between China and Creece," he pointed out. "The fruitful talks between us augured the success of the visit I was to pay to Greece," he added.

Asked about the development of economic and trade relations between China and Greece since the Greek prime minister's visit to China last April, Zhao said that first of all China and Greece have had a better understanding of the prospects of expanding their economic and trade ties. During the Greek prime minister's China visit, many Greek businessmen touring with him had beneficial contacts with various Chinese departments, he said. Both sides have been making arrangements for a number of projects, among which some are of great significance. "I hope they will be carried out soon," he added.

When asked how he viewed the Cyprus question and the prospect of its settlement, the Chinese premier replied: "We hope that both the Greek and Turkish Cypriots will reach agreement to bring the issue to a just and reasonable settlement through friendly negotiations based on relevant United Nations resolutions."

A Chinese Foreign Ministry official told the press after the talks that the two premiers today mainly discussed the recent international situation and ways of furthering the friendly and cooperative relations between their countries. They shared "identical or similar" views on many issues they discussed, the official said.

The Chinese premier in the talks expressed his hope that the United States and the Soviet Union would enter into serious negotiations on disarmament.

He was quoted as telling the Greek prime minister that the Chinese Government is concerned over the grave situation in the Mediterranean region. The position taken by the Chinese Government, he said, is that the problems of the region should be settled by its littoral countries through peaceful means and through consultations free from outside interference. The Mediterranean Sea should not be an arena of fierce rivalry between the superpowers or a place for them to show off force; it should become, instead, a sea of peace and friendship, he said.

Zhao expressed appreciation of the Greek Government's policy of developing friendly and cooperative ties with other littoral countries of the Mediterranean and striving to ease tensions.

Prime Minister Papandreou said he was very happy that the Chinese premier had come to Greece not long after his own visit to Beijing. He noted that he was deeply impressed during that visit by the resolve of the Chinese leadership and people to accomplish their goal of modernization and to carry out reforms.

Papandreou briefed the Chinese premier on the positions taken by his government on a number of world issues, particularly the situation that appeared in the Mediterranean region not long ago.

In today's talks, the two leaders were satisfied with the progress already made in the development of Sino-Greek friendly and cooperative relations. Both expressed the strong desire to further expand bilateral cooperation in the economic, trade, scientific and technological, cultural and other fields. They promised each other to take necessary measures for this purpose.

They were described as being convinced that Zhao's visit and his fruitful talks with the Greek prime minister would give new impetus to the growth of friendship and cooperation between the two countries.

Call for Closer Relations

OW110028 Beijing XINHUA in English 2354 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Chinese and Greek prime ministers today wished for the furtherance of relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries. Speaking at a welcome banquet given by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou here this evening in honor of visiting Premier Zhao Ziyang, the two prime ministers expressed satisfaction with the smooth-going relations between the two countries.

Zhao Ziyang arrived here this morning on the third leg of his Balkan-Mediterranean tour, which had already taken him to Romania and Yugoslavia. He was guest of honor at the banquet shortly after his talks with the Greek prime minister.

Papandreou described the relations between Greece and China as "very satisfactory," adding that they have been developing steadily.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said that there has been a good beginning of cooperative effort in the economic, trade and technical fields between the two countries, which is expected to extend to other areas.

"Though the objective conditions of the two countries are different," Prime Minister Papandreou said, "we have apparently shared similar experiences and common objectives in realizing our ideals. Just as China is persisting in its 'four modernizations' policy, so is Greece striving to consolidate its new domestic system." "The long history and ancient civilization, profound philosophical thinking and the thought about major problems concerning the progress of mankind have provided a reliable basis for maintaining and developing exchanges between the people of the two countries," he said.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said that the visit to China by Prime Minister Papandreou in April this year had given a great shove-ahead to Sino-Greek relations. "China and Greece have no conflicts of fundamental interests or outstanding problems to settle," Premier Zhao said. "As both countries are facing the common objective of developing economy and improving the people's living standards, it is both necessary and possible for them to strengthen and develop relations of cooperation in all areas. He expressed the hope that his current visit would help push the existing friendly and cooperative relations between the two countries to a higher level.

[Text] Istanbul, July 10 (XINHUA) -- XINHUA NEWS AGENCY of China today officially started providing its news through special line to "GUNES" (THE SUN), one of the leading newspapers in Turkey. This is the first time that XINHUA NEWS AGENCY provides its news service to the Turkish press.

Director general of XINHUA NEWS AGENCY Mu Qing and director general of GUNES Fehmi Nuhoglu exchanged their congratulatory messages on this occasion today. Mu Qing said in his message that "through exchanges and contacts, the mass media of China and Turkey have enhanced the friendship of the people of both countries." He hoped that the cooperation between XINHUA and GUNES will expand and grow stronger.

In his message, Nuhoglu also expressed the belief that "the beginning of our cooperation will increase the mutual friendship between Turkish and Chinese societies." The daily newspaper "GUNES" started its publication on May 19, 1982. It is the third biggest daily in Turkey with a circulation of 300,000 per day. It is published in five main cities of Turkey and has more than 15 offices in major cities of Turkey and many correspondents are working for it in Turkey and in some foreign countries.

BO YIBO SPEECH ON PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK100911 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 26, 30 Jun 86 pp 9-11

["Excerpts" of speech given by Comrade Bo Yibo at a work briefing meeting of groups of party rectification inspectors: "Do a Good Job in Party Rectification in One Vigorous Effort" -- subheads added by LIAOWANG editor -- date and place not given]

[Text] The work of party rectification has been going on for over 2 years, since November 1983. Generally speaking, this party rectification has been successful. Notable progress has been made in reaching a common understanding, rectifying party work style, strengthening discipline, and purifying the party organization. We should fully affirm the success and progress that we have already achieved in a truth-seeking manner. Today, I want to give three opinions on how to continue to do a good job in party rectification.

First, we should continue our investigation and study and deepen our analysis of the current situation in our party. If we fail to have a deep knowledge of the situation related to the thoughts, work style, discipline, and organization in our party, it will be impossible for us to do our party rectification work well. This has already been repeatedly proved by the practice in our party rectification. In order to know the current situation, we should carry out investigation and study, and should particularly investigate typical cases in depth in order to know the actual situation. This has also been repeatedly proved by our practice in party rectification. For example, in order to lead the work of party rectification in our rural areas, we should go deep into several townships and villages to carry out investigation and study. Only through deep investigation and study can we know accurately what changes the economic structural reform in the past few years has brought about in the political and economic situation in each of these townships and villages and what the situation there is related to the organizations of our party and the thoughts and work style of our cadres and party members. Only when we really know the real situation well can we satisfactorily arrange and guide the work of party rectification. It is very difficult to really know the actual situation. Since the fifties we have mainly been engaged in carrying out movements, and the repeated movements have enabled some people to learn a set of methods to deal with "movements." When a movement is launched, they maintain their composure and lie concealed by every means, and think that the movement can only last for a time and everything will be all right when it goes past. In carrying out party rectification this time, we have repeatedly stressed that we will carry out no movement, but some people have still adopted the old "method," which they used to deal with movements, to deal with this party rectification. Are there not some people who say that "you have your measures and I have my countermeasures"? They have methods to deal with any method that we can think out. This makes our investigation and study regarding the true situation very difficult and complicated. However, we should think out ways to overcome these difficulties and must make our investigation profound and thorough and thus know the true situation. Only by so doing can we establish our work to guide party rectification on a sound and reliable foundation.

It is not an easy task to complete this party rectification in accordance with the requirements of the Central Committee's decision on party rectification.

If the party organization in an area or a unit does not know the ideological and organizational situation in its area or unit, it will be very hard for it to draw up feasible party rectification measures; therefore, it is very possible for the party rectification to be carried out perfunctorily. Take purifying the party organization for example. In this party rectification, we should find the "persons of three categories" who have concealed themselves in our party. This requires us to do a lot of deep and painstaking work of investigation and study. Areas or units that have done this conscientiously have scored relatively satisfactorily achievements without exception, but there are also some areas and units that have failed to do so and have thus indeed let a few bad people escape being weeded out. Quite a lot of party members and of the masses resent this. We cannot help but say that this provides us with a lesson to learn. On the other hand, in this party rectification, we should recruit a large number of good people into our party. In order to do this, we should also conscientiously and carefully know their background. Now, we have discovered that on the surface, some people very earnestly want to join the party, but on deeper investigation, we find that their motives for joining the party are not genuine. In their heart of hearts, they think that if they do not join the party, they will not be able to find "good jobs" or get "official posts." I do not mean that all people who apply for party membership are thinking in this way, but at least some of them do think so. They never think that they have to fight selflessly for communism. We should not allow these people to become party members. Otherwise, we will not be able to guarantee the ideological and political quality of our party ranks and the advanced nature of our party organization. In addition, "networks of relationships" have run rampant in the inner-party life in quite a lot of areas and units. There, people pay attention only to relationships, but not to principles. In handling any matter, there are relationships to take care of, such as the relationships between leaders and subordinates, relationships owing to children's marriages, and relationships between friends who have shared weal and woe. Anyway, there are diverse "networks of relationships," on which some people live. What do I fear if you inform against me. I have relationships with "people in the court." In the old society, there was a saying that "it is easy to do one's official work if one has relationships with "people in the court." This saying that has been passed down from feudal society has been regarded as a maxim by a small number of our party members. This is extremely wrong. Conversely, does this saying not mean that "it is difficult to do one's official work if one has no relationship with people in the court?" As a matter of fact, all our party committees at various levels and party members have some "relationships" with "people in the court." They all have the boundless concern and support of the CPC Central Committee and provincial or municipal committees. On the other hand, those who believe in the saying that "it is easy to do one's official work if one has relationships with people in the court," are precisely opposed by our party Central Committee and provincial and municipal committees. What we are doing now in rectifying our party work style and handling major and serious cases of various kinds is precisely aimed at doing actual work to oppose that corrupt practice.

We should not only know the significance and reason why, in our party rectification, we must satisfactorily carry out investigation and study, but should also learn and be particular about the methods of investigation and study under the new historical conditions. [paragraph continues]

Comrade Yaobang often advocates the practice of leaders carrying out more typical investigation at the lower levels, making more tours there, and staying there for some time in order to really know the situation before they leave. This requires our cadres at various levels, in particular leading cadres, to have real ability. In the fifties, particularly after the Great Leap Forward, I was fond of going down to lower levels to become aware of the situation there. From this I got the impression that some cadres at lower levels paid much attention to observing the trend of your actions and tried to figure out what you wanted to know. They had two completely different sets of materials in their pockets and would give you the set you the set you wanted. Generally, they talked about some achievements and shortcomings to make you believe that what they said was true, but often they covered up some major issues and even serious mistakes. Does this practice still exist? I think this practice has not been eliminated. In the course of our party rectification, we discovered that at lower levels, there were still some cadres who adopted this method of providing surface or false information to counter the investigation and study of the people from the upper levels. I have carefully read Comrade Mao Zedong's "Rural Surveys" and found that he was fond of finding those who were experienced and knew the world and getting information from them, and he knew how to talk with them. Finally he summed up the information he got from them and drew conclusions from it. Under the current situation of opening up, enlivening, and reform, countless new issues and problems will emerge. This requires we cadres at various levels to carry out deep and painstaking investigation and research. Quite a few methods of investigation and study that Comrade Mao Zedong adopted are still applicable today, but we should find and accumulate effective new methods of investigation and study in the course of our new practice. This depends on the exploration of all of you and cannot be invented by a small number of people.

Second, we should pay attention to studying Marxist theory on the development of the party in power. Our party has been in power for over 30 years. It has gained quite a lot of both positive and negative experience in the past 30 and more years on both leadership over the socialist construction and its own development. In the light of the actual practice of our party rectification, we should pay attention to carrying out research into the theoretical issues concerning the development of parties in power. Compared with a party not in power, a part in power has different tasks and methods in developing itself as it shoulders different historical tasks. Even the qualities of our party members are very different, let alone other differences. At the beginning of the great revolution (1924-1927), the CPC had only some 10,000 members. In the heyday of the great revolution, that is, when the northern expeditionary army arrived in Wuhan, it had only 58,000 members. When the great revolution failed, its numbers shrank to only 10,000. In the initial period of the war of resistance against Japan, the CPC had only 40,000 members, and during the Yanan rectification of 1942, it had only several hundred thousand members. However, we won victory in the war of resistance against Japan and the liberation war victory in the war of resistance against Japan and the liberation war and established the new China. At that time, the number of members was small, but our party was a crack contingent. All the members, those who came from the Soviet areas or those who came from the areas under KMT rule, wanted to carry out struggle against Japan and for the revolution and the communist ideal under very difficult conditions. With the exception of a handful of bad elements and special agents who sneaked their way into the party, most of them were core members who survived the "sieve" of revolutionary wars. [paragraph continues]

Now the conditions have changed and the CPC has changed its status and become the party in power. Party members have power in their hands. It is precisely with the aim of obtaining this power to acquire personal gain that some people have sneaked their way into the party. Changes have also taken place in the ideas of some old party members, so that they have also taken advantage of their positions to seek personal gain. Now, there are over 42 million party members. Generally speaking, the principal aspect of the contingent of party members is good, but the quality of some party members is not good. This party rectification is a relatively deep self-transformation that our party is carrying out, more than 30 years since it came to power, in order to eliminate the negative impact of the "Great Cultural Revolution" on inner-party life and in order to adapt itself to the new situation and new tasks of the four modernizations. It is also a major step to strengthen the organization of the party in power itself. Therefore, we should conscientiously study and carry out research into some basic theses on the development of the party in power. Only when we are armed with theory can we heighten our awarweness in satisfactorily consolidating our party organization. In the past we failed to lay adequate emphasis on this. Lenin paid relatively great attention to this. Soon after the October Revolution, in 1919, he put forth the idea that we had to "remove those in our party who only pursue 'enjoying' the advantages of members of a party in power but are unwilling to work selflessly for communism."

Of course, we do not mean that at present we should also carry out this work to remove such people, but that we should consciously and satisfactorily grasp the work of consolidating the organization of the party in power itself in order to truly turn our party members into members with firm party spirit, and in order to enable our party to have a good party work style and thus become able to better shoulder the responsibility for building our country into a prosperous modern socialist country with a high degree of democracy and civilization. How should we link the practice of our party rectification with the study of the theory on the consolidation of the party in power? I think that we should not only read the works of Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin, but should also conscientiously study the important documents that have been issued by the CPC Central Committee, in particular the important speeches that have been made by the members of its Standing Committee. During the study, we should discuss and study the major practical issues concerning the consolidation of our party organization that have emerged in the process of our party rectification and thus link and unify theory with practice. Only by so doing can we study well.

Third, we should adhere to party spirit and act in accordance with the party's principles. Party rectification is aimed at solving problems in our party and we must do so in order to solve problems. We stressed this at the very beginning of our party rectification, and some areas and units have done that relatively well. But there are a small number of areas and units who even now have failed to satisfactorily solve this problem. In other words, they dare not adhere to party spirit or act in accordance with the party's principles and they never dare to handle difficult problems. Therefore, I think it is necessary to stress this issue again. What are the party's principles? As everybody knows the answer to this question, there is no need for me to talk about this here. What we call "difficult problems" is nothing but what is not easy to handle, and even what is risky to handle.

For example, the "network of relationships," factionalism, those who have power and who have violated law and discipline, and major and important cases. However, it is very wrong if one is apprehensive of handling them and lets them drift because these problems are difficult to handle and because they will cause those who handle them to suffer personal losses. For this does not conform to the requirements of party spirit and the fighting virtue of communists. Stalin said that a communist was made of special stuff. This was well said. By "special stuff" he meant that under various difficult conditions and in various complex environments, Communists Party members should be bold in upholding principles and struggling for the truth. As far as we are conerned, we should be bold in tackling various "networks of relationships," factionalism, and those violators of law and discipline who hold varying degrees of power in their hands. If we dare not to do so, we shall not be able to rectify the party and party work style. The present conditions are that it is relatively difficult to investigate and handle major cases. It is absolutely necessary to change this state of affairs. If we fail to do so, where is the sense of principle of the party? How can we safeguard party discipline? In the final analysis, we should believe that being bold in handling difficult problems and fighting against various kinds of negative and corrupt practices is aimed at safeguarding the party's and the people's interests and will surely got support from the party and the people.

BAN YUE TAN ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK100749 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 12, 25 Jun 86 pp 6, 7

[Article by Xin Xing: "How To Do a Good Job in Rural Grass-roots Party Rectification"]

[Text] The Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification recently held separate forums of secretaries of provincial, regional, and municipal CPC committee to study and discuss how to strengthen leadership to further do a good job in party rectification, to consolidate and develop the results of party rectification, and other questions.

Through summing up the views of the participants, it was thought that in order to properly carry out party rectification at the grass-roots level in rural areas, the following seven major points should be grasped:

First, it is necessary to further make clear the guiding ideology of rural party rectification. I carrying out the upcoming party rectification at the village level on a large scale throughout the country, it is necessary to stress the principle of promoting and guaranteeing development in reform and the economy. Party rectification work in all aspects must be conducive to rural reforms and to arousing the enthusiasm of party members and peasants in rural areas. Whenever a serious difficulty appears or a policy decision is to be made, it is imperative to adopt a very prudent attitude.

Second, it is necessary to correctly handle the relation between "solving problems" and "not causing confusion." "Solving problems" is the prerequisite. With this prerequisite, we should do our work in more reliable manner and strive not to make mistakes. We should never depart from this prerequisite of "solving problems" and merely stress "not causing confusion." [paragraph continues]

At present, as there exists the erroneous idea of setting party rectification against reforms and economic work, party committees at various levels and in various localities must pay attention to properly handling the relations between party rectification and reforms and economic work and truly and consciously doing a good job in party rectification and guarding against perfunctorily carrying out party rectification.

Third, it is necessary to put the focus on rural party rectification on resolving conspicuous problems among party-member cadres at district, township, and village levels. "Conspicuous problems" mainly mean serious abuse of power to seek personal gain and serious violation of law and discipline. In resolving these problems, we must adhere to the principles of seeking truth from facts and must not "ask everyone to make self-criticism to pass the test." However, we must punish according to party discipline and state law party-member cadres who have seriously abused power to seek personal gain, seriously violated the law and discipline, ridden roughshod over villagers, and aroused great popular indignation after what party members who do not really meet the criteria of a party member, do not play a positive role, and refuse to mend their ways despite repeated admonition.

Fourth, it is necessary to make clear how to carry out party rectification in rural areas. The first step is to conduct education on party character. Through education on the fundamental purposes of the party, the criteria of a party member, ideals and discipline, and the situation and policies, we should help party members foster the concepts of "setting up the party to serve the public," "taking office to serve the people," and "state law will not tolerate the abuse of public power to retaliate against personal enemies." The second step is to properly hold democratic life meetings, make criticism and self-criticism, fully expose contradictions and problems, and seriously resolve them in the order of importance and urgency, dealing with different problems in different ways.

Fifth, it is necessary to make good preparations for party rectification at the village level. These preparations are roughly as follows: 1) Readjust the leading bodies of party branches that have many problems and cannot exercise leadership in party rectificaton. 2) Organize people to straighten out economic problems if there are any. 3) Properly organize and train the ranks of cadres for carrying out party rectification. 4) Work out feasible plans.

Sixth, it is necessary to strengthen guidance work according to different categories of problems and stress actual results. Since the situation varies from one place to another, we should adopt different ways for the rectification accordingly and should not mechanically copy from one unified pattern or indiscriminately act in only one way.

Seventh, it is necessary to properly build the leading bodies of party organizations at the township and village levels. This is an important, or most important, task in consolidating organizations in the course of rural party rectification.

SHAANXI RIBAO ON MENTAL PREPARATION FOR REFORM

HK091101 Xian SHAANXI RIBAO in Chinese 21 Jun 86 p 2

[Article by Mao Shengxian: "Make Full Mental Preparations for Pushing the New Reform" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] At present, the key task of the entire party and the whole people is to get further mobilized, unite as one, struggle hard, and explore the way forward to fulfill various tasks put forward by the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The nucleus and soul of the Seventh 5-Year Plan are reform, including economic reform, political reform, and cultural reform, and economic structural reform in particular. We should do all we can to lay the foundation, over a period of 5 years or more, for a Chinese-style socialist economic structure which is full of vigor and vitality. This is a great task of historical significance.

In the face of this situation, our main task on the ideological front is: We should educate and guide our cadres, party members, and the masses to make full ideological preparations for pushing the new reform. We started our reform when people in society had not yet made full mental preparations for it. Reform which has been completed has touched the economic status of various strata. The next step in the deepening and in the progress of reform will touch traditional structures in all spheres. Such an extensive and in-depth revolution is bound to unprecedentedly touch, or even shake, people's ideological concepts, mental outlook, way of life, and method of thinking. Therefore, educating and guiding our cadres, party members, and the masses, through a large amount of thoroughgoing and painstaking work, to make full mental, theoretical, and psychological preparations for the new reform is an indispensable social and ideological condition which will ensure smooth progress in the reform.

Comrade Hu Yaobang has recently stressed again and again that we should pay attention to the two great historical lessons in our country: 1) the practice of empty talk, which harmed the state during the period of Wei and Jin; 2) excessive concentration of power in the central authorities. We should know how they greatly hampered the development of China. Conscientiously making mental preparations for reform means dealing with concrete matters relating to work on the ideological front. This is a very important aspect of our work. As long as we do it well, we will be able to implement a guiding principle aimed at serving the general line, general tasks, reforms, and economic construction. This will enhance the ideological content and fighting capability of our ideological and political work in light of specific conditions.

In what respects should we carry out our work to make full mental preparations aimed at pushing the new reform? In my opinion, we should grasp the work in the following aspects:

Through our ideological and political work, we should guide our cadres and the masses so that they fully understand the social and economic conditions and their influence on people's ideology when the reform was started. We should continue to profoundly eliminate "leftist" stuff, destroy the old, and emancipate our minds.

Analyzing social and economic conditions when reform was just starting in our country, we discover their thinking brought about by the following social phenomena was a restricting factor in our reform, which should not be neglected: 1) Feudal society lasting several thousand years, and extremely backward commodity economy brought about completely imbalanced social and economic development and backward ideological concepts. Although the situation has been greatly improved in recent years, such social phenomena are still an ideological shackle on people's minds. Do we not find that a number of people up to the present regard commodity exchange as disgraceful and shameful conduct? Do they not say that "rich people are always cruel," and "merchants are always cunning"? How can such people carry out modern and socialized mass production? It is known to all that the practice of seeking private gains by abusing power has severely obstructed reform. This phenomenon is not an inevitable outcome of capitalism, but is deeply rooted in the soil of feudal ideology. 2) A traditional system established over the past 30 years since the founding of the People's Republic, and some misleading propaganda on socialist concepts over a long period in the past have created obstacles to reform in terms of habits and feelings. Do we not hear some people say that we use capitalist methods to solve socialist problems? They say that the previous economic patterns were socialist. They have doubts whether the present methods are "socialist" or "capitalist?" Under such circumstances, it is difficult for them to go ahead boldly with reform. 3) During the 10 years of the Cultural Revolution, the "ultraleftist" line confused people's minds. Therefore, when we are reforming the old system some "leftist" ideological concepts still bind some of our comrades hand and foot like an invisible rope. They do not dare to make bold explorations. This has created great difficulties for reforms.

It is precisely for these reasons that when we are facing the new, more profound, and more extensive tasks of reform, we should clearly realize that we are also facing the tasks of continuing to profoundly eliminate the "leftist" stuff, destroy the old, and emancipate the mind. It is because some ideological factors which hamper reforms still exist, although some others have been abolished. With the in-depth development of reforms, new conservative ideas and other obstructing factors will appear. If we neglect, or relax our efforts in, the work, our ideological momentum in the new tasks of reform will be lost.

In this situation, what main problems should be solved in the course of continuing to profoundly eradicate "leftist" stuff, destroy the old, and emancipate the mind? These problems should be studied in the light of practical conditions in various localities and units. In view of the general situation as a whole, we should do the following: 1) Under the new historical conditions, and with the prerequisite of upholding basic Marxist principles, we should have the courage to break through some obsolete conclusions, or some conclusions which are not completely correct. This is a requirement of the drive to emancipate the mind. Only by so doing can we uphold and develop Marxism, and promote vigorous development of the socialist cause. 2) We should speed up the progress of eliminating the old system and forming the new one. We should continuously eliminate the old ideology, the influence of old habits, and the "leftist" ideology in particular. We should also give up the concept of small production, and traditional old habits which are not in accord with the development of the productive forces. [paragraph continues]

We should foster a new concept, which conforms to the socialist modernization program, and a new mental outlook. Our emphasis must be placed on continuing to abolish those old ideas which regard traditional patterns as socialist, and commodity economy as capitalist. 3) In the process of reform and opening up to the outside world, we should seriously prevent and overcome the corrosion of the decadent capitalist ideology. The stress must be laid on preventing and overcoming the ideas which regard "money as everything," and "money as the be-all and end-all," blindly adore the sham bourgeois democracy and freedom, and seek certain corrupt ways of life in the capitalist world. 4) We should fully recognize the negative role of the remnants of the feudal ideology in the modernization program, and continue to profoundly eradicate its pernicious influence in our political life.

A central leading comrade has recently stressed again and again that we should create a magnanimous and relaxed environment, not only on the economic front, but also on the ideological and cultural fronts, and create an atmosphere characterized by unity, harmony, mutual trust, and mutual understanding, so that people will dare to think, speak out, do things, and make exploration in the course of the great reform which we are facing. We should continue to profoundly eradicate the "leftist" ideology, destroy the old, and emancipate the mind. In so doing, we will be able to further guide our cadres and the masses to widen their field of vision, inspire their spirit, and be bold in blazing the new trails. All this will be an ideological guarantee and foundation for promoting the new reform.

WE SHOULD ORGANIZE AND GUIDE OUR CADRES AND THE MASSES TO CONSCIENTIOUSLY SUM UP THEIR EXPERIENCE IN THE PRACTICE OF REFORM OVER THE PAST FEW YEARS, FURTHER UNDERSTAND THE INNER LAW GOVERNING THE DEVELOPMENT OF REFORM, AND RECOGNIZE THE DIFFICULTIES AND COMPLEXITY IN REFORM.

Reform follows its own objective law governing its development. Various ideological problems occurring in reform in recent years are mostly connected with our ignorance of the law governing the development of reform. Due to the fact that the exploration in reform and its gradual progress co-exist with the progress of replacing the old system with the new one, various contradictions, frictions, or even certain setbacks and mistakes will inevitably occur. What problems will arise in the practice of reforms? For what problems should we make full mental preparations so that we will be able to enhance our mental capability to deal with them?
